We have a farmer now at the head of the Agricultural Department, an Iowa farmer. He is not a kid-glove farmer like my friend from Brooklyn [Mr. FISCHER], who was smiling at my assertion a few minutes ago. We call him "Tama Jim," because he was from Tama County. He has turned up the soil in Iowa; he has husked the corn with his own hands until they were bleeding and cracked from that work. He has been speaker of the Iowa legislature and a member of this House. He has also been a professor in the Ames Agricultural College. So long as Tama Jim recommends these distributions I will stand by him, all these dirty documents to the contrary notwithstanding. [Applause.] Now, this is not a party speech; but from reading these dirty documents and from receiving letters written from the standpoint and from the belief that we are the fellows interested in this business, I wanted to make these few sincere observations on the two propositions. I return to the honorable chairman of the committee the balance of my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I suppose in the preparation for the discussion of this Agricultural bill the general state of the country may be investigated somewhat, in the light of recent events. I find upon looking over the Post this morning a number of things rather interesting and unique in their way. For instance, here is a gem in politics:

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 12, 1898.

Hon. WILLIAM MCKINLEY,
President, Washington, D. C.:

God reigns, and the Republican party still lives.

M. A. HANNA.

[Laughter.]

Now, as to the first branch of the proposition, there is no room for discussion. God does reign, and therefore it is most wonderful as to what follows—that the Republican party still lives. [Laughter.]

Still lives! What evidence was there about Columbus, Ohio, that the Republican party "still lives;" that the life of the Republican party was in jeopardy; that the peril had been passed, and that the party "still lives?" Why, the great event about Columbus recently has been the question of the election of United States Senator; and this declaration comes after the selection of Mr. HANNA, and, I presume, in consequence of it. From Mr. HANNA'S point of view, there is an extended lease of life to the Republican party.

Does the Republican party "still live," or does it merely languish? Is the true meaning that it is not yet entirely dead? What is it living for? Who recently has called upon the Republican party to live or to expend efforts toward living? The Republican party was put in power, as the result of the last general election, upon a platform every principle of which it has either disavowed and repudiated or is trying to dodge and evade. What is the necessity for its living? What has it yet to do? It has elected Mr. HANNA to the United States Senate. It has put in that great body for a period of something like eight years, I believe, one of the truest and best representatives of modern Republicanism that we can find. Now, why might not the party as well quietly give up the ghost and allow Mr. HANNA, as the embodiment, as the soul, as the essence of the Republican party, to live in that body into which he has recently crawled? Why would not that do?

There is more of this business. The fact is, the morning edition of the newspapers is rich in richness of this kind. Now, here is something—a response to M. A. HANNA from William McKinley:

The result now plainly forecasted is one in which our best citizenship, irrespective of party, will profoundly rejoice. I congratulate you heartily, not only upon a victory beneficial to the country, but upon your leadership in a contest worthily won under the most trying circumstances.

William McKinley to M. A. HANNA!

There is a good deal in that; there has been a good deal put into it.

The result now plainly forecasted is one in which our best citizenship, irrespective of party, will profoundly rejoice.

Was the President deliberating upon his utterance? Is this a calm judgment of the situation in the country? Is this the expression of a belief after thought and investigation? Or is it merely exuberant bubbling over the return in triumph to the United States Senate of the man by whose management and by whose means the sender of the telegram is at present an occupant of the White House?

Why should our best citizens, "irrespective of party" or within any party, rejoice in the result of the proceedings and indorse the methods at Columbus? It may be that certain elements of citizenship inside one party and outside of others, and some independent of all parties and below all, rejoice in this result. But is there general acclaim all over the land? Is there general congratulation and jubilation, irrespective of parties and beyond parties over—what? Over the return of MARCUS A. HANNA to the United States Senate—over the putting into the United States Senate for the long period of between seven and eight years of the man who, by means before unused and untried and unthought of in large respect in American politics, secured a triumph of his party in the last election?

Has the millennium come—not the millennium foretold in Holy Writ, but the millennium which would come from reversed conditions and prevail in a perverse region? Has that millennium come when rejoicing over such an event as the election of HANNA is general, irrespective of party, everywhere?

"I heartily congratulate you," says Mr. McKinley, "upon a victory beneficial to the country." Where is the benefit to the country, except the benefit of the example not to be followed, but to be avoided? Does the President mean that?

Not only beneficial to the country, but upon your leadership in a contest worthily won under the most trying circumstances.

This, from the President of the United States! This, with the smoke of battle still hovering over Columbus, Ohio! This, before the street-cleaning department has shoveled up the litter, before the purification elements have had their play! This, before the storm has swept away the stench from about Columbus, Ohio; But there is more; there is a great deal of this. Here is another:

Bells are ringing, bands playing, and the flag is where it was waved at the beginning of the fight. I congratulate the American people.

J. B. HAWLEY.

There it is again! "Bells are ringing, bands playing, and the flag is where it was waved at the beginning of the fight." What flag? Is there an effort here to refer to the glorious flag of the American people—the "Stars and Stripes," loved from end to end of this country—the glorious flag under which heroes have marched and fought and died? Is there talk about that flag waving where it was waved at the beginning of this Senatorial fight, the stench of which has infected whole counties in Ohio? That can not be the flag. What is it? Is it the political pirate flag? Is it the black flag, so far as the producing industries of this country are concerned, so far as the men who revere the old flag and make the wealth and honor and glory of this country are involved? Is it the pirate flag unfurled against them? Is it the flag that those follow in battle who are trying to undo them?

Here is another:

Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace and good will among Republicans.

W. E. MASON.

"Peace and good will among Republicans!" This has reference, probably, to the first telegram, that "the Republican party still lives." "Peace and good will among Republicans!" Why, sir, the Republican party deserves, it has well earned, the peace that will prevail after the Republican party ceases to live, ceases to languish, and has passed off the stage. In that sense, there will be a tolerably hearty acclaim to the partly Scriptural and partly Republican message of the Hon. W. E. MASON.

And here is another:

You have never seen so much rejoicing as there is in Washington over your election. I am overjoyed.

PERRY S. HEATH.

Joy pervades the Department over which Mr. Heath presides up there in the Post-Office establishment. Overjoyed at the election! Joy abundant in Washington; overwhelming joy. [Laughter.] Joy to be found everywhere; every face illumined with joy over the election of Hon. MARK A. HANNA.

And I find down here this statement:

Congressman GROSVENOR and others had charge of the Hanna quarters, and saw that nothing was neglected.

[Laughter and applause.]

The Hanna quarters—not dollars, not hundreds of dollars or thousands of dollars, but "quarters"—the "Hanna quarters;" and saw that "nothing was neglected." [Laughter.] Who wanted for a quarter? Who wanted for many quarters? "Nothing was neglected."

The eloquent gentleman from Ohio has not yet returned, I am sorry to note. Whether he will bring back with him any of the quarters, any of the "Hanna quarters" he so carefully guarded, of course I do not know. I can not say anything about that. But he had control of the quarters—the Hanna quarters—and saw that "nothing was neglected." [Laughter.]

Now, we have all heard a great deal about mules; about "buying mules," and many other things. But here are the "Hanna quarters." [Laughter.] Who knows how powerful the "Hanna quarters" were? Who knows how the wavering manikins in the ranks of the Hanna contingent may have been, or how much they were affected by the "Hanna quarters?" [Laughter.] Ah, Mr. Chairman, mighty are the "Hanna quarters." Mighty, indeed, are the Hanna quarters when any interests, from the Hanna standpoint, are involved.

If you will look at this in its proper light, if we estimate Republicanism as it is, by its likeness to Hannaism—and it is the embodiment of Hannaism—the whole question becomes clear and convincing. What has the Republican party done with the great financial question? Has the party dared to deal with it? Not at all. It is afraid. It takes both sides of the question. Here, east of the Alleghanies, in the great commercial cities, in the money centers, its spirit takes the form of what it calls "honest" money, the "single gold standard."

But you hear the jingling of the "silver dollars" on the other side of these mountains, in the rural districts away out in the great Mississippi Valley, where the Republican party, by proclamation of its apostles, is wedded to bimetallism. But it does not wish to risk anything. It does not wish to be rash. It is very conservative, and therefore in its declaration to the people it is marching majestically to "international bimetallism." That party is now in power because its campaign was conducted and won under pretenses—a campaign of evasion and delusion, and of the Hanna "quarters." [Laughter.] It is not equal to the responsibilities assumed in that campaign.

It is dodging all of the great public questions now before the American people. It is evading every one of them by subterfuges and by delay. It will not allow to come before this House, for the consideration of the Representatives of the American people, a resolution which has been pending upon our Calendar here for months, and the consideration of which humanity and common decency demand—the resolution according belligerent rights to the suffering Cubans. It quibbles about the money question. It pretends to be economical, and yet it is wasteful and extravagant. Here and there it drives little plugs into the worm holes in the barrel of the people's funds in the public Treasury, while the bung is entirely out, and the treasure is poured forth in waste and wrong.

Mr. GREENE. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him just an instant?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Certainly.

Mr. GREENE. With reference to the article the gentleman has been reading, does not that article go on to say that three Republicans were guarded in a room adjacent to the Hanna quarters all night just prior to that election? [Laughter.]

Mr. DE ARMOND. Yes——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I would like just a half minute longer to answer my friend from Nebraska.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes, for a moment.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Yes, Mr. Chairman, the statement in regard to the proceedings at Columbus, Ohio, is that the men by whose shifting and by whose conversion these things were possible were held and guarded in the fateful hours preceding this momentous election in the rooms adjoining where the "Hanna quarters" were. [Laughter.] And there is the election, and there is the ground for the proclamation, the Hanna assurance to the Lord that He still reigns——

Mr. GREENE. They were mistaken in the fellow who was reigning.

Mr. DE ARMOND (continuing). And that the Republican party still lives! Out of those things and about those things, concerning which men as they pass by hold their noses, come these congratulations to the effect that all the people, irrespective of party, are rejoicing in the Republican deification of their patron saint and exemplar, MARCUS A. HANNA. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MAGUIRE. I think the gentleman has misconceived the meaning of the first part of that first telegram. It means that notwithstanding the Lord still reigns, these things have happened.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield three minutes to my colleague [Mr. MAHANY].

Mr. MAHANY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] who has just taken his seat has asked many questions, and I presume he asked them with the purpose of eliciting an answer.

In 1892 the American people witnessed the spectacle of the Democratic party meeting in its national convention and, despite the unanimous protests of New York State, nominating for the Presidency of the United States a man repudiated by his own Commonwealth. It was the bosses of the Democratic party who perpetrated this outrage upon the rank and file of the Democratic masses. During the succeeding four years, under the benign influence of bond issues and through governmental manipulation abhorrent to the conscience of the people, these bosses beheld fortune smile on all their financial ventures.

Mr. OGDEN. Was Mr. Cleveland——

Mr. MAHANY. Pardon me; I have only three minutes. This lesson was not lost upon the bosses of the Republican party. In 1896 these men, who had debauched the legislation of sovereign States and turned the legislatures thereof into the cash-registers of their own schemes, met together in a bosses' pool to syndicate the Presidency of the United States. They thought their opportunity had come, because, owing to the fact that the conscience of the Democratic party had risen up and hurled into a black retirement Cleveland and Clevelandism, it was universally believed that through such Democratic dissensions the Republicans, in all human probability, would be victorious in the election.

So these bosses gathered together to corner the Presidency of the United States, and at a moment when the Republican masses seemed almost in despair of averting this outrage on their party and this disgrace to the Republic, there was one man who rose up, a man whom it is the delight of the Democratic party to denounce as a boss, a man who, by his bulldog courage and his faith in the strength and conscience of the Republican rank and file, gave battle to the bosses, crushed them into the dust of the St. Louis convention, and made triumphant the will of the masses of the party in the nomination of William McKinley for the Presidency of the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.] This man was Marcus A. Hanna. [Applause.] I will state to the profound and distinguished gentleman from Missouri that it is for these reasons that the American people rejoice to-day that a man who dared to defy the bosses of his party in a national convention, nay, more, who trampled them in defeat, can still survive with station and honor and power in American political life. [Applause on the Republican side.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its secretaries, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. R. 81. Joint resolution authorizing the Director of the Geological Survey to prepare a map of Alaska.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. R. 81. Joint resolution authorizing the Director of the Geological Survey to prepare a map of Alaska—to the Committee on Printing.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] has called up the Agricultural appropriation bill. I never have been in favor of political or partisan discussions connected with these money bills, and I shall only say a word at this time, because I feel that it is my privilege if not my duty to do so.

I am not the defender of any individual. MARCUS A. HANNA needs no defense at my hands; but I am glad of one thing: After a Republican State convention in the State of Ohio met and indorsed the candidacy of Mr. HANNA for the Senatorship, and that with the principles underlying it being the issue in the State of Ohio in a great election, well marked and defined, the people having spoken and determined that issue by a decided majority—while I am not a citizen of the State of Ohio, yet I was glad yesterday to learn that the will of a majority of the people of Ohio, expressed at the ballot box, had triumphed.

I am glad, from a political standpoint, and I am glad from the standpoint of decency, and I do not believe there is a man upon that side of the House who will arise and place his hand upon his heart and tell the truth but what was glad that the traitorous forces in the State of Ohio were overthrown and the will of the people carried out. [Applause on the Republican side.] That is all I want to say.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, not desiring to detract from the pleasure experienced at hearing the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] on the text that "the Lord still lives," and predicated upon the sentiment that He moves in a mysterious way sometimes his wonders and wonderful things to perform, I desire at this time to say something upon the subject of seed distribution. I join with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] in anathemas upon the skulker who with unsigned letters and postals seeks to appeal to the judgment of this House and to stir up prejudices in this matter. We can see from the tone of the letters received that "hand organs and hairpins" rush through his brain in all the mazes of metaphorical illusion. These are the gloomy companions of one who seeks self-interest.

I find in my State Democratic paper, the Indianapolis Sentinel, that a gentleman, a member of this House, chairman of a committee, has been by some means influenced on this subject. I desire to state that on or about the 11th day of January Hon. DAVID H. MERCER, chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, sent to that paper a letter. I shall ask the privilege of publishing the whole letter. It is as follows:

The Agricultural bill, which will come before Congress in January, contains an appropriation of $130,000 for seeds, which are to be given away through Senators, Representatives, and the Agricultural Department. The Government has been indulging in this free gift enterprise for a great many years, and the end is not yet. With a desire to obtain the sentiment of the country about this practice I write you and other prominent influences for an opinion as to the wisdom of such a course, and I request that you answer within the next ten days, as I desire the benefit of your criticism before the bill referred to comes before Congress for consideration. If you have no objections, and I think it advisable to do so, I may print your reply in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, with some other data bearing upon this question. Your wishes in this particular will be respected.

For fear this reply of my home State paper to him may not appear in the remarks of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER], I ask the privilege of reading the answer myself:

The Sentinel frankly confesses that it does not understand what the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has to do with the seed question, and that it would much prefer to see Mr. MERCER interesting himself in securing a public building for Indianapolis, which would be greatly appreciated, both by the people of this city and the farmers of the State.

The RECORD has a very large circulation, and it is important to the people that occasionally lucid views should appear in it. We are in favor of seeds for the farmer. We do not know that they are of any use to him, but he ought to get something out of the Government, and we do not see that he is getting anything else. On the contrary, he is taxed for the benefit of everybody else. Every one of the tariff-protected trusts is sucking blood from the farmer. They make him pay more for almost every article he has to buy, and cut the prices of his goods by bringing on retaliatory legislation in other countries.

The money power devours him with its gold standard by reducing the price of his products and increasing the burden of his debts. We sympathize with the farmer, or at least with that portion of the farmers who are not stupid enough to keep voting more trouble for themselves. If they can get any comfort from the distribution of seeds, let them have it.

Mr. Chairman, it will be found upon investigation that the gentleman who wrote to this paper has not a largely agricultural constituency, and it will be found upon investigation that a large branch house of a still larger main house in the East for the sale of seeds has a location and interest in Waterloo, in his district. I say now that all the arguments against seed distribution that have come to members here to have influence with them in the last three or four years have been sent by people interested themselves and against the farmer and his interests. What harm comes from giving a few rare seeds to farmers in order to improve their crops and to encourage them in their agricultural pursuits? If any can be indicated, I will vote against the measure; but, on the contrary, my experience, and in my judgment the experience of every man with a farmer constituency, is that they are of great benefit to the farming classes.

I yield back the balance of my time to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RIDGELY].

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Chairman, I shall try in the five minutes allotted to me to confine my talk to the question under consideration, that of the Agricultural appropriation bill now pending, and inasmuch as the only protest which seems to have been active against this pending legislation, so far as it has come to my knowledge, is against that part of the appropriation which provides for the continued distribution of seeds, I shall address myself to that, and incidentally, if I have the time, to some principles involved in that distribution. As is the case with perhaps everyone upon this floor, certain parties have been exceedingly active in the last thirty days in assuming to voice the people of the United States against this distribution of seeds.

A few of the agricultural papers located near the Atlantic borders have been very active in attempting to voice the farmers' sentiments, and in the name of the farmers, self-assumed by these publishers, have assailed this seed distribution. I apprehend, and I believe I know, coming from a district that numbers, as my friend from Iowa stated, something over 200,000 people, almost three-fourths of the population engaged directly in agriculture, while one-half that are engaged in manufacturing and in mining are also directly producers of garden products—out of all this population I have received not one single protest against this distribution from either dealers or growers. I will read a letter as a sample of the opposition to this measure to benefit our farmers and gardeners:

DEAR SIR: Some of our customers who are small country storekeepers are complaining bitterly of the competition of the Government in distributing free seed. They claim that they feel the loss of trade from this cause, and feel it all the more deeply because it is not from legitimate business competition. They fail to see why their own Government should work against them. These dealers assure us that the free seeds do not really carry the influence with the recipients that many suppose, while they incidentally mention a point you may be interested in yourself, viz, that those who do not get any seeds raise a good deal of talk and often entertain unfriendly feelings because of having been slighted.

These points seem to us well taken, and we therefore pass them along to you with the request that you will vote to strike out the free-seed clause of the agricultural bill this year.

Very truly,

N. W. AYER & SON.

Hon. E. R. RIDGELY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

P. S.—We find there are about 200,000 of these small storekeepers in the country.

In the same spirit as my friend from Iowa, I resent these insinuations that we on this floor vote for this distribution because of its influence over the constituency. Therefore it is unbecoming for any person to insinuate any such thing.

Now, passing from the question of free seed distribution, and again referring to the able and very pertinent remarks of my friend from Iowa, I would say when benefits have once been extended to the masses of the people of this country we can ill afford to take them from them. The people of this country are demanding not only that this Government shall maintain its present attitude and service to them, but there is a growing sentiment in this country that is pressing forward for a postal savings department, and in the near future they will force a postal savings department, whether it be at the rate of 2 per cent or no per cent. The people of this country are demanding that this Government shall afford them some kind of convenient and absolutely safe place of deposit for their little earnings, and it is not a question of the rate of interest, but one of safety to the people, that we will have to meet and provide.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the previous speakers have dwelt on the fact that a great deal of the opposition to the distribution of seeds comes from those gentlemen in the country engaged in the seed business, and they seem to find fault with the fact that large concerns interested in the selling of seeds object to the present method of distribution by the Government. I represent a city constituency. There are about 200,000 people in my district, and I stand upon the floor of this House to protest against the present method of seed distribution as unfair to them.

Large deficiencies exist to-day in the Post-Office Department. The postmaster of the city of Boston, within six or seven days, has received an order from the First Assistant Postmaster-General calling his attention to the fact that the number of deliveries in the residential districts must be reduced from six to four. In that same order he says that the money at the disposal of the Post-Office Department is not sufficient to continue the present service, yet we are about to burden the Post-Office Department with an expense of hundreds of thousands of dollars in distributing these seeds.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. KELLEY. You state that you represent a city constituency. You have letter carriers in your city, and we in the agricultural district have none. Do you not want to divide up the Government benefits between the city and the country?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I voted for the appropriation——

Mr. KELLEY. You have something that we have not got, and do you not think it is fair that we shall have something that you have not got?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Some things are impracticable in this country, and I think the gentleman is wrestling with an impracticable proposition if he supposes that a free delivery can be had in all parts of the country. We would not have free delivery in large cities unless the post-office receipts indicated that it was being carried on at a profit.

Mr. KELLEY. Simply because we have not got a thing is no reason why we should not have it or why it is impracticable.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I call the attention of the House to this fact, because it seems relevant at the present time. It cost the Government $120,000 for this distribution. The letter-carrier law is general in its effect. All States in the country, all cities and towns in the Union, are recognized in the law as to the delivery of letters. I believe that the system is devised on the basis of the number of persons in the different cities and towns, and therefore the law is general in its application.

But I contend that here we have a specific example of paternalism. The Democratic party is opposed to paternalism, and as a member of that party I am opposed to the free distribution of anything by the Government. If rare and valuable seeds only were distributed from the Agricultural Department, a great good for the public might be obtained; but I think, Mr. Chairman, that $120,000 of the Government's money can be spent to better advantage than in the distribution of these seeds.

I think these men interested in the seed business, who have invested thousands upon thousands of dollars in the seed business, have a right to object to the Government seed business, because it is an injury to them in their business. I think it perfectly proper for these men in the different cities of the country to express their opinions by sending protests to members of Congress.

A great deal has been said on the floor of this House during this debate of the great advantage of free seed to the poor farmer. Now, Mr. Chairman, the farmer is not the only person who is suffering the pangs of hardship and poverty in this country. The district which I have the honor to represent on the floor of this House is composed in the main of poor but honest and hard-working people. Many thousands of them are now out of employment and a great many of them penniless.

Thousands of children are living in my district to-day who are prevented from attending school because of lack of clothing and shoes; and I think I am just as much justified, and more so, in asking the United States Government to appropriate money for the purchase of clothing for these poor children as those gentlemen are who advocate the free distribution of seed.

There are hundreds of poor fishermen in my district, men who brave the perils of the wintry sea and the dangers of a rock-bound coast to earn a scanty living for themselves and families.

I know myself that it frequently occurs that these men return from a hard and desperate battle with the seas with a cargo of fish, and when they receive their shares hardly money enough is paid them to buy a pair of shoes for one of their children.

Why not, Mr. Chairman, send bait and fishing lines free to these poor and deserving fishermen? They surely deserve consideration if favors are to be distributed.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I desire to emphasize most strongly my objection to that form of legislation which seeks to tax the whole people for the benefit of a few. [Loud applause.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Six minutes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield that time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to improve this opportunity and say a few words in regard to this question of the free distribution of seeds. I represent here a district strictly devoted to agriculture. So long as it is the policy of the Government to make a free distribution of seeds, I shall try hereafter, as I have heretofore, to give my best attention to the distribution of the quota falling to me. But I am free to say that I would be glad—I think the people of my district would be satisfied—if this distribution as now conducted were discontinued.

I think an annual appropriation of $130,000 could be much more wisely expended in the interest of the farmers of this country than in this way. As we all know, latterly the distribution of seeds has been largely confined to a very ordinary variety of seeds, to such varieties as can be purchased at any corner grocery store, at any general store anywhere in the country. If we could have the distribution of rare and valuable seeds of new varieties introduced where they have not hitherto been known, I should think that were wise. And I should prefer to leave such distribution to the Department of Agriculture, so that the Secretary might send the new varieties to such portions of the country as it was desirable that they should be introduced in.

Mr. RIDGELY. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. RIDGELY. Does not this law especially provide for that very thing?

Mr. PERKINS. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that has been the language of the law since it was first enacted, but I believe in the practical operation with the appropriation that has been made it has been found impossible to secure new and rare seeds. So that the practice has grown up of contracting from the seedsmen for the delivery to the Agricultural Department of the most ordinary varieties of seeds.

Now, referring to what my colleague [Mr. HENDERSON] has said, while I do not sympathize with much of the methods pursued in the effort to influence the action of Congress, I still recognize that those who are engaged in the seed business have as much right to come here and protest against any action of Congress calculated to interfere with their business as people otherwise engaged. In so far as this distribution is simply in competition with the ordinary business seedsmen, I can see no more justification for it (apart from the practice which has grown up) than if it were applied to any other line of business. I think it is bad policy for the Congress of the United States to go further in the business of educating the people to the conviction that anything they want they may get free by applying to the Government. I would rather pursue a policy calculated to make the people dependent upon their own energies—to convince them that the Government of the United States is not in the business of distributing public charity. In so far as I know, the great proportion of the appropriation is devoted simply to the distribution of seeds in competition with the corner grocery and with seedsmen throughout the country. I should be glad, therefore, to have an opportunity to vote to strike it out.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CALLAHAN].

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with interest to the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa, and when he was talking of curtailing the distribution of seed the question occurred to my mind whether he would carry out the logic of his argument with reference to the tariff. If so, there would be some consistency in it.

I was impressed with the question asked by my friend from South Dakota [Mr. KELLEY] of my friend from Massachusetts, whether the maintenance of letter carriers at the expense of this Government does not favor a certain class of people, or those within a certain circle. The people throughout the country are contributing to the support of those carriers, and I do not object; I think it is right and proper. I might go on further, and enumerate other classes favored by legislation. If this appropriation for seed were cut off, such action would favor the man who deals in seed or the speculator in seeds, and would operate to the disadvantage of the poor farmer, who would be compelled to pay these men for their seed, in order that they may make a profit out of their business. Would not that be an unjust discrimination against the man who is the poorest business man in all the lines of business?

What is it that is being asked for by those who oppose the free distribution of seed? They are asking class legislation in favor of a certain line of business as against the masses who have been ignored and forgotten (excuse the remark) in a large majority of cases. The opposition to this appropriation comes largely from that class of Representatives whose constituencies have little or nothing to do in the line of agriculture, indicating conclusively that the suggestion is prompted by selfish motives. The requests come to them from individuals who are personally interested in this matter; yet these gentlemen would dare to demand of the farmer that he remain silent on this question.

Mr. Chairman, I for one desire to resent the intimation that we, as Representatives, expect in this cheap way to obtain some little recognition or some political advantage. If the people whom other gentlemen represent here are of that class, then they represent a different class of Americans from the people who have sent me here. The people of my Territory are not to be bought with a few packages of garden seed. They are not persons of that class; and I do not believe that the constituents of other gentlemen here are in any such category. Such a reflection or intimation is, I think, unjust. Nor do I believe that the average statesman is made of such stuff as to be influenced in his action by any such consideration.

Mr. Chairman, when you are willing to dispense with the favors now granted to other classes of the community, I shall be willing to join hands with you and say that the farmers shall waive their claims in this matter, but not until then.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BERRY].

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Chairman, as a Democrat I am opposed to paternalism. Such opposition I recognize as one of the primary principles of my party. But I do not see that any such principle operates in the distribution of seed by the Government. The purpose of the act of Congress now under consideration was to bring into this country rare specimens of seeds and plants. I think the law has proved exceedingly useful. One of the articles introduced by the Agricultural Department under the operation of this law is sorghum, which in many portions of the Southern country not far enough south to raise cane has been extremely useful. And in my State it is now largely used as a very valuable food for cattle. The wheat crop of our country has been very greatly improved by the importation of fine varieties of this grain. In this way, as I believe, by a change in the character of our products, we have been largely recompensed for the money that the Government has expended in this direction.

I live in an agricultural district, where, of course, the girls and the ladies are anxious to have a few flower seeds to decorate their homes, and I am glad to send them such seeds. It is about the only recognition that they receive from the Government. In such communities as ours they do not speculate in stocks as people do in the great centers of trade; they are not here begging large bounties for any purpose. This little recognition is about all they receive at the hands of the Government.

I think that if gentlemen would distribute more of the seeds of liberty about this time, when the poor Cubans are dying at the rate of a thousand to fifteen hundred a day, it would be better. If you should take the great Statue of Liberty that stands in the harbor of New York and plant it equidistant between Key West and the Island of Cuba, the torch which that figure holds in its hand could almost be seen from both Cuba and the United States.

The smoke of her burning fields is almost visible to us. Why should we quarrel here about a small bounty to the people of the United States while we can not find time to reach out our hands to the thousand hands that are extended from the Island of Cuba, begging the American people, whose flag represents liberty and freedom in the western world, to say to them, "We will protect you"? In the morning paper I see it announced that the city of Habana is turbulent; that its people are opposed to autonomy. We were told nearly two years ago by Mr. Cleveland that in a very short time, unless Spain could put down this rebellion, the people of Cuba should have some recognition.

Has not that time arrived? Let us see that the seeds of liberty are distributed to the Island of Cuba as well as the seeds of grain and vegetables among our own people. I think the time has come. We in the minority can do nothing; but I appeal to the Republican side of the House to let the Cuban resolution come forward, and let that island, which for a hundred years has been cheered by the example of this Government and been struggling for liberty—let her cries be heard now and let Cuban independence be recognized. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I yield one minute to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. KELLEY].

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, it would be interesting to know from what source comes the opposition to the free distribution of seed. I challenge any member upon the floor of this House to present a petition here signed by actual farmers who are opposed to the free distribution of seed. I say the opposition to this comes from other sources.

Mr. Chairman, it is well known that when any class of American citizens desire the abolition of any law or practice, they are not backward in manifesting their desires to the Congress of the United States. Gentlemen who are opposed to this bill talk about free gifts, but I say it would be an interesting question to know by what means all the agricultural papers of the United States have become so interested in this question while we have not heard a word of protest from an actual farmer. I have been the recipient of perhaps more than fifty agricultural journals published in this country, within the last thirty days, containing marked articles against the free distribution of seed. Why is this? It is because somebody has purchased the influence of the agricultural papers against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KELLEY. I should like three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is in control of the time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed three minutes more.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has fifteen minutes remaining.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I promised to yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], but with his consent I will yield three minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, it is well for us to consider what are the favors and privileges granted to the agriculturists of this nation. I freely confess that it is beyond my mental capabilities to find where they are the recipients of any advantages such as are granted to other industries of this country. You say there is a tariff on wheat and there is a tariff on corn, potatoes, oats, barley, horses, mules, jackasses, perhaps. I sometimes think you ought to have one, at least; but I say this is of no benefit to the farmers of this country. You but insult the intelligence of the agriculturists when you tell them that they are benefited by a tariff, because everybody knows that when they are raising a surplus of any commodity and that surplus finds both its market and its price in Liverpool, your tariff is inoperative and is of no benefit whatsoever to the farmers.

Gentlemen come forward claiming to represent constituencies not agricultural and demand the discontinuance of the free distribution of seed; but I want to say to members representing such constituencies that it does not make any difference how much legislation you enact here which inures to the benefit of the agriculturist, it at the same time inures to the benefit of all other classes. You can not enrich the agriculturists of this nation without at the same time benefiting every business man, every manufacturer of any commodity. All share alike in the benefits bestowed upon the farmer. Therefore, I say this small privilege that has been granted to the agriculturists of this country for many years is not burdensome upon the people of this nation, and there is no demand coming from the farmers of this country to discontinue now the sending of seeds in the same way as heretofore.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, at the request of the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, and as an appreciation of what I regard as his generous spirit in the division of the time, I yield back to him the remainder of it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not care to use the time myself, and therefore move that the bill be read by sections for debate and amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill by paragraphs.

Library: One librarian, $1,800; one assistant librarian, $1,400; one cataloguer, $1,200; one cataloguer, $1,000; one clerk, $840; one messenger, $720; in all, $6,960.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill the size of this library for which we are providing two librarians and two men who are appointed as cataloguers? How many volumes does it contain, and what is the character of the books?

Mr. WADSWORTH. This collection, I will state to the gentleman, relates particularly to agricultural subjects. As to the number of volumes I am not prepared to say exactly, but in the neighborhood of 5,000.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I understand that it is but a small collection of books.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; it is quite a large collection and very valuable.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Does the chairman of the committee think that they need two librarians and two men to do the cataloguing?

Mr. WADSWORTH. From what I have seen there, I think it requires the force provided in the bill, in order that the work shall be properly done.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me ask the gentleman if this Department has a general circulating library?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, sir.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It has not a library, then, like the Treasury, Interior, and other Departments?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Another question: Is there any appropriation in the bill to increase this library? How is it kept up?

Mr. WADSWORTH. By a lump sum which is provided later on in the bill.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. How much is provided?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Six thousand dollars for the purchase of books, new shelving, and so on.

Mr. GAINES. Where is this library?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is in the Agricultural building, and is connected with that Department. It is a collection of technical books used mainly by the heads of the Department—the scientific men in that office.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Can the gentleman estimate the number of volumes?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I should say about 5,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read the next paragraph, relating to the salaries of the Bureau of Animal Industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The attention of the Chair is called by the Clerk to the fact that there is a misprint in lines 3 and 4, on page 8, which ought to be corrected. The word "one" is repeated there.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is a clerical error, Mr. Chairman, and I ask that it be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Botanical investigations and experiments, Division of Botany: Investigations relating to medicinal and other economic plants and seeds, the collection of plants, traveling expenses, and express charges; the purchase of paper and all other necessary supplies, materials, and apparatus, and necessary labor; subscriptions to and purchase of botanical publications for use in the division, and the preparation, illustration, and publication of reports; and the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to purchase samples of seeds in open market, test same, and when found not up to standard he may, at his discretion, publish the results of these tests, together with the names of the seedsmen by whom the seeds were sold; $15,000.

[Mr. DAVIDSON of Wisconsin addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Grass and forage plant investigations, Division of Agrostology: Field and laboratory investigations relating to the natural history, geographical distribution, and uses of the various grasses and forage plants, and their adaptability to special soils and climates; establishment and maintenance of experimental grass stations; employment of local and special agents and assistants; collection of seeds, roots, and specimens for experimental cultivation and distribution; materials, tools, apparatus, supplies, and labor required in conducting experiments; freight and express charges and traveling expenses; the preparation of drawings and illustrations for special reports, and the preparation of illustrated circulars of information, bulletins, and monographic works on the forage plants and grasses of North America, $10,000.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am not opposed to the appropriation that gives $130,000 for seed to the farmers of this country. I do not propose to criticise the management of the Agricultural Department by the present Secretary of Agriculture, because I think that he has manifested already a deeper desire to make the Department of advantage to the farmers of this country than any Secretary who has heretofore occupied that position. But I do not think that this appropriation has ever or is now being used in the way that it was originally intended to be used, and that it could be used to the advantage of the farmers to-day. A great many of the seeds purchased with this $130,000 are simply vegetable seeds that can be purchased anywhere; that can be found anywhere. It is true they are a benefit to the farmers who receive them for planting small gardens.

But the original purpose for which this appropriation was made was the purchase of rare seeds, or seeds that would improve in different soils, that the Secretary of Agriculture might investigate the question, and determine what seeds were best adapted to a particular soil, or he might introduce new plants. Now, to illustrate: I have had quite a number of letters from my constituents in the last year requesting me to send them sugar-beet seeds. It is a great industry. The last Congress put a protective tariff on the importation of sugar. You said it was for the purpose of building up that industry, that the sugar-beet growers should be protected in this country, that they should be helped; and yet the great Department of Agriculture of the United States, which has $130,000 to buy seeds with, spends that $130,000 in buying vegetable seeds, when the constituents of my district and your district who wish to try this sugar industry, to plant beet seed, to know something about it, and to develop the industry in this country, so that we will not have to go to foreign countries to import our sugar, can not get a single paper of beet seed in this country.

Again, a number of my constituents have written to me and asked me to send them from the Department of Agriculture early-corn seed. I sent to the Secretary of Agriculture for my quota of seed, to know what I had, so I could send them some. He said no corn seed have been allotted to Alabama. He has allotted the early-corn seed to Ohio, Indiana, and other corn States; but Alabama can not be favored with early-corn seed. Now, I think that is improper. I think that the Secretary of Agriculture, if our people want to experiment with the planting of corn, so as to see if early-corn seed will not prosper and thrive in our soil, and the Department of Agriculture has corn seed, should give it to us instead of giving us cotton seed, of which we have abundance in Alabama. I think we should be allowed to select, if we desire it, and send the corn seed that our people wish.

Now, I have said this, Mr. Chairman, not in a captious way, to criticise the present occupant of the Department of Agriculture, because I believe he has endeavored to do the best he can, and so far as his experience has gone endeavored to meet the wants of the agricultural classes of this country; but I do contend that this $130,000 should be expended in the way I have indicated for the interest of the agricultural classes of this country.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I did not hear all the remarks that the gentleman made, but as to the statement concerning the application for beet seeds it seems to me he is mistaken. There is a provision contained in this bill, on page 23, which appropriates $5,000 for that express purpose. I had occasion to go to the Secretary of Agriculture, not more than three weeks ago, to apply for quite a quantity of sugar-beet seed for the purpose of experimenting in my State. He told me that he would in every way encourage it and give to any responsible parties the quantity of seed they said was needed. He stated that he would give to Colorado a half ton. It seems to me that the Department is endeavoring to distribute the seeds in a fair and equitable manner, and that the application for beet seed, when made in good faith, will meet with a generous response.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It may be that after the passage of this bill I may be able to get the seed; but I have written to the Secretary of Agriculture, and have his letter in black and white saying that I could not have it. It may be, like the corn seed, that the Secretary thinks Alabama is not the place to distribute it; but I think we should have the right to determine that question for ourselves.

Mr. SHAFROTH. This is for 1899, and I should think the appropriation had already been made.

The Clerk read as follows:

That whenever the Secretary of Agriculture shall certify to the President of the United States what countries or parts of countries are free from contagious or infectious diseases of domestic animals, and that neat cattle, domestic animals, and hides can be imported from such countries without danger to the domestic animals of the United States, the President of the United States may suspend the prohibition of the importation of neat cattle, domestic animals, and hides in the manner provided by law. That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause correspondence and negotiation to be had, through the Department of State or otherwise, with the authorities of the Kingdom of Great Britain for the purpose of securing the abrogation or modification of the regulations now enforced by said authorities which require cattle imported into Great Britain from the United States of America to be slaughtered at the port of entry, and prohibiting the same from being carried alive to other places in said Kingdom.

That the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury what are recognized breeds and pure-bred animals, under the provisions of paragraph 473 of the tariff act of 1897.

Museum, Department of Agriculture: For labor in cleaning and caring for building, $1,500.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move to strike out what has just been read. This provision of the bill is now unnecessary, as it is practically contained in the tariff bill, section 25.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Division of Seeds, purchase and distribution of valuable seeds: For the purchase, propagation, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, and expense of labor, transportation, paper, twine, gum, printing, postal cards, and all necessary material and repairs for putting up and distributing the same, and to be distributed in localities adapted to their culture, $130,000. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to expend the said sum (as nearly as practicable) in the purchase and distribution of such valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, the best he can obtain at public or private sale, and such as shall be suitable for the respective localities to which the same are to be apportioned, and in which same are to be distributed as hereinafter stated; and such seeds so purchased shall include a variety of vegetable and flower seeds suitable for planting and culture in the various sections of the United States.

An equal proportion of two-thirds of all seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall, upon their request, after due notification by the Secretary of Agriculture that the allotment to their respective districts is ready for distribution, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents or be directed and mailed by the Department upon their request; and the person receiving such seeds shall be requested to inform the Department of results of the experiments therewith: Provided, That all seeds, bulbs, plants, and cuttings herein allotted to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution remaining uncalled for on the 1st of May shall be distributed by the Secretary of Agriculture, giving preference to those persons whose names and addresses have been furnished by Senators and Representatives in Congress, and who have not before during the same season been supplied by the Department: And provided also, That the Secretary shall report, as provided in this act, the place, quantity, and price of seeds purchased, and the date of purchase; but nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from sending seeds to those who apply for the same. And the amount herein appropriated shall not be diverted or used for any other purpose but for the purchase, propagation, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants: Provided, however, That the Secretary shall not distribute to any Senator, Representative, or Delegate seeds entirely unfit for the climate and locality he represents, but shall distribute the same so that each member may have seeds of equal value, as near as may be, and the best adapted to the locality he represents: Provided also, That the seeds allotted to the Senators and Representatives for distribution in the districts embraced within the twenty-fifth and thirty-second parallels of latitude shall be ready for delivery on the 10th day of January or at the earliest practicable time thereafter: Provided further, That $20,000 of the sum thus appropriated, or so much thereof as the Secretary of Agriculture shall direct, may be used to collect, purchase, test, propagate, and distribute rare and valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants from foreign countries for experiments with reference to their introduction into this country; and the seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants thus collected, purchased, tested, and propagated shall not be included in general distribution, but shall be used for experimental tests, to be carried on with the cooperation of the agricultural experiment stations.

Mr. BROMWELL. I move to amend by striking out all of the section just read to and including the word "thereafter" just before the words "Provided further," on the third line of page 21 of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. That is about seeds, is it not?

Mr. BROMWELL. That is about seeds. It strikes out the general appropriation for the seeds, but leaves the final clause which provides for the purchase of rare and valuable seeds for experimental purposes. Mr. Chairman, it does seem to me that it is time for this House to do away with the humbug and fraud of the free seed distribution. The purpose for which this appropriation was originally made has been entirely diverted from its original intention, as found in the earlier appropriation bills. Now, an appropriation of $130,000 is asked for to distribute free the seeds of common variety, which are grown in the very localities in which they are to be distributed, seeds which can be ordered or procured in that locality as well, if not better, and seeds which in many cases are entirely worthless.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BROMWELL. Certainly I will.

Mr. CANNON. Do the farmers whom the gentleman represent want this appropriation dispensed with?

Mr. BROMWELL. I will answer that question. I do not believe there is a farmer in the United States who feels that the Government ought to expend this money for the purpose of giving him one or two packages of seeds which he can procure on his own or the adjoining farm equally as good as the Government sends him.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Does not the gentleman know that the seeds are sent to different localities, where they are not grown?

Mr. BROMWELL. That is not done under this distribution. The very fact that a large amount of seeds are purchased from the seed merchants in the vicinity where they are to be distributed for the purpose of saving the cost of transportation is a complete answer to that question.

Mr. GREENE. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BROMWELL. In one minute. Every gentleman knows that seeds are procured from the nearest seed merchant, and that is done in order to save the cost of transportation, and therefore it does not bring a new variety of seeds from one part of the country to be distributed in another part of the country.

Mr. STEELE. I would like to know whether the gentleman has any farmers in his district?

Mr. BROMWELL. Certainly I have.

Mr. STEELE. Have you more than four or five?

Mr. BROMWELL. Yes, more than 4,000 or 5,000. There is half the city of Cincinnati in my district and the county of Hamilton over to the Indiana line.

Mr. STEELE. You do not call them all farmers, do you?

Mr. BROMWELL. Yes; and I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that I am a farmer myself, when it comes to that.

Mr. STEELE. Citizens of Cincinnati are the kind of farmers the gentleman alludes to.

Mr. BROMWELL. There is another objection I have to this seed distribution as it is carried on. I represent one-half of the city of Cincinnati. I have probably 4,000 or 5,000 farmers in my district, and I am given exactly the same number of seeds for distribution that the member representing the city of New York or Philadelphia is given. He gets his full quota of agricultural seeds, corn, and tobacco, and 400 packages of flower seeds; and what is he going to do with them?

Mr. OGDEN. Give them to some member who has not got enough.

Mr. BROMWELL. They can not grow wheat in the streets, or tobacco on the sidewalks, so the member trades his seeds off for publications or anything that he can get a chance to trade for. There ought to be some sensible way of distributing these seeds, and some way of apportioning them to the members who live in and represent the agricultural districts.

Last year I succeeded in getting an amendment to this appropriation bill through the House providing that an option of this kind should be given; but that amendment was defeated in the Senate.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Would the gentleman agree to amend this bill so as to give these seed to gentlemen who represent agricultural districts?

Mr. BROMWELL. I would, if it were also provided that Representatives from city districts or those comprising suburban residences adjacent to cities should receive flower seeds instead of agricultural seeds.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I think that would be a very good amendment.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BROMWELL. I should like to have a minute or two longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to allowing the gentleman to proceed for five minutes more?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROMWELL. As I said at the beginning, I am opposed to this whole seed-distribution business. I do not see any more reason why the United States Government should send out free seeds to farmers than that it should send out free flour or free clothes to the residents of cities.

Mr. OGDEN. Is it any more indefensible to send out free seeds to farmers than to give free delivery of mails to cities and towns? Is not the principle the same?

Mr. BROMWELL. No, sir. And, at any rate, I am in favor of giving free delivery in the country as well as in the city districts, as the gentleman will find when we come to consider the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. OGDEN. We shall be a long time getting that.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. OGDEN] ought to know that no city or town in this country gets free delivery of mails in the literal meaning of that language. The communities enjoying such delivery are compelled to pay for it by the extra postage on their letters. The money expended in that way is not a subsidy.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I will ask the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] whether the farmers do not pay taxes?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly they do.

Mr. BROMWELL. If the original intention of this appropriation had been carried out, there might not be any objection to it. The object was to bring from foreign countries plants not cultivated in the United States—to introduce such plants of that kind as might be valuable for agricultural, commercial, or manufacturing purposes. But now ordinary common seeds, such as can be and are raised by every farmer, are sent out, and also ordinary flower seeds. In last year's distribution six varieties of flower seeds, I believe, came to my district—sunflowers, castor-oil beans, pinks, and three other of the commonest variety of flowers, such as our constituents would not think of putting into their gardens, such seeds as make them simply laugh at us when we send them.

Then there is another consideration. By reason of the manner in which these packages of seeds are put up, it is utterly impossible for any person to know without opening the packages what they contain. So that when a constituent of mine writes to me and says that he wants a certain kind of seed, either flower or vegetable, what am I to do? The assignment of particular seeds to particular people is a sort of lottery. I put his name upon the back of one of these packages, and it goes to him, but it contains, perhaps, the very thing he does not want. How can I accommodate him? Only by tearing open package after package—perhaps 100 packages—to find the particular seeds that this man wants me to send him.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. BROMWELL. I know that I am not.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am sure that you are.

Mr. BROMWELL. I have distributed these seeds now for three years, and I think I know something about it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am distributing them now.

Mr. BROMWELL. In this seed distribution there ought to be a little common sense. In the first place, common sense ought to be exercised in discriminating as to the character of the seeds between the city districts and the country districts, so that the flower seeds may go to certain localities and the agricultural seeds to others. In the next place, there should be printed on each package a statement of its contents, so that when a particular kind of seed is called for we may know what we are sending. I have heard of instances where constituents have even been insulted when they have received, in response to their requests for flower seeds, something that they did not want and would not grow. Among the agricultural seeds which I received two years ago was a lot of sunflower seed. Those might do very well in the district represented by my friend from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON], where they are addicted to sunflower raising, but in my vicinity in Ohio we do not raise such things.

Now, I have 500 packages of tobacco seed, for which I have no more use than for sunflower seed; yet there is no provision by which I can go to the Secretary of Agriculture and say, "Here are my packages of tabacco seed; give these to some Representative from North Carolina, or Kentucky, or Virginia, and give me instead some seeds that my constituents can use."

Mr. HENDERSON. Southern members would very quickly give you flower seed in exchange for your tobacco seed.

Mr. BROMWELL. I have not found one ready to do so. I am perfectly willing to put my tobacco seed up and trade them off for flower seed; and I am willing to trade off in the same way my agricultural seed.

Mr. CLARDY. I suggest to the gentleman that he give his tobacco seed to some of the great warehouses of Cincinnati to be sent to some of our constituents.

Mr. BROMWELL. These seeds are not designed for distribution among great warehouses conducted by merchants or manufacturers of Cincinnati; they are designed for the farmers.

Mr. CLARDY. But our constituents who send tobacco there would be very glad to receive those seeds.

Mr. BROMWELL. Those constituencies will be looked after well enough by their own Representatives, without my giving them my tobacco seed.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Chairman, I regret that my able and distinguished colleague from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] has felt called upon to make this motion to strike out of the pending bill the provision for the purchase of seeds for free distribution. If he represented the Sixth district of our State instead of one of the city districts of Cincinnati he would not have made the motion.

I presume he speaks correctly for his constituents when he refers to the distribution of seeds by the Department of Agriculture as "a sham." I presume when he sends packages of these seeds, under his Congressional frank, to the wholesale dealers on Second street or on Third street in Cincinnati, they report to him that they do not want the seeds, that they do not need them, and that the seed distribution is "a sham," as he characterizes it. I presume when he sends packages of these seeds to the retail merchants on Fifth street in the city of Cincinnati, they report that they do not want the seeds; and these merchants no doubt join with my colleague in terming the seed distribution "a sham."

Mr. Chairman, I have the honor of representing an agricultural district and not a city district, such as that represented here by the honorable gentleman who makes this motion. In my district there are six agricultural counties, and I want to say, speaking for the people who reside in them, that they do not believe that this scheme of seed distribution is a sham; but, on the contrary, they say it is useful and beneficial to them, and that it is an advantage—a large advantage—not only to the farmers, but to all those who cultivate vegetable gardens in the villages. The large majority of the people of the Sixth Ohio district are farmers. Last spring I took a good deal of pains to send out these seeds to the farmers of the district, and I confess I was greatly and agreeably surprised on receiving a very large number of letters from those to whom the seeds had been sent, expressing their gratification at having received what I had franked to them. And later in the year I was again surprised on hearing from a great number of the farmers in my district that they had planted the seeds and encouraged their growth and had been highly pleased with the products arising therefrom.

So that while my friend who makes this motion perhaps correctly represents the views of the city population, I say to him most respectfully that he goes beyond his district in making this motion and treads upon our corns in the Sixth district.

Now, sir, the proposition is to strike out the entire appropriation for the purchase and distribution of seeds. Is this House ready to take such a step? My friend from Cincinnati makes the motion. He represents a district where the people get many of the direct benefits of public appropriations. They get the benefit of the letter-carrier service, which system has been established in all the great cities. The people of Cincinnati had the benefit of the expenditure of a large sum of money in the erection of a great Government building in that city. The populations of the city districts have many of the direct benefits of appropriations by the Government which are not directly beneficial to the country districts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman may be permitted to proceed for five minutes longer. His colleague, who presents the motion, had that privilege accorded to him.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the gentleman will be recognized for five minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN. And I insist, Mr. Chairman, that it is unfair to the agricultural communities, it is unjust to the farmers of the country, when a little appropriation like this is proposed for their benefit, to have the Representatives of the city communities come here and move to strike out provisions which are an advantage, in a small degree at least, to the farmers of the country.

I very heartily indorse what was said a while ago by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], who properly characterized the efforts that have been made by anonymous postal cards to prejudice the House against this appropriation.

Mr. Chairman, I go further, and say that I indorse and second all that the honorable member from Iowa said of the character of the present Secretary of Agriculture, and of the intelligent service I believe he is now rendering to the farmers of the United States. I have before me the last annual report issued by the present Secretary of Agriculture. Referring to this law and the appropriation for the free distribution of seeds, Secretary Wilson uses this language:

> The spirit of the law requires that seeds, plants, bulbs, etc., shall be rare and valuable. Efforts are being made by the present Secretary of Agriculture to spend the appropriation for seeds, plants, etc., by purchases through agents and representatives abroad, through seed houses and scientific associations. The Old World contains many things that will be valuable to the New World.

Now, sir, if the present Secretary of Agriculture has intelligently entered upon the discharge of his duties, and if he has shown that he has taken a broad view of the powers that he may exercise in this respect, should the House stop at this time and strike down this comparatively small appropriation of $130,000 for the benefit of the farmers of the United States?

I repeat that I regret that my colleague from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] has made the motion, and I should deeply regret it if this House should concur in that motion by striking out this useful appropriation.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, there was a time when the farmers of our land were accorded consideration by the legislative power of this Government. Now all is changed, and the very men who stand here and seek to deprive the farmers of the benefit of this little appropriation are the men who four years ago, by their votes, fastened the gold standard upon them and reduced the price of their products to one-half. [Applause on the Democratic side.] They are the same men, Mr. Chairman, who only last summer, by their votes in this House, doubled the tax upon many things which the farmer has to buy. They are the men, Mr. Chairman, who seemed to have done everything in their power to degrade the American farmer. And now they seek to deprive the farmers of a few seeds, costing a few farthings, which the Government for thirty years has given them under a system which has done more good for the amount expended than any other expenditure of our Government—a system which has been tested and approved by every Administration.

Yet these men, without a blush upon their faces, stand here and speak and vote in favor of depriving the farmer of this little benefit. Mr. Chairman, when we look back into the history of our country we find that the farmers are the men to whom we owe everything of which this country boasts, and they are the men who by their labor have created substantially all our stupendous wealth, exceeding as it does that of any other nation on earth. The most distinguished and greatest men of whom America boasts were farmers, or at some period of their lives followed the vocation of farmers.

The Colonial Congress was, I think, composed entirely of farmers. The constitutional convention which framed our fundamental law was almost entirely composed of farmers. The various conventions of the States which ratified that instrument were composed of farmers also. Our early Congresses were composed of farmers. Mr. Chairman, it has been the farmers who, in time of war, have been called upon and who have shouldered their muskets and fought the battles of their country in every conflict in which the banner of our country has been called into strife. Why, in the Revolution, the distinguished generals who fought for the liberties of the ancestors of the very men who stand here now trying to strike down the farmer, were farmers. Washington was a farmer. Anthony Wayne was a farmer. Stark was a farmer. Putnam was a farmer. So also were Marion, Greene, Lincoln, Mercer, and Sullivan.

Mr. CLARDY. And Jefferson.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Yes; and when we come further down, Lincoln and Grant were raised upon farms, and so on the other side were Lee and Stonewall Jackson. Mr. Chairman, the farm is the nursery of virtue. All our great men of letters, our eminent divines, our jurists, our great merchants, our inventors, all the men who have made this country great were, with scarcely an exception, raised upon farms. Mr. Chairman, shall this nursery of virtue and of great and good men be destroyed?

Destroy the farm home and from what source will come those who are to protect and perpetuate this great and grand Republic, which owes its creation to farmer statesmen? With the farm home destroyed, whence will come generals to command our armies and defend the honor and property of our country, and preserve the liberties of our people?

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, at every session of Congress when the agricultural appropriation bill is under consideration some one is found who arises in his seat and moves to strike out the pitiful little appropriation to buy a few seeds for free distribution to the farmers. That great and noble class who have been eulogized so by the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] are the foundation stones of this Government, who furnish three-fourths of all the products that go to make up our exports, who, after feeding and clothing themselves, feed and clothe in addition every man, woman, and child in the United States. And yet doing all this as they do, bearing the heat and burden of the day, I am sorry that there can be found one man in the United States willing to take from them the pitiful little appropriation of only $130,000 to buy a few seeds.

Why, living out in the rural districts in many sections in the backwoods, the only way by which these poor farmers know they have a government is by receiving a few packages of seeds and now and then a document, and yet you would deprive them even of that. It is unbecoming the dignity of any gentleman in this House to try to rid them of that little privilege. It is true, as has been said, you have gone on taxing the farmers so that they are only known by the assessor and the tax collector. They pay 80 per cent of all the money that is appropriated by these billion-dollar Congresses, yet there is always some little man ready to jump upon the farmer's back and take from him what he has left. It reminds me of a story that I told here in the Fifty-third Congress, in discussing the repeal of the purchasing clause in the Sherman Act. I said that they had gone on and taken the money out of circulation from $50 per capita down to four or five, and now they wanted to take that, and would do it if they could. I illustrated it by telling the story to show the way in which you are treating the farmers. I said it reminded me of the first load of corn that little Johnny took to mill. His father sent him to mill with the corn. The miller took his sack of grain, carried it into the mill, and took the little toll dish, taking a little out and putting it into this box and a little out and putting it into that box. Little Johnny had never seen that before. He looked at the miller in astonishment and thought that he was stealing his father's corn. Finally he took hold of the sack and emptied it into the hopper, as millers do, not noticing little Johnny; but little Johnny was watching him, and when the miller threw down the sack little Johnny grabbed it up and away he ran for home. The miller followed him about halfway home, but he could not catch up to him, and had to go back to see about the corn that was in the hopper, and when the little fellow ran and fell upon the piazza, his father said, "What's the matter, Johnny?" Johnny said, "Well, dad, that old son of a gun of a miller has taken every grain of your corn and given me a hell of a race for the sack?" [Laughter.] Now, that is just what you, my distinguished friend, would do. You have taken every privilege of every kind from the farmer except that of suffering and paying taxes, and trying to cut off his supply of garden seeds, and here you are giving him a hell of a race for that; and I hope you will not get it. [Laughter.]

[Mr. MERCER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GREENE. I shall not discuss in the few moments I have the tariff question or the money question. Now, I live in an agricultural district. I represent a population of over 200,000 from the same State as the gentleman who has just taken his seat. I want to say that I have the first letter to receive from any gentleman in the State of Nebraska protesting against the free distribution of seeds.

Mr. HENDERSON. You mean signed letters?

Mr. GREENE. Yes; I mean signed letters. I do not mean these Miss Nancy letters without signatures. I want to say that if I had been opposed to the free distribution of seeds, the character of this literature and these letters with which I have been flooded would have caused me to vote in favor of the free distribution. I want to say that my colleague—for whom I have the most profound affection—represents largely a district where the people are all great agriculturists. He comes from Omaha, the town that has just had a large appropriation from this House to carry on a great exposition. We have contributed many thousands of dollars to it, and I am proud of it. But I want to say that it comes with a bad grace from the gentleman to come before this House and fight this little appropriation that goes to the farmers when such a large appropriation has been granted him by this House.

Mr. MERCER. Is it not a fact that Washington County, in my district, has a larger farming population than any county in your district?

Mr. GREENE. No, sir; it is not a fact. I was just coming to the next proposition. The gentleman says that Mr. Noyes is a very prominent man in his district. I have a larger district than he has.

Mr. HENDERSON. Larger, but not so intelligent.

Mr. GREENE. I know every prominent citizen in my district, but my colleague does not seem to know whether this gentleman, who resides in his district, is connected with the Waterloo seed farm or not. I have had a number of letters from the Waterloo Seed Company urging me to vote against the appropriation. Why? So they may get a monopoly of the sale of all the seeds in the State of Nebraska. That seed farm happens to be located in the gentleman's own district.

Mr. HENDERSON. That simplifies the question.

Mr. GREENE. Yes, that simplifies the matter. Opposition comes from these seed men, and this seed farm is in the gentleman's own district, and for that reason he would oppose the free distribution of seeds. I do not happen to have the influence in my district of the Waterloo seed farm, but I have 40,000 families in my district and I only have a trifle over 5,000 packages of seeds to distribute among those 40,000 families. I have numerous requests from these people for seeds. They write me that the seeds that I have sent them heretofore have turned out well and have done them much good. Many new varieties have been sent them which have improved the productions of the State of Nebraska, and I think that will hold good of all the agricultural counties in the country.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Does the Hon. J. Sterling Morton live in your district?

Mr. GREENE. No, sir; the Hon. J. Sterling Morton does not live in my district, for which I am truly thankful.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Chairman, I take pleasure in saying that my district is largely agricultural. There are more persons engaged in agricultural pursuits than in any other occupation, and as to fertility of soil and the perfection of methods of farming pursued, it will compare favorably with any other district in the nation. This statement seems pertinent in view of the criticism of my friend from Indiana and other gentlemen that those opposing this appropriation did not have farmer constituents.

It has been foremost among my desires to promote the interests of agriculture, and I have endeavored to ascertain the needs and wishes of those engaged in that branch of industry with reference to this appropriation. Now, if the appropriation is made, the farmers whom I represent naturally desire their share of the seeds and will get them; but, as I understand their views, they believe that the original purpose of this appropriation has been departed from, and that the varieties of seeds now supplied are not of that rare character which would be of special service to them and their great industry. It is well known that the results are rarely reported and not then utilized.

They would, therefore, like to see this appropriation used for other purposes. In the first place, they believe they have a right to enjoy the benefits of free rural delivery of the mails. [Applause.] In the second place, they believe that they have a right to enjoy the benefits of a postal-telegraph system—one that will permeate the entire country and reach all communities. [Applause.] In the third place, they believe that by encouraging the expositions where displays of agricultural products and machinery are made, and enlarging the scope of original investigation by the Department of Agriculture, and promoting the more diversified use and greater exports of farm products, their interests can be better served than by continuing this distribution of ordinary varieties of garden seed.

Mr. STEELE. If the gentleman will allow me, I wish to ask him this question: Does he consider that he has in his district the largest area of seed gardens or farms in the United States?

Mr. WANGER. I have never estimated the area of other districts, and do not know the fact. There are certainly quite a large number of seed growers in my district; but I have not heard from one seed grower in opposition to this proposition unless he happened to also be a merchant; and there are but two of those growers, so far as I am acquainted with them, who are merchants as well as growers.

I do not sympathize with some of the methods of ridicule and a leading argument of the great seed merchants of the country. I do not see the logic of their proposition that by appropriations of this kind Congress is materially interfering with their business. It occurs to me that in this way they have furnished them an enlarged market for their production. But I believe that agriculture can be better served by applying this appropriation to other purposes than those named in the paragraph, and that much of the seed bought by the Government is wasted; and accordingly favor the striking out proposed by the gentleman from Ohio as a preliminary to the adoption of measures of greater utility to farmers and other residents of rural communities.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have a time set for taking the vote on this paragraph. I ask that the vote be taken on the amendments and the pending paragraph at 4 o'clock.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Will not the gentleman agree to an amendment providing that all members of Congress who do not want seed need not take them? [Laughter.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; I agree to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] asks that the debate on the pending amendments and the paragraph——

Several MEMBERS. Let us vote now.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Very well; but before the vote is taken I desire to yield to my colleague [Mr. FOOTE].

Mr. FOOTE. Mr. Chairman, I represent an agricultural district; I want to represent that district fairly, and I do not think that if it were proposed here to-day to carry out the original intent of this appropriation I would represent them fairly in voting against such a proposition. But the most ardent advocate of this appropriation will not agree that we are to-day carrying out by appropriations of this kind the original intent of the law; that is, the distribution of rare and valuable seeds.

Now, I have a suggestion to make, which at the proper time I shall put in the form of an amendment—that is, that the $100,000 which we now spend in the distribution of these seeds be spent in sending out the Agricultural Reports and the horse and cattle books. That is a proposition fraught with more good to the farming community than the distribution of any little packages of seeds which the farmer may receive and which he does not know where to plant because he can not tell what variety the seeds may be.

Mr. Chairman, I believe I am fairly representing my constituents in taking this position. Our cattle books, our horse books, our Agricultural Reports are valuable educators of our farmers. At the proper time I shall introduce such an amendment as I have indicated. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] in charge of this bill a question for information. Is there any provision in this bill to reprint that horse book?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, sir.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then I will offer an amendment to that effect.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is a matter belonging to the Printing Committee.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Agriculture and of the subcommittee that prepared this bill, I desire to make one or two observations. I can not undertake to discuss now the general merits of the bill or the merits of the particular proposition now to be voted upon; but I want to say this: Though I have been a farmer for many years, I have learned a great deal to-day about farming. Heretofore I have always thought—and I have given some study to the subject of fertilizers—that fertilizers are composed of one or more of three particular substances—nitrogen, potash, and phosphoric acid. I have been taught that those were the only things constituting a perfect fertilizer.

But I have learned to-day—and I am gratified to return my acknowledgments to gentlemen who have taught me this fact—that the most wonderful fertilizer ever used among any people is to be found in political speeches on an agricultural bill. We have heard to-day quite a large number of excellent political speeches on this Agricultural appropriation bill. I never have seen such a crop produced and in so short a time by any fertilizer. When this House was constituted, when these gentlemen originally came here to serve the people of their respective districts, a large majority of them were professional men—lawyers, doctors, and other classes of professional people.

But now, Mr. Chairman, notice the peculiar effect of this fertilizer. You see that all of us are farmers. We have nothing here to-day but farmers.

I am glad of it. I welcome you all into the ranks of that class—the farmers—who are, after all, the sinew and bone of the country, and hope you will always stand on the side of the farmers, because they stand on the side of prosperity, of peace and happiness, of virtue, and of greatness in this and every other country.

Now, I want to make one or two observations, and then I shall desist. This bill proposes the appropriation of $3,333,402 for agricultural purposes. Looking at that expenditure by itself, and considering it independently of the other great appropriations which have to be made for Government purposes, it seems to be an enormous sum.

But, my friends, you must remember that we in this great agricultural country give less for the benefit of agriculture than any other great civilized country on the face of the earth. We appropriate less for the promotion of our greatest industry than we do for many other objects of far less importance, or than is appropriated by other countries under similar circumstances. For instance, what do we appropriate for the support of the Navy? Millions upon millions of dollars. And what is the Navy, after all, compared to the great agricultural interests of the country? It is a comparison that could hardly be made. You might abolish the Navy altogether, and the people will still live.

Take the Army. There again millions upon millions are appropriated for our little standing Army in this country, for which it is a matter of grave doubt as to whether we have any great use at all. But how does it compare to the agricultural industry of the country? You could wipe out the Army and still live. But suppose you wiped out agriculture for one year only in this and other great agricultural countries of the world. The result would be desolation, death, and ruin prevailing in every land on earth.

I only make these comparisons to show you how relatively small is this appropriation, although we have made some small increases; but yet how small they appear in the aggregate, compared to the vast appropriations made for minor interests that are represented in other branches of the Government.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask that debate on the pending paragraph and the amendment be now closed.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I would like to have five minutes before the gentleman does that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then I move that at the expiration of five minutes the debate on the paragraph and amendment be closed and the vote be taken on the pending amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I did not think at first that I would take any part whatever in this debate. But I believe that I ought to add my voice to the voice that goes in favor of this appropriation for the distribution of seeds amongst our agricultural communities.

I represent a district almost entirely agricultural. It is a small district. It only has thirty-six counties in it, and only 300,000 people live in the district, and they are nearly all farmers; and this is the only thing that keeps them "in touch" with the Government at Washington. It is the only benefit they get in the line of paternalism——

Mr. HENDERSON. Well, you are a connecting link, JERRY. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Yes, sir; and I am a farmer who farms the farm and not the farmer. [Applause.]

Of course, I can readily understand why gentlemen representing Cincinnati districts really have no use for garden seed, a locality where they have to dig their fishing worms with dynamite and plant their peas with a shotgun. [Laughter.] I can understand the position of the gentleman, therefore, who makes this motion. But I think it comes with poor grace from gentlemen representing the large cities, who from year to year receive such immense appropriations for public buildings and for other purposes, to oppose this small appropriation for the agricultural interests of the country.

It is the largest and the greatest interest in the country, upon which every other interest is built; and I repeat that this is about all they get from the Government. They certainly are not benefited by the protective-tariff system, which puts more than a billion of dollars into the pockets of interested manufacturers. The burden of this falls largely upon the agricultural classes, who compose the principal part of the army of consumers. Therefore, as long as we continue the system of paternalism, in the name of God and common sense, "and the Republican party," as my friend HANNA would say, let us have the distribution of seeds for the farmers. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Ohio to strike out the paragraph beginning on page 21, under the head "Division of Seed," down to the word "Provided," in line 3, page 23.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BROMWELL) there were—ayes 19, noes 155.

So the motion to strike out was rejected.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Salaries and expenses, Bureau of Animal Industry: For carrying out the provisions of the act of May 29, 1884, establishing the Bureau of Animal Industry, and the act of August 30, 1890, providing for an inspection of meats and animals, and also the provisions of the act of March 3, 1891, providing for the inspection of live cattle, hogs, and the carcasses and products thereof which are the subjects of interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes, the sum of $775,000; and the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to use any part of this sum he may deem necessary or expedient, in such manner as he may think best, in the collection of information concerning livestock, dairy, and other animal products, and to prevent the spread of pleuropneumonia, tuberculosis, sheep scab, glanders or farcy, and other diseases of animals, and for this purpose to employ as many persons as he may deem necessary, and to expend any part of this sum in the purchase and destruction of diseased or exposed animals and the quarantine of the same whenever in his judgment it is essential to prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia, tuberculosis, or other diseases of animals from one State into another, and for printing and publishing such reports relating to animal industry as he may direct; and the Secretary is hereby authorized to rent a suitable building in the District of Columbia, at an annual rental of not exceeding $1,200, to be used as a laboratory for said Bureau of Animal Industry: Provided, That $25,000 of the sum appropriated by this paragraph shall be immediately available for salaries and expenses of the Bureau of Animal Industry; and the Secretary of Agriculture may use so much of this sum as he deems necessary for promoting the extension and development of foreign markets for dairy and other farm products of the United States, and for suitable transportation for the same; and such products may be bought in open market and disposed of at the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, and he is authorized to apply the moneys received from the sales of such products toward the continuation and repetition of such experimental exports.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert, in line 6, page 24, after the word "commerce," the following: "Provided, Live horses and the carcasses and products thereof be entitled to the same inspection as other animals herein named."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I think there is no objection to that amendment. I think horse meat is recognized as a wholesome article of food and as an article of interstate and foreign commerce. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, to come in at the end of that section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "exports," in line 12, page 25, the following:

"That there be printed of the work known as the Special Report on Diseases of the Horse 150,000 copies, of which 100,000 copies shall be for the use of the House and 50,000 copies for the use of the Senate. And there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the necessary sum for that purpose."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to raise a point of order on that amendment. The publication which the gentleman from Missouri desires does not properly come on this appropriation bill. It should come from the Printing Committee. I should be very glad to vote for it in that way, but not on this bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Was not this publication made in this way in the Fifty-third Congress, and also in the Fifty-fourth?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think it was made in one Congress only, the Fifty-third.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Was it not printed with the Agricultural Report?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think not. That is not my recollection. It came out as a separate publication entirely.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. This report was first published by the Agricultural Department as a special report of the Department. It was later republished through an appropriation made in the Agricultural appropriation bill. It was once republished through an appropriation carried in the printing bill.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] will permit me, I desire to say that the publication was made as an amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill in the Fifty-fourth Congress, precisely as it is proposed now.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But I made no point of order at that time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It seems to me it is as legitimate to print this horse book by authority of this bill as it is to print the agricultural bulletins. Now, I know it was printed in this way in the Fifty-third Congress. What happened in the Fifty-fourth Congress I do not know, because I was not here. If you are going to print it, it seems to me it does not make much difference how it is printed. I know that if these publications are intended to be put to use at all, this is the most valuable publication that the Agricultural Department has made since it was organized. I insist that the amendment is germane.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I insist on my point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The recollection of the Chair is that this same amendment was put into an appropriation bill in the Fifty-fourth Congress, and as the Chair now remembers, though he may be in error, it was held that it was simply for the reprinting of a document that would properly and legitimately come on the Agricultural appropriation bill. In other words, that it would not have been stricken out on a point of order if the committee itself had recommended the appropriation, and that if the committee could recommend it without its being subject to a point of order, then it would not be subject to a point of order if offered by any member of the House. That is the recollection of the Chair, and on that recollection the Chair will overrule the point of order. [Applause.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let the amendment be reported again, Mr. Chairman. I want to say to the gentleman from Missouri that I am in favor of the publication, but I do not believe this is the proper way of getting at it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I wish you would put it to a vote, as nobody seems to care to talk about it.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment read.

Mr. SAYERS. I should like to know how much it costs per volume to print this book.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It will only cost 70 cents a volume.

Mr. SAYERS. One hundred and fifty thousand copies at 70 cents a volume.

Mr. PAYNE. Can not we have the amendment reported again?

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert a definite sum instead of an indefinite sum. I am informed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], who is entirely familiar with the cost of the publication of this work, that it will cost $105,000 to print this edition. Now, I intend to vote against the amendment, but I want to strike out the indefinite appropriation and insert $105,000, so that members of the committee may know what they are voting for.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I accept the amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, the estimates furnished the Committee on Printing by the Public Printer have always shown that it requires about 70 cents a copy to print this work. Therefore the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas makes the amount appropriated $105,000, which is about correct; and I would suggest to him that he modify his amendment so that it will read "$105,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. SAYERS. I accept the modification.

Mr. DINGLEY. Will the gentleman from Tennessee, who is a member of the Committee on Printing, be kind enough to inform the House how many copies of this book have been published?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can furnish the gentleman that information. In 1891, 100,000 copies, at a cost of $45,000; in 1892, 45,000 copies, at a cost of $26,000; in 1895, 75,000 copies, at a cost of $38,000; in 1896, 75,000 copies, at a cost of $41,000. A total of 295,000 copies, at a total cost of $151,489.15.

Mr. DINGLEY. Now the proposition is to add $100,000 more.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Can the gentleman tell how many copies the people would like to have?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I should leave that to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DINGLEY. There are a great many people who would like to have things at the cost of the taxpayers.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am talking for the taxpayers themselves. They are the very fellows who are howling for this book.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to say——

Mr. WADSWORTH. There have been 820 copies for each Congressional district in the United States already provided.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that the estimate spoken of as coming from the Public Printer was the estimate that he always made as to the cost of this publication; but there was some edition where they furnished plates which were made in the Government Printing Office; and, in view of the fact that they have been furnished, they can now be furnished at a cheaper rate. Therefore, I suggest to the gentleman from Texas that he modify his amendment so that we will only appropriate a sufficient sum to print 150,000; and then, if it takes only $50,000, that will be all we will pay out.

Mr. SAYERS. How much does the gentleman from Tennessee say it will cost?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Under the estimates already submitted, about 50 cents a copy.

Mr. SAYERS. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move, instead of $105,000, that $75,000 be substituted, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as it is now before the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

That there be printed of the work known as "Special Report on Diseases of the Horse" 150,000 copies, of which 100,000 shall be for the use of the House and 50,000 for the use of the Senate; and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for that purpose.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, it appears from the record that the printing in the last Congress amounted to about 50 cents a volume, but I say that it is impossible for us to determine now what this new edition would cost, because we are not advised as to whether the plates from which that work was printed are still in existence and serviceable. I apprehend that if the plates had to be made anew, and the engravings, some of which are expensive, that probably the cost would be somewhat increased.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Has the gentleman any reason to believe that these plates have been destroyed?

Mr. PERKINS. No; I am only influenced by this reason, Mr. Chairman, that they are now old and have been used to a large extent, as indicated by the number of copies that have already been issued. And I presume the life of the plates, if they have not been renewed in the meanwhile, is now about exhausted.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Is it not the custom of the Public Printer to keep such valuable plates?

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, certainly; the plates were kept, but whether they are in a serviceable condition is the question.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. It is not a fair inference that they will not be able to furnish these copies.

Mr. PERKINS. There is where the gentleman is moving in the dark.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If that be true, then I believe we ought to vote down the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas, and let the amount stand without any limitation. Then we will get the books, whether it costs 50 or 70 cents a copy.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it ought to be the policy of Congress to make indefinite appropriations. The House ought to know what is being appropriated. I am opposed to the whole amendment. I think it is a species of extravagance that ought not to be committed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. You say you are going to vote against the whole proposition?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes.

Mr. GAINES. Against printing this horse book?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes; I am.

Mr. GAINES. Did you get these horse books when they were printed?

Mr. SAYERS. I did.

Mr. GAINES. Did you distribute the books?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly; I distribute all books sent to me; they belong to my constituents.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman, I will say there is hardly a day that I am not called on to send some one this book.

Mr. SAYERS. I beg to differ with the gentleman from Tennessee. I have expressed my opinion upon it, and will stand by it.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. If the gentleman will allow me, my colleague from Kansas was informed at the Printing Office by the Public Printer that these plates are now in existence, as he expected to print more copies of this work.

Mr. SAYERS. I will say to the gentleman from Kansas, the gentleman from Tennessee, and the gentleman from Missouri, that when this Congress shall have adjourned every Democrat and Populist will be upon the stump denouncing the majority of this House for extravagance [applause on the Republican side], and it seems to me that this side of the House, including the Populists, ought to join the other side of the House in reducing extravagant expenditures.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, Democrats never criticise proper appropriations.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In consideration of the facts stated by the gentleman from Kansas that the plates are in existence, I am willing to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Texas; and I want to say that it is true, I suppose, as he states, that when this Congress adjourns every Democrat and Populist in this House will condemn Republican extravagance on the stump. I will, I know.

Mr. STEELE. Right or wrong.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No, sir; no such thing. The simple act of voting money is not extravagance. The voting of money foolishly, where there is no necessity for it, is extravagance, and that is what the Republican majority in this House does every day. [Cries of "Oh!" "Oh!" on the Republican side.] And it will be no injustice to hold them to a strict account at the bar of public opinion for the sins committed in this House. But I undertake to say, without fear of successful contradiction, that of all the publications issuing from the Agricultural Department, or at the suggestion of the Department, since it was organized, this horse book is the most valuable.

Scarcely a day goes by that somebody from the great agricultural districts of the West and South does not send to some member for this book. I would rather send the book to them than to write a long letter explaining why I can not send it. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] wanted to know how many books had been printed. What difference does that make? When I asked how many books the people wanted printed, he said some people were very liberal in appropriating money from the taxpayers. It is the taxpayers that want this book.

Men that own horses have rights in this country as well as the people who ride bicycles up and down the streets. [Laughter.] It is not a waste of money; it saves the horses' lives. It promotes their health and it makes them more valuable. Gentlemen find no sort of trouble in appropriating a million dollars to buy pith of cornstalks to make the armor for these vessels that are about as safe to go to sea in as in so many iron kettles; but when we want anything in the great agricultural section some of these men rise and bellow about the taxpayers. I want these books. [Laughter.]

Mr. CUMMINGS. I want to say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] that I represent one of the largest districts in the city of New York, and I shall vote for this appropriation. I do not think the farmers are the only ones that want this book. I tell you that every man employed in a livery stable in the city of New York, every blacksmith in that city, every car driver, every drayman, every hackman, every veterinary surgeon, is calling for this book to-day. Farmers are not the only pebbles on the beach.

Mr. BROMWELL. There seems to be considerable demand for this work, and as it has been said that every man who rides a horse or owns a horse or uses a horse or beats a horse is to have one of them, and as I assume that there are 70,000,000 of people, 10,000,000 of whom are interested in horses, I think this appropriation is not large enough. If it is to cost 70 cents a copy and there are 10,000,000 people demanding the book, we ought to appropriate $7,000,000 and give one to each of the 10,000,000 people.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by making it 75,000 copies, 50,000 for the use of the House and 25,000 for the use of the Senate, and appropriating $38,000. I find by looking at the record of the first publication in 1891 there were 100,000 copies of the books published and circulated throughout the United States. The next year there were printed only 45,000 copies, and those were circulated throughout the United States. The following year there were printed 75,000 copies, and those were circulated. In 1896 the demand was only for 75,000. Now, why should we increase that number? Why not adhere to what we have done before? I do not believe that we ought to consider it under this appropriation bill at all. I believe it ought to have been referred to the Committee on Printing, where it might have had intelligent action, but it seems to be too late for that now.

It seems to me that we shall satisfy all demands if we make it 75,000 copies instead of 150,000 copies. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] has said something about extravagance and about gentlemen going out on the stump and crying out "Extravagance!" Of course we shall have that. No gentlemen in this House gets up in his place now and says a single word about the extravagance of these appropriation bills, but notwithstanding that, every one of them is urging the making of these appropriations as large as possible. I appeal to gentlemen on this side of the House to be on their guard and not let their desires run away with their judgment, but to cut this down to a reasonable amount.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. There have been already two amendments offered before the one offered by the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri accepted the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is so.

Mr. BAILEY. On the question of order, I submit it is not permissible for one member to accept the amendment of another.

The CHAIRMAN. It can be done by unanimous consent; and no objection was raised.

Mr. BAILEY. Then the House did it, not the member from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

The question being taken, there were—ayes 80, noes 93.

Mr. PAYNE. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PAYNE and Mr. CLARK of Missouri were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 109, noes 111.

So the amendment of Mr. PAYNE was rejected.

Mr. PAYNE. I move to strike out the last word. As members have now returned to the House, and as I believe they now understand the question, I wish to say that, as gentlemen on the other side refuse to make any compromise on this matter, I hope the whole thing will be voted down, in order that a resolution on the subject may be referred to the Committee on Printing, who, after obtaining full information, can report to the House. I hope the proposition of the gentleman from Missouri will be voted down. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 107, noes 96.

Mr. PAYNE. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. CLARK of Missouri and Mr. PAYNE were appointed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I submit that the motion for the rising of the committee is not in order while we are dividing.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers having been ordered, it is not in order, as the Chair understands, to move that the committee rise pending the taking of the vote. The tellers will take their places.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 115, noes 102.

So the amendment of Mr. CLARK of Missouri was agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. I wish to give notice that if I can be recognized in the House I shall move to amend this amendment by providing for printing one-half the number that the amendment proposes.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move to amend by striking out, in line 24, of page 26, the word "assistant" in the clause which reads, "3 assistant messengers, at $720 each, $2,160." This amendment simply corrects a typographical error.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the committee now rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HULL reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6351) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and had directed him to report the same back with amendments and with the recommendation that the bill as amended be passed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. On that motion I call for a division.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 114, noes 100.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 118, nays 114, not voting 120, answering "present" 4: as follows:

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas with Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama.

Mr. MOODY with Mr. WHEELER of Alabama.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, am I announced as paired?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk so informs the Chair.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. With whom?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk reports that the gentleman is paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. MOODY.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. That is a mistake. Mr. MOODY has never spoken to me, and there has never been any such arrangement. It has never been suggested by anybody that I should pair with him.

Mr. MCCLELLAN (having previously voted "no"). I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I therefore withdraw my vote and ask to be recorded as present.

Mr. DE GRAFFENREID. The record discloses that I am paired. I voted "no." I desire to withdraw my vote and to be marked as present.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I am informed that the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. MOODY, left the Hall with the understanding that he was paired with me. I voted "no," but in view of that fact I withdraw my vote.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article be proposed to the legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, as part of the Constitution, namely:

The term of office of the President and of the Fifty-sixth Congress shall continue until the 30th day of April, in the year 1901, at noon. The Senators whose existing term would otherwise expire on the 4th day of March, in the year 1899, or thereafter, shall continue in office until noon of the 30th day of April succeeding such expiration; and the 30th day of April, at noon, shall thereafter be substituted for the 4th of March as the commencement and termination of the official term of the President, Vice-President, Senators, and Representatives in Congress.

If the House of Representatives shall not choose a President, whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the 30th day of April, at noon, next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to transmit to the Senate any information which may be in the possession of the Director of the Geological Survey regarding the hydrography of the drainage basin of the Potomac, with particular reference to the sources of pollution and the effect of such pollution upon the water supply of the city of Washington.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to say a single word, and I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to this resolution.

It has come to my attention that the Geological Survey have made a reconnoissance of the Potomac River and have taken photographs of the points of contamination for some distance beyond the city of Washington. The material they have collated is of immense value, and especially at this time will aid Congress very materially in reaching a solution of the very perplexing problem of pure water for the people of this great city. I have no doubt that the resolution will be adopted, of course, and that that material will come to the Senate, when it ought to be printed as a document to serve as a guide to the committee which has in its care this very important matter.

The resolution was agreed to.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me for a moment?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

Mr. QUAY. There are fifteen or twenty bills upon the pension Calendar which ought to be passed. They have been hanging over for quite a while, and while I do not intend to antagonize the motion which the Senator from Minnesota proposes to make, I should be very glad, before it prevails, that there may be an understanding had that the pension bills on the Calendar shall be disposed of before we adjourn to-day. The Senator from Minnesota has no objection, I understand.

Mr. DAVIS. I have no objection.

Mr. QUAY. Then I ask unanimous consent that the pension Calendar be taken up before adjournment to-day.

Mr. HOAR. We might go on now with those bills for half an hour.

Mr. QUAY. I understand that the Senator from Minnesota, who, I suppose, has the right of way here, desires to proceed immediately with the Hawaiian matter.

Mr. DAVIS. I should prefer that course. I have no doubt that the private pension bills on the Calendar can be disposed of to-day.

Mr. QUAY. Fifteen minutes will clear them up before we adjourn, if it can be agreed upon by unanimous consent.

Mr. COCKRELL. What business is the Senator from Pennsylvania suggesting?

Mr. QUAY. I am suggesting that we clear the pension Calendar to-day.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

FUR-SEAL AWARDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State in regard to the award of the commissioners appointed pursuant to the stipulations of the convention of February 8, 1896, between the United States and Great Britain, providing for the settlement of the claims presented by the latter against the former in virtue of the convention of February 29, 1892.

The report of the Secretary of State presents a clear epitome of the award and renders unnecessary any extended observations on my part further than to say that I cordially coincide with his recommendation and that our treaty obligations demand prompt and favorable action by Congress, which I urgently hope may be taken, to the end that these long-pending questions may be finally and satisfactorily terminated.

The total amount necessary to satisfy the award of the commissioners is $473,151.26, which I recommend be appropriated.

GENERAL PENSION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. There are four bills on the pension Calendar in the nature of general pension bills which, unless some provision is made, will never get consideration. I suggest that those four bills, Order of Business No. 203, No. 204, No. 205, and No. 417, be transferred to the general Calendar under Rule VIII, and that they be placed on that Calendar according to the date upon which they were reported. In that way they will at some time be reached for consideration. We pass them over on this Calendar, of course, and unless they should be called up by consent, it would be impossible to pass them.

Then I would suggest to the clerks that, perhaps, if they would entitle this Calendar the private pension Calendar, general pension bills will go to the other Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Senator propose to put them back on the other Calendar according to number?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and that order is made.

The bills referred to are as follows:

A bill (S. 503) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents," approved June 27, 1890, reported by Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, June 29, 1897;

A bill (S. 488) defining and regulating proof in certain pension cases, reported by Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, June 29, 1897;

A bill (S. 494) to supplement the act of June 27, 1890, as to pensions, reported by Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, June 29, 1897; and

A bill (S. 2385) to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions to soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war, and for other purposes," approved January 29, 1887, reported by Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, July 16, 1897.

RESTORATION OF LANDS WITHDRAWN FOR RESERVOIR PURPOSES.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2755) to authorize the President of the United States to cause certain lands heretofore withdrawn from market for reservoir purposes to be restored to the public domain, subject to entry under the homestead law with certain restrictions.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, after the word "it," in line 8, section 2, to strike out all down to and including the word "reservoirs," in line 14, in the following words:

But all the lands by said first section restored shall at all times remain subject to the right of the United States to construct and maintain dams for the purpose of creating reservoirs in aid of navigation; and no claim or right to compensation shall accrue from the overflowing of said lands on account of the construction and maintenance of such dams and reservoirs.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

And in all cases where first or preliminary homestead entries have been made of the lands hereby restored, and the entrymen have attempted to make final proof and final entry, such entrymen shall have a preferred and prior right to enter such lands under the homestead law on showing a compliance with the requirements of said law as to settlement, cultivation, proof, and payment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 3, line 1, after the word "kind," to insert the words "except as specified in the foregoing section;" so as to make the section read:

That no rights of any kind, except as specified in the foregoing section, shall attach by reason of settlement or squatting upon any of the lands hereinbefore described before the day on which such lands shall be subject to homestead entry at the several lands offices; and until said lands are opened for settlement no person shall enter upon and occupy the same, and any person violating this provision shall never be permitted to enter any of said lands or acquire any title thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Minnesota if the provision that any person violating the provisions of this act shall not be entitled to entry, and so forth, remains?

Mr. NELSON. That relates to these lands, a few lands at the head waters of the Mississippi River.

Mr. HOAR. Does that provision remain in the bill after the amendments are adopted?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. How is this disqualification under the general land laws to be established?

Mr. NELSON. The bill provides that until these lands have been regularly opened mere squatters shall have no right to go there, and if they violate the law by going, they shall not have the right to enter any of the lands under the law.

Mr. HOAR. There seems to be here a disqualification of a certain class of offenders to enter lands under the bill which otherwise they would have a right to enter. Now, how is that disqualification to be established? Should it not be established by some conviction?

Mr. NELSON. It is established by evidence in the Land Office, as in all such cases. The Government makes rules, and it is ascertained there as in a court of justice.

Mr. HOAR. Should it not then be stated in the bill? As the bill reads now, if I heard it correctly, it provides that any person who has done a particular act in violation of its provisions shall not enter the lands. That is a fatal defect in his title. If he has entered he gets no title. If he has entered and sold he conveys no title. The person who claims under his entry may have put up valuable buildings or made valuable improvements, but it is all void.

Mr. NELSON. No.

Mr. HOAR. That is the way I understand the proposed law.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator does not understand it aright.

Mr. HOAR. Let me state my point.

Mr. NELSON. The precise question is this——

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to state it?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. In that case it is all to be void, as I understand it. It seems to me that the bill should provide affirmatively for some method of conviction. If it should be in the courts, that is one thing. But the Senator suggests another and a very proper method. It seems to me it should say any person found by the Interior Department, or the Land Office, to have violated the law shall not be permitted to enter.

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection to those words being inserted.

Mr. HOAR. Otherwise you have, as the bill stands, a fatal defect, which goes to the whole title.

Mr. NELSON. Oh, no; after a patent is issued it would not affect it.

Mr. HOAR. I think it could affect it.

Mr. NELSON. But I have no objection to the amendment the Senator from Massachusetts suggests.

Mr. HOAR. Who will be the person to find that? Will it be the Commissioner of the Land Office?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly; or the local land officers. That is the common practice.

Mr. HOAR. There should be some officers designated.

Mr. NELSON. There are two officers—the register and the receiver—and they are known in land-office law as the local land officers. It should be the land officers where the entry is to be made.

Mr. HOAR. Is their action joint?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly; they act together. They are the first tribunal.

Mr. HOAR. I should think the true way would be to say that any person found by the Commissioner of the Land Office.

Mr. NELSON. Very well. That is satisfactory. Let those words be added.

Mr. HOAR. So as to read:

And any person found by the Commissioner of the Land Office guilty of a violation of the provisions of this act, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary wishes to know at what point the amendment is to come in.

Mr. HOAR. In the phrase "any person violating the provisions of this act," it should read that he shall be found guilty by the Commissioner of the Land Office. It should come in after the word "person" and before the word "violating."

The SECRETARY. The original reads:

And until said lands are opened for settlement no person shall enter upon and occupy the same, and any person violating this provision shall never be permitted to enter any of said lands or acquire any title thereto.

Mr. HOAR. After the word "person" insert "found guilty by the Commissioner of the Land Office of a violation of," in lieu of the word "violating."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. CLARK. I simply wish to suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that the bill speaks of the title of an officer, and we have no such officer in our Government.

Mr. NELSON. There is an omission of only one word. The word "General" should be put before the words "Land Office," so as to read "Commissioner of the General Land Office." We have such an officer.

Mr. CLARK. But it is not that way in the bill.

Mr. NELSON. The word "General" is omitted. I do not think it would be fatal. I ask unanimous consent that the word "General" may be inserted as indicated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is that satisfactory to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HOAR. Yes. "Commissioner of the Land Office" is certainly a sufficient description of that officer.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS FOR INDIAN WAR SERVICE.

Mr. MCBRIDE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 344) to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions to the survivors of the Indian wars of 1832 to 1842, inclusive, known as the Black Hawk war, Creek war, Cherokee disturbances, and the Seminole war," approved July 27, 1892.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act granting pensions to the survivors of the Indian wars of 1832 to 1842, inclusive, known as the Black Hawk war, Creek war, Cherokee disturbances, and the Seminole war," approved July 27, 1892, be, and the same is hereby, amended and extended so as to include the names of the surviving officers and enlisted men who served for thirty days or more and were honorably discharged under the United States military, Territorial, or provisional authorities in the Florida and Georgia Seminole Indian war of 1817 and 1818; the Fevre River Indian war of Illinois of 1827; the Sac and Fox Indian war of 1831; the Sabine Indian disturbances of 1836 and 1837; the Cayuse Indian war of 1847 and 1848 on the Pacific Coast; the Florida wars with the Seminole Indians from 1842 to 1858; the Texas and New Mexico Indian war of 1849 to 1855; the California Indian disturbances of 1851 and 1852; the Utah Indian disturbances of 1850 to 1853, and the Oregon and Washington Territory Indian wars from 1851 to 1856, inclusive, and also to include the surviving widows of such officers and enlisted men: Provided, That such widows have not remarried: And provided further, That where there is no record of enlistment or muster into service in any of the wars mentioned in this act, or the original act of which it is a supplement, the record of pay by the United States shall be accepted as evidence of said service.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MONUMENTS TO THE MEMORY OF GENERALS NASH AND DAVIDSON.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 36) to carry into effect two resolutions of the Continental Congress directing monuments to be erected to the memory of Gens. Francis Nash and William Lee Davidson, of North Carolina.

I would not detain the Senate at this late hour, but the joint resolution is very near the top of the Calendar, and I may not be here when it would come up regularly. It is a very short measure.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS IN ALABAMA.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 737) to equalize and regulate the duties of the judges of the district courts of the United States in the State of Alabama.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. PETTUS. In section 1, line 3, after the word "August," I move to strike out "1897" and insert "1898."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, in section 1, line 3, after the word "August," to strike out "1897" and insert "1898;" so as to make the section read:

That after the 1st day of August, 1898, the present judge of the district court of the United States for the southern district of Alabama, and his successors in office, shall be judge of the district courts in and for the southern and middle districts of the State of Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. The same amendment should be made in section 2.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, line 1, after the word "August," it is proposed to strike out "1897" and insert "1898;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That after the 1st day of August, 1898, the present judge of the district courts of the United States for the middle and northern districts of the State of Alabama, and his successors in office, shall be district judge of the United States in and for the northern district of Alabama and in and for the southern division of the northern district of Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTUS. The peculiar verbiage of the bill is made necessary by our general laws heretofore enacted. There are four Federal courts in Alabama. One judge holds three and the other judge holds one. The northern district of Alabama was divided by law, and they are called the northern division and the southern division of the northern district. They are really districts, however. They have separate courts, separate territorial jurisdiction, and the object of the pending bill is merely to equalize the labor of the two judges, so that one judge will hold two courts and the other judge will hold two courts. It does not make any change of any kind except in that regard. No expense is added, nor is a change made in any other offices.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 17, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 14, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is on agreeing to the amendments to the bill (H. R. 6351) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, the only amendment to which any exception is taken is the amendment in regard to the horse book. I therefore move that the House concur in all the amendments except that one.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman desires a separate vote on that proposition.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On the horse book amendment only.

The SPEAKER. The vote on the others will be taken together.

The other amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield to my colleague, Mr. PAYNE.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment reported by the committee.

Insert in line 12, page 25, after the word "exports," the following:

"That there be printed of the work known as the Special Report on the Diseases of the Horse 75,000 copies, of which 50,000 copies shall be for the use of the House and 25,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $37,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary for that purpose."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will accept that amendment, so far as I can.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WADSWORTH, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported the bill (H. R. 6546) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to reserve all points of order on that bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas reserves all points of order.

PRINTING OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Printing to offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 2,500 additional copies of House Document 160, Agricultural Capabilities of Alaska, and 2,000 additional copies of House Document 205, Work and Expenditures of the Agricultural Experiment Stations, for the use of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is submitted at the request of the Secretary of Agriculture. This work is now in progress at the Printing Office——

The SPEAKER. This proposition requires the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. PERKINS. Let me say that the expense of printing the additional copies of the work entitled Work and Expenditures of the Agricultural Experiment Stations is only $58, and of the work entitled Agricultural Capabilities of Alaska the additional expense is $172.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

MAP OF ALASKA.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I now ask for the consideration of the Senate resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 81) authorizing the Director of the Geological Survey to prepare a map of Alaska.

Resolved, etc., That the Director of the Geological Survey is hereby authorized and directed to prepare a map of Alaska showing all known topographic and geologic features, including what is known of the gold-bearing rocks and a descriptive text of the same, the text to contain also an explanation of the best-known routes and methods of reaching the gold fields; 40,000 copies of the map and text to be printed, 10,000 for the use of the Senate, 20,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 10,000 for distribution by the Geological Survey; and the Director is authorized to have said map and text prepared and printed in the engraving and printing division of the Geological Survey; and $2,500 is hereby appropriated for the purpose, and that this appropriation be made immediately available.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman that the original bill is not at the desk.

Mr. PERKINS. It was referred yesterday to our committee by the House.

The SPEAKER. It was referred, but the original bill is not at the desk.

Mr. PERKINS. Well, if the Chair will permit, I will send for it.

The SPEAKER. The matter will lie on the table informally, unless there is objection.

There was no objection.

INTERNATIONAL FISHERIES EXPOSITION AT BERGEN, NORWAY.

Mr. SIMPKINS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 75.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 75) accepting the invitation of the Government of Norway to take part in an International Fisheries Exposition to be held at the city of Bergen, Norway, from May to September, A. D. 1898.

Whereas the United States have been duly invited by the Government of Norway to take part in an International Fisheries Exposition to be held at the city of Bergen, Norway, from May 16 to September 30, A. D. 1898, which exposition will also include national sections for industries, agriculture, and the fine arts: Therefore,

Resolved, etc., That said invitation is accepted, and that the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries is hereby directed, in person, or by a deputy to be appointed by the President of the United States, to represent the United States at said exposition, and to cause a suitable and proper exhibition and display to be made at said exposition of the food-fishes of the United States, and the methods of catching, salting, curing, and preserving the same, and of the implements and appliances used in carrying on the fishery industries of the United States, and to this end may, at his discretion, use any portion of the collection in the National Museum at said exposition.

That the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, to pay all the expenses and costs of representing the United States at said exposition, as aforesaid, and to pay all the costs and expenses and outlays pertaining or incident to the making and carrying on of the exhibition and display aforesaid at said exposition.

That the said commissioner, or his deputy, is hereby directed to make a full report to the Department of State of the participation of the United States in said exposition, and of all the information and results acquired and obtained at or by means of said exposition touching the fishery industry throughout the world.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if this is a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. BAIRD. I will state to the gentleman from Texas that it is a unanimous report from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. SIMPKINS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the question of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BAILEY. I simply inquired if it was a unanimous report from the Committee on Fish and Fisheries upon this joint resolution.

Mr. SIMPKINS of Massachusetts. I will say that it is a unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. DINGLEY. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman if he has any objection to an amendment being appended providing that the expense or liability incurred under this resolution shall not exceed $10,000?

Mr. SIMPKINS of Massachusetts. Twenty thousand dollars.

Mr. DINGLEY. There is no provision of that kind, I believe.

Mr. SIMPKINS of Massachusetts. I have no objection whatever to the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. DINGLEY. With that understanding, I have no objection. I think that these international expositions ought to start out limiting absolutely the expenses that may be incurred.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CUMMINGS. What is it?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the resolution.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I object until I know what it is.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Objection is withdrawn.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I do not feel at liberty to object, as it is a report from the gentleman's committee, but I should be glad to have coupled with the request a stipulation that it be considered in the House, under the five-minute rule, as in Committee of the Whole. I do not believe it ought to pass.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I will state to the gentleman that it has been examined by the Smithsonian Secretary, and there is no objection to it.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly; and so there can be an examination by the Smithsonian Secretary or other secretaries and there will be no objection to any possible foreign-exposition proposition.

Mr. SIMPKINS of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the joint resolution be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, under the five-minute rule. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SIMPKINS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say only a word about it.

Mr. Speaker, this is a proposition to expend $20,000 to enable the United States to participate in an international exposition at Bergen, Norway. Upon the exposition question it seems to me that altogether we have run a little wild. My judgment is that the expositions, at home or abroad, that the United States participates in should be few, and when it does participate, that it should not be extravagant, but expend sufficient money for a real participation. Now, we had one great exposition at Philadelphia, the Centennial Exposition, and the World's Fair at Chicago, both very creditable expositions.

Since that time in the United States we have had an exposition at New Orleans, a failure, and it took about two Congresses after it failed for the United States to finish footing the bills. Then we had an exposition, if I recollect aright, at Cincinnati; then one at Louisville; then they had one at Atlanta, and then they had one at Nashville, and now we are to have one at Omaha. The propositions for expositions at which the United States participates, in our own borders, have been many in the meantime, and will be many more. If we are to keep this thing up in our own borders, paying expenses of people to attend them and making Government exhibits, economy and proper administration would indicate that we should make about three to five sets of exhibits and send them to all the State fairs and all the county fairs. It has run wild. No proposition for exposition at home or abroad can be made but what there is a Government official here, or somebody who wants to be a Government official there, who stands ready to uphold the glory and honor of his country in the expenditure of the money at the exposition.

Now let us see about the foreign expositions. One at Vienna, one at Paris, one at Berlin, a fisheries exposition a short time ago, in which we participated last year, at Brussels; and I tell you it took a great deal of effort in regard to that Brussels Exposition to keep it from growing into a great big affair. It started with $5,000, and the applications were many and the efforts persistent to have a very considerable sum of money employed. The men who were appointed under that $5,000 exposition, to have their expenses paid, were absolutely agonizing to uphold the glory and the honor of the country at the Brussels Exposition.

Now, here comes this one, the Fishery Exposition in Norway. What we could teach them or learn from them I do not know We have got another great exposition scheme, which has been referred to the committee I have the honor to preside over. We start out with the wonderful exposition that is to be held in 1900 in Paris and have accepted that invitation. We tried to put all the limitations on it possible; we provided that the American agent should go there and get space, purely as a trustee, to enable the citizens of the United States, as a matter of administration, to participate in that exposition. We have got the report made by the commissioner, in which he lays out a much broader field for the United States, including as it does, reading between the lines, an expenditure of a million of money. To do what? Something more than administration.

Now, we ought to have, if we participate in the Paris Exposition at all, a decent participation. When the United States has accepted that invitation, and when it acts as trustee and provides a commissioner, not a jury of commissioners, to procure space at the disposal of that trustee, so that the citizens of the United States if they have anything to exhibit can take it there and exhibit it, our duties ought to cease.

Here is an exposition, an international fisheries exposition. It starts out and provides that "whereas the United States has been duly invited," etc. Now, if we go at all, the United States ought to go decently. The proposed $20,000 is as little as we could go upon; but, my word for it, if you go for $20,000 they will come for a deficiency of $20,000 more, and then there will be the report that is to be published, and so on. While I did not object to the consideration of this bill as it comes from the Committee on Fish and Fisheries, my judgment is that we had better refuse it and content ourselves a little later with providing fairly for the Paris Exposition of 1900, and there stop.

It is no discredit to Norway to say that we do not want to make a showing at that fishery exposition. There is enough in front of us without spending anything upon this exposition, in my judgment. Of course there are men who are anxious that we should. Why, I can furnish a regiment of men in my district in Illinois, all of whom would accept service if they could get a chance; but so far as my deliberate judgment is concerned, the interest of the United States, through courtesy or otherwise, does not require or justify us in entering upon this appropriation for this exposition.

Mr. SIMPKINS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the members of the House to this very simple proposition, a proposition which, when it was submitted to the committee, met with their unanimous approbation. And for this reason: The Kingdom of Norway has invited the United States to take part in the fisheries exposition to be held in Bergen. The Kingdom of Norway came to Philadelphia and also to the World's Fair and made a fishery exposition. The Kingdom of Norway is possibly second to no other nation in this world in its fisheries. If it is second to any other, it is the United States. Those who were at Philadelphia and the World's Fair remember with pleasure and pride, and with gratitude to Norway, what Norway did for us. It is only common decency and common courtesy that the United States should now on our part return the compliment and accept the invitation of Norway.

That is the first proposition. Next, Mr. Speaker, what is the subject? It is the development of our fisheries and fish culture. There is no place where we can learn more and do more for our own fishing interests than we can by joining this meeting of nations and cooperating in such an exposition as we now have the opportunity of doing. I do not like to take the time of this House. The printed report covers the ground fully, but I recognize the position of the gentleman from Illinois. Very naturally, being chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, he scrutinizes very carefully all proposed expenses and expenditures. But there is no place where we can expend a small amount to better advantage than by accepting this invitation and taking advantage of the opportunity afforded by this exposition. I would like to yield three minutes of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER].

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Speaker, there can be much said both for and against our habit of expositions, foreign and domestic. But the habit appears to be substantially fixed, both among the people and in the Congress of the United States. I for one should regret exceedingly if any opposition should develop here on the proposition of returning, even in this meager way, the courtesies so often extended toward this Government by the Kingdom of Norway. That is one of the poorest countries in Europe, so far as mere material wealth is concerned; and yet on no occasion, such as arises in connection with these expositions, has the Kingdom of Norway refused to generously participate in the expositions of the United States.

So far as the practical result of the exposition is concerned, I for one do not believe that during the next decade we shall participate in any national or international exposition of more practical value to the industries of our people than this fishery exhibition that is to be made by Norway at Bergen. Therefore, while I regret the meagerness of the appropriation, I beg the House not to commit the international discourtesy involved in refusing or postponing our acceptance of the invitation of Norway to participate in the Bergen Exposition.

Mr. SIMPKINS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. EDDY] such time as he may desire.

Mr. EDDY. Mr. Speaker, I shall not occupy the time of the House possibly longer than two or three minutes. The Government of Norway, as I understand it, has extended an official invitation to the people of the United States to participate in a fishery exposition to be held in the city of Bergen, Norway. Now, in the great expositions that have been held in the United States, both in Philadelphia and Chicago, this country of Norway, while financially, perhaps, among the poorer countries of Europe, has responded and furnished exhibits to these expositions. The city of Bergen, in Norway, is located at the head of one of the greatest fishery centers in the world. Now, it seems to me, after they have so generously expended money in attending national expositions in this country, and have also sent to this country so many citizens of that nation, who have become adopted citizens of the United States and who constitute an exceedingly valuable addition to our population, it is no more than fair that we accept this invitation and send our representative to attend this exposition.

Mr. SIMPKINS of Massachusetts. I yield now to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], the chairman of the committee that reported this resolution.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say only a word in reference to this matter. I agree with my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that it is not well to extend the system of giving aid to such expositions as were had at Atlanta and Nashville and the one to be had at Omaha. And when he gets ready to join with me in stopping that sort of thing I shall be with him, even though they should undertake to have an exhibition of this character at such a great center as Auburn, N. Y., or Danville, Ill. [Laughter.] I think it is about time we should stop aiding town or county or State fairs, or even fairs embracing the localities of several States.

But I do not believe we have yet reached the point where we desire to refrain from accepting invitations for international expositions. I think the gentleman has already started the wheel in motion for the exposition in Paris in 1900, of which his committee has jurisdiction. Appropriations have already been made; and I have no doubt that under the direction of his committee large appropriations will be made for that object.

Perhaps it was unfortunate that this measure went to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries instead of the Committee on Appropriations. But for that reference the time of the House might not have been taken this morning in any objections to the bill. In 1880 there was an international fishery exhibit at Berlin. We spent $20,000 for the purpose of being represented there, and people familiar with this subject say that the money was well expended; that the United States learned much, and thereby the business of our fisheries was greatly advanced. We propose to spend this sum now to be represented at the fisheries exhibit of a kingdom which, small as it is, leads all the nations of the world in this fishery industry; we propose to learn from them what we can; we propose to show them our implements, our methods. And for this purpose we propose to spend the sum, and only the sum, of $20,000. We put a limit in the bill in the shape of a proviso that the expenses arising from this whole matter shall not exceed the sum of $20,000. Now, I do not think my friend from Illinois ought to object to this measure. I hope it will go through by a unanimous vote of the House.

Mr. SIMPKINS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BAIRD], a member of the committee.

Mr. BAIRD. Mr. Speaker, this is no new kind of an appropriation; it simply follows the precedents of Congress. In 1880 we made an appropriation of $20,000 for the purpose of participating in the international fishery exposition at Berlin, which resulted in great benefit to the fishing interests of this country. This resolution, which has been unanimously passed by the Senate and has received the unanimous support of the committee to which I have the honor to belong, appropriates the same amount which was appropriated then. This resolution is in exactly the same words as was that of 1880, and that resolution met with no opposition. I hope there will be no opposition to this.

Mr. SIMPKINS of Massachusetts. I now ask for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. This joint resolution is being considered as in the Committee of the Whole, and it will be necessary to make a motion to close general debate.

Mr. SIMPKINS of Massachusetts. I move that general debate be closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will now be read by paragraphs for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That said invitation is accepted, and that the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries is hereby directed, in person, or by a deputy to be appointed by the President of the United States, to represent the United States at said exposition, and to cause a suitable and proper exhibition and display to be made at said exposition of the food-fishes of the United States, and the methods of catching, salting, curing, and preserving the same, and of the implements and appliances used in carrying on the fishery industries of the United States, and to this end may, at his discretion, use any portion of the collection in the National Museum at said exposition.

Mr. SIMPKINS of Massachusetts. I desire to move an amendment which has been agreed to by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 12, strike out the words "at his discretion" and insert "with the consent of the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution."

At the end of line 13 insert the word "fisheries;" so that the clause will read:

"And to this end may, with the consent of the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, use any portion of the fisheries collection in the National Museum at said exposition."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment just read.

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to submit a parliamentary inquiry. I understood the gentleman had agreed that the wording should be so amended as to provide that the expense should not in any event exceed $20,000.

Mr. SIMPKINS of Massachusetts. I propose to offer that at the close of the next section.

The question being taken on the committee amendments to the first section, they were agreed to.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

I want to submit, if in order, an amendment to both sections. But I suppose I can only offer an amendment now to the first section.

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

Mr. BELL. Then I ask unanimous consent to have the amendment I shall offer to the second section read for information in connection with the first one, which I now offer to this section.

Mr. CANNON. Let us perfect the first section first.

Mr. BELL. My amendment is intended to perfect the first section, but I only ask to have the amendment that I shall offer to the second section read in connection with it for information.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "exposition," on page 1, line 6, to and including all of line 14, on page 2, and insert in lieu thereof "Should the President think it advisable to send a representation to make observations, such person to be a competent employee in the technical Department of the Propagating of Fish."

And amend the second section—

To strike out "$20,000" and insert "$1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to bear said expense."

Mr. SIMPKINS of Massachusstts. I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this amendment should be adopted and that it is perfectly feasible and proper at this time.

My proposition is this: That instead of moving our fisheries to Norway, as an exhibit, we send a representative from the Department of Fish and Fisheries to make observations in that country. Now, that may be said to be somewhat selfish. I do not believe it. When we have an exposition of our fisheries here, or any other exposition in this country, we invite all other nations to join with us. If they do not see fit to bring their experimental apparatus and methods over to exhibit, themselves, it is unquestionably good judgment on their part to send a representative to observe our methods.

Now, it seems to me that with $1,000 there can be taken from the fisheries here a man or men of technical information or knowledge who would be of service in making these observations. They can go over to Norway and make the observations, that will be of very great benefit to this Government and to our people engaged in the fisheries; while, on the other hand, if we send our experimental apparatus over there, we make an exhibit which can be of very little benefit to us, but which will result in a very considerable expenditure of the public money. I believe with $1,000 we can represent all that is desired, and at the same time reap every benefit that is to be gained by this exposition, and I do not think it selfish for us to make the observation without making an exhibit. When we have an exposition, we will invite them, and they can come and make observations themselves; and these exhibits will be of mutual benefit and without expense to either Government. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. SIMPKINS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

The SPEAKER. The difficulty with the amendment offered by the gentleman is that it proposes to amend both the first and second sections of the bill.

Mr. BELL. No, sir; I simply sent the second amendment up to be read for information, the one explaining the other. I stated at the time that I would offer the first part of the amendment which has been read to the first section, and simply asked that the second should be read as explanatory of it. I propose to offer the second part later on, when we have reached the second section.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the amendments should be drawn separately.

Mr. BELL. It is only necessary to tear the sheet apart to have the two amendments separately.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado.

The Clerk again read the first part of the amendment offered by Mr. BELL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that amendment is in order to this section.

Mr. SIMPKINS of Massachusetts. I trust the amendment will not be adopted. It proposes that we shall go to Norway and get something for nothing; that we are to get the advantages, and they are many, which are to be derived from taking part in this exposition, and to do this without the expenditure of any money on our part and without taking part in the exposition itself. It provides that we shall send an agent over there to make observations and have him bring back the results, while we on our part do nothing to make the exposition a success.

I trust the amendment will be voted down.

The question was taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. BELL; and it was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment, to insert, after the word "State," in line 5, the matter which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Insert, at the end of line 5, page 1:

"And whose compensation, if not in the public service, shall not exceed $2,500, including personal and traveling expenses."

Mr. CANNON. The object of this amendment is as follows: The text of the bill as reported provides—

That said invitation is accepted, and that the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries is hereby directed, in person, or by a deputy to be appointed by the President of the United States, to represent the United States at said exposition, and to cause a suitable and proper exhibition and display to be made at said exposition of the food fishes of the United States, and the methods of catching, salting, curing, and preserving the same, and of the implements and appliances used in carrying on the fishery industries of the United States.

If amended as I propose, it will read:

That said invitation is accepted, and that the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries is hereby directed, in person, or by a deputy to be appointed by the President of the United States, and whose compensation if not in the public service shall not exceed $2,500, including personal and traveling expenses, to represent the United States at said exposition.

And so forth.

Later on in the bill an appropriation of $20,000 is made. Under the bill as reported a deputy might be appointed whose salary might be fixed at $5,000 or $10,000, or any other sum that they might see proper to fix. The truth is that if this exposition is to be held, some person in the public service familiar with our fisheries system and already under a salary should be detailed to take charge of that exposition. But the bill is broad enough to justify a political appointment of a skilled man or one who is not skilled whose salary might be fixed, in the discretion which is allowed, at one-half of this $20,000 or any other sum.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I wish to ask the gentleman if he does not think the bill should be amended so as to clearly state the fact that any deputy to be appointed by the President should be chosen from the departmental force in the Department of Fisheries and be skilled in such matters?

Mr. CANNON. Well, I think in the exercise of a sound discretion the Executive ought to appoint such a man, but I do not know that we could dictate to the Executive who should be appointed; and as this bill clearly contemplates that somebody not connected with our fisheries service may go, I want to know that an undue amount of this $20,000 will not be devoted to the payment of his salary. In other words, if we participate at all in this exposition, let us have participation, and not compensation to employees beyond a reasonable amount.

Mr. PAYNE. I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. If I may be recognized, I will yield to the gentleman enough time to answer my question. The gentleman, from his long connection with the Committee on Appropriations, has had a great deal of experience in drafting laws and putting them through the House in reference to international expositions and other expositions. I want to ask if it ever occurred to him before this moment to insert any provision of this kind in any of those bills?

Mr. CANNON. I do not recollect that there was any provision of this kind in any of those bills.

Mr. PAYNE. Has there not always been an appropriation of a lump sum of money, and always a provision for the appointment of some person or persons to take charge of the exhibits, in every one of these bills?

Mr. CANNON. Well, the gentleman may be correct, and I can not recollect what has always been done; but, in the exercise of a sound legislative discretion, if we are going to participate in this exposition, which I believe we ought not to do under all the conditions, let us participate so as to have real participation. That is all.

Why, let us relieve the Executive from an army of applicants that would be seeking to go there at a salary of $5,000 or $10,000, many of whom would know no more about fisheries than I do or my friend from New York, and my knowledge would be sitting on a dry log in the hot sunshine waiting six hours for a bite. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. I want to ask the gentleman this question. He was in the House in 1880, and of course knows all about the Berlin Exposition. I want to know if any abuse, of the character which he fears may arise under this resolution, occurred under that?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I will say to my friend, so far as I recollect, I believe that there has been no international exposition, and very rarely a home exposition, but what there have come trooping in deficiencies that, with proper administration, would not have existed.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman does not seem to want to answer my question. Now, the fact of it is, and I want to state it to the House, that this resolution copies exactly the joint resolution of 1880, and then there was no complaint of any such abuse as the gentleman seems to fear. The fear has come upon him all of a sudden, and at this moment I do not know whether it is because the joint resolution is reported by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries and did not go to the Committee on Appropriations, or what the trouble is. The resolution is the same as was reported from the gentleman's committee in 1880, it happening to go there, I believe, according to the history of the legislation upon that subject, and it is the same as similar bills carefully drawn and carefully scrutinized by the Committee on Appropriations. In fact, the general characteristics of it are the same. Now, it seems to me that this little joint resolution, although it does not come from one of the leading committees of the House, ought to be got through this House without so much hypercriticism of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, if I may be recognized to reply to the honorable gentleman from New York [laughter], the chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and one of the white-button mandarins of the leading committee of the House [laughter]—I believe that was the remark of the late member from Colorado, Mr. Belford—I would say this bill was called to my attention, before it was referred, by a Senator who is very much interested in the matter involved in the legislation. I suggested, so far as I have the power to suggest, that it ought to go to the gentleman's committee, and I saw the gentleman and had a conference with him about it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Ah, that is different.

Mr. CANNON (continuing). And the gentleman knows very well that I was quite content, and so far as I had power as an individual or Representative was somewhat efficient in securing reference of that bill to his committee.

Now, then, so much for the gentleman's attempt to play upon the jealousies that may surround committees in the premises. As a pleasantry, I am very glad to hear it; if it be earnestly made, it is not worthy of the gentleman's usual ability and fairness.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is rather weak as a pleasantry.

Mr. CANNON. So much for that. The gentleman says that heretofore bills have had this same provision. Now, then, that may be. I do not recollect. But I say that this bill is so drawn that one-half or more or less can be applied to the payment of a deputy, to be appointed by the President, not in the fishery service. I do not say it will be. But I become a little suspicious when that proposition of a limitation of $20,000 is applied, if somebody is not appointed from the fishery service, that it is made with that object. That arouses a little of my suspicion, and I am inclined to believe it shows the necessity for putting in a limitation. That is all. I do not exhibit any desire to criticise what anybody may do in the administration of this sum if appropriated; but in my legislative capacity, if it is to be appropriated, it seems to me it ought to bring an actual participation in this fish exhibit.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. SIMPKINS of Massachusetts. I would like to say, in reply to the gentleman from Illinois, that I propose——

Mr. HENDERSON. Let the gentleman from Illinois answer the question of the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. The gentleman from New York says that in 1880 there was no safeguard of this kind in the resolution passed. Now, I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois if we have not had some very unfortunate experiences since 1880 in the way of paying enormous fees at international expositions in addition to good salaries, and if, for that reason, we should not guard the appropriations in a way that was not provided in the resolution in 1880?

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman, in reply to his question, that when you come to examine the expenditures at all our international expositions heretofore made it will be seen that if men were detailed it was without being fully guarded in the provision for the expenditure.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Do I understand that the gentleman's amendment provides that the sum for the payment of the salary of this party must come out of the $20,000?

Mr. CANNON. It will necessarily come out of the $20,000; and if my amendment is agreed to, no greater amount than $2,500 can be paid to anyone who shall be appointed, if out of civil life. The party sent ought to be a man in the fishery service, and if that is done he will get no other compensation than his salary, because he is already receiving a salary from the Government; but if somebody is appointed outside, from civil life, if my amendment is adopted, all he will get is the $2,500, and that comes out of the $20,000.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I think it is a very proper amendment.

Mr. SIMPKINS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that if the gentleman fears there will be more money expended than is proper that the amendment I shall offer will provide for that very thing.

Mr. CANNON. That will not answer my purpose. I am afraid that an undue part of the $20,000 may be eaten up in salaries.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Judiciously used.

Mr. SIMPKINS of Massachusetts. We have provided that the expenditures shall not exceed $20,000. Now, the sum of $20,000 was appropriated for the exposition at Berlin in 1880, and this resolution is identical with the resolution that was passed in that case and which met with the approbation of this House. I am not in favor of high salaries.

Mr. CANNON. This is only for the man that takes charge, one individual.

Mr. SIMPKINS of Massachusetts. That includes his expenses, his traveling and living expenses for six months. I believe we can trust the President of the United States to appoint a suitable person to take charge of this exposition, and I hope that this amendment will not prevail. I ask for a vote on the proposition. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. SIMPKINS of Massachusetts)—ayes 90, noes 51.

The amendment was therefore agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, to pay all the expenses and costs of representing the United States at said exposition, as aforesaid, and to pay all the costs and expenses and outlays pertaining or incident to the making and carrying on of the exhibition and display aforesaid at said exposition.

Mr. SIMPKINS of Massachusetts. I desire to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 23, page 2, insert:

"Provided the total expense of liabilities incurred under this resolution shall not exceed the sum of $20,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on adopting the preamble.

The preamble was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SIMPKINS of Massachusetts a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

MAP OF ALASKA.

Mr. PERKINS. I now ask unanimous consent to take from the table the joint resolution (S. R. 81) authorizing the Director of the Geological Survey to prepare a map of Alaska.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon unanimous consent for the present consideration of joint resolution S. R. 81.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS OUACHITA RIVER IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. BAIRD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of H. R. 5516, a bill to amend and reenact section 5 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the mayor and city council of Monroe and the police jury of the parish of Ouachita, La., to construct a traffic bridge across the Ouachita River opposite said city," approved February 8, 1897.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BAIRD, the motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills upon the Private Calendar.

THOMAS B. REED.

The first bill upon the Calendar was a bill (H. R. 852) for the relief of Thomas B. Reed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of Thomas B. Reed, who served as sergeant, first sergeant, and first lieutenant, Fifth Pennsylvania Reserve Corps, and captain Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, of the United States Army, in the late war of the rebellion, for a balance of wages earned by him in the suppression of said rebellion, and during his entire time of service in the said Army, and not paid to him, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for due investigation; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said court to render a judgment, irrespective of the lapse of time, for the amount, if any, found due by it of the United States upon the said claim.

The report (by Mr. MAHON) was read, as follows:

[House Report No. 21, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 852) for the relief of Thomas B. Reed, submit the following report:

Reed served as an enlisted man in the Fifth Pennsylvania Reserve Volunteer Corps, United States Army, from June 5, 1861, to March 5, 1863, when he was honorably discharged for promotion and commissioned first lieutenant in said corps and served therein till June 2, 1865; next he was commissioned second lieutenant, Twenty-ninth Infantry, United States Army, July 22, 1867, and from then to June 18, 1878, he served as a commissioned officer in the United States Army. During the whole time he served as such commissioned officer the following provisions of law were, respectively, in force:

"That every commissioned officer of the line or staff, exclusive of general officers, shall be entitled to receive one additional ration per diem for every five years he may have served or shall serve in the Army of the United States. (5 U. S. Stat., sec. 15, p. 258, act of July 5, 1838.)

"There shall be allowed and paid to each commissioned officer below the rank of brigadier-general, including chaplains and others having assimilated rank or pay, 10 per cent of their current yearly pay for each term of five years of service. (Act of July 15, 1870, now section 1262 of the Revised Statutes.)"

He was paid for his services in the said intervals of time between March 5, 1863, and June 8, 1878, merely what other officers of his grade were generally paid; and he was paid or allowed nothing whatever in these two intervals of time on account of his said prior length of services in the United States Army as an enlisted man. For this reason he alleges he was short paid for his services rendered during these two intervals between March 5, 1863, and June 18, 1878, partially in the suppression of the late rebellion, and requests the passage of this bill, the sole object of which is to remove any statutable limitation bar that exists, or may exist, to prevent the Court of Claims from hearing and determining his demand in the premises as if it accrued within six years.

The commutation value or price thus put in controversy, of the one additional ration per diem for every five years of prior service, computes to about the sum of $600, and your committee, having fully considered the matter, can see no reason why the question involved should not be heard and determined, as this officer requests, in the Court of Claims.

Your committee would further observe that this bill nowise asks Congress to determine the justness of this claim (which is for a balance of wages for military services rendered by a distinguished officer); it only asks Congress for what is frequently granted by it to the capitalists and property claimant, and that is "that the claimant may go before a competent tribunal and prove the justness of his claim if he can."

The committee recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. MAHON. I want to state that this bill passed the House in the Fifty-third Congress, and at the Fifty-fourth Congress it passed the House and the Senate, but it failed to reach the President in time for his signature. It is a simple question of law which the War Department does not think it has a right to settle. The whole amount is $600, and we think the officer is entitled to be heard in the court.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to ask the gentleman if this case does not stand on the same footing with many other claims before Congress. I know of eight or ten bills of that kind myself where the statutes of limitation have run against them, and of course they can not sue now.

But if it be right to allow Thomas B. Reed—not the Speaker of this House; and I think one of the reasons this bill has been favorably acted on is because it bears the name of the Speaker of this House—if this case should be allowed to go to the Court of Claims, then every case of this character should go there. If Mr. Thomas B. Reed has an equity in his favor entitling him to consideration of this kind, then the same equity should be extended along the whole line. But this House, session after session, has determined that it will not recognize any equity in behalf of other claimants of this character.

As to the merits of this bill, I am not prepared to advance any views. The Department says that it is contrary to law; that the service supposed to have been rendered in this case can not be taken into consideration in view of the present statute. Now you propose to pick out one case and allow it to go to the Court of Claims, while you say to all persons having similar claims that they can not be allowed to travel the same road. I think that if the Committee on War Claims recognize the equity in one case they should recognize it in all, and let Congress understand how many thousand dollars are involved in the determination of this class of cases.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, this is, so far as I know, the only claim of this character that has been favorably reported from the Committee on War Claims during the five years that I have been a member of it.

Mr. LOUD. Most of these cases have gone before the Committee on Claims; how this went to the Committee on War Claims I do not know.

Mr. MAHON. Perhaps in the other cases service was not rendered during the war.

Now, Mr. Chairman, here are two acts of Congress allowing this man this money; but in the hurry of mustering out, either the Department officers did not know of the existence of the law or, knowing the law, they nullified it by refusing to act under it. Under the law this officer, by reason of his long service from 1861 to 1878, is entitled to per diem and 10 per cent, amounting to $600. He simply asks to go into the Court of Claims and have that court determine whether under the statute he is entitled to this $600; and if it should be declared by this court of law that he is so entitled, then it will be the duty of the War Department to pay him this money, or, possibly, he may have to come back here for an appropriation.

I do not know whether there are a dozen or twenty or fifty cases of this kind. This man is not asking equity. He is simply asking that the bare law as passed by Congress be administered. As members of this House are aware, I am one of those who believe that when this Government owes a man money upon an honest claim it should be paid; and it is cowardice on the part of Congress to place obstruction in the way of securing such payment. If this man owed the Government $600, no matter though the claim originated one hundred years ago, the Government, if it should get on his track, would compel him to pay. He would not be able to plead any statute of limitations. The Committee on War Claims is unanimous in favor of permitting a court of law to determine whether the Government owes this man this money. If it does, the money ought to be paid.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is this bill about?

Mr. MAHON. This man was an officer of the Army; and this claim rests upon two statutes, which I will read:

That every commissioned officer of the line or staff, exclusive of general officers, shall be entitled to receive one additional ration per diem for every five years he may have served or shall serve in the Army of the United States. (5 U. S. Stat., section 15, page 253, act of July 5, 1838.)

There shall be allowed and paid to each commissioned officer below the rank of brigadier-general, including chaplains and others having assimilated rank or pay, 10 per centum of their current yearly pay for each term of five years of service. (Act of July 15, 1870, now section 1262 of the Revised Statutes.)

That is all there is of this case. This is simply a question of law. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside to be favorably reported to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM S. GRANT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 357) for the relief of William S. Grant.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $77,989.38 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to William S. Grant, in full satisfaction of his claims against the United States arising out of his contract to supply military posts in Arizona in the years 1860 and 1861, said sum to be paid under the direction of the Secretary of War, who shall take proper releases and receipts from the said William S. Grant.

Mr. DALZELL. Let us hear the report.

The report (by Mr. MAHON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 357) for the relief of William S. Grant, submit the following report:

The facts out of which this bill for relief arises will be found stated in Senate report from the Committee on Claims of the present Congress, a copy of which is hereto attached for information and adopted as the report of this committee.

The investigation of the claim by your committee leads them to the same conclusions as those reached by the Senate committee, and your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

[Senate Report No. 17, Fifty-fifth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Claims submit the following report, recommending the passage of the bill (S. 357) for the relief of William S. Grant.

The following are presented as the essential facts upon which this claim is based:

1. On March 5, 1860, the said Grant and one Taliafero proposed to the Secretary of War to furnish all the military supplies needed until March 26, 1862, at certain posts in Arizona, at prices 12 per cent below the then ruling rates.

2. March 9, 1860, the Secretary of War issued an order authorizing the supplies to be so furnished. Subsequently Taliafero withdrew, by consent of the War Department. Grant gave bond, and in the spring of 1860 began performance. To insure prompt work he moved to Arizona, where he invested large sums in flour mills, etc. He arranged for a large credit with Pierce & Bacon, of Boston, and made them his Eastern purchasing agents. During the history of this case Grant remained in Arizona.

3. From time to time goods were delivered to the said posts by Grant, and payments therefor were made to him. To insure the delivery of supplies fit for the purpose, the Secretary of War, on September 18, 1860, issued an order requiring that all articles under this contract purchased in Boston or New York should be there inspected before shipment. To this modification of the contract Grant assented.

4. September 22, 1860, Pierce & Bacon, as the purchasing agents of Grant, received from the War Department a ratified requisition for supplies. They then learned of the inspection order, and were notified by the War Department that inspection would be made by Col. D. D. Tompkins, then stationed in New York, or by some officer by him designated.

5. By September 24, 1860, Pierce & Bacon had under their control sufficient goods to meet the requisitions, and on that day wrote to Colonel Tompkins requesting an early inspection, and notifying him of the necessity of shipment before October 1. It was known to the War Department that it was necessary to ship the goods by vessel from New York to Port Lavaca, Tex., and thence by wagon trains 1,201 miles to Arizona. Inspection before October 1 would have landed the goods at Lavaca early in November. Grant's trains were at Lavaca ready to start November 10. Had they started in November delivery at the forts in Arizona would have been assured long before capture would have been possible.

6. On September 26, 1860, Pierce & Bacon sent a telegram to Colonel Tompkins to the same effect as their letter of September 24. Letters and telegrams urging immediate inspection followed, September 27 and October 13. On October 15 Pierce & Bacon requested Colonel Tompkins to inspect goods without awaiting formal orders. To all requests Colonel Tompkins replied that he must have the order from the War Department. On October 15 Pierce & Bacon complained direct to the War Department.

7. The clerical act of forwarding to the inspecting officer the inspection order of September 18, 1860, was inexcusably delayed from that date until November 21, 1860. Inspection was made December 3, 4, and 5, and the goods shipped December 5, 1860. They arrived at Port Lavaca January 15, 1861. On the same day the train, having waited since November 10 at heavy expense, started. The train consisted of 305 yoke of oxen, 20 horses, 6 mules, 41 wagons. It proceeded, a part about 60 miles and a part 36 miles, when, owing to the lateness of the season, the grass proved insufficient and the trains went into camp, the animals being sent some 20 miles to get feed near the streams. It was impossible to avoid a long halt to await the growth of grass along the route. During the winter 70 yoke of oxen perished from want of food.

The distance from Lavaca to San Antonio was 135 miles, and thence to Fort Buchanan 1,066 miles. The route west of San Antonio was through an unsettled wilderness. The route from Lavaca to San Antonio was through five counties, with a population (white) of 12,935, with scattering small towns, where purchase of food for so large a train was then impossible.

Port Lavaca was distant 151 miles from Galveston, and neither there nor near there could such a train have been provisioned for a march to San Antonio. No food was available save forage. Such was then the usual and necessary course of business. Had food been purchasable, to haul it would have increased the train a half, the increase to be useless beyond San Antonio.

The ordinance of secession was adopted in Texas March 4, 1861. The governor was deposed March 16, 1861.

Mr. Grant was guilty of no negligence, legal or moral, in holding his trains in camp. Wholly and necessarily for want of forage, the trains halted until the middle of March. Then, the grass still being short, a start was made; but for want of food the train was obliged to halt for ten days. Pushing forward with diligence, they arrived at San Antonio April 15. Fifty miles beyond, at Rio Hondo, on April 20, 1861, the entire train, by order of the governor of Texas, was captured by the Texan Rangers, and all the Government supplies—wagons, oxen, and horses—turned over to the Confederate authorities and by them used.

S. Pierce & Bacon had under their control during October, 1860, sufficient goods in readiness for inspection. Inspection during that month would have enabled Grant to fully perform his contract. By reaching the highlands of the interior seasonably, as would have been the case had inspection been so made, the trains would have reached the forts in February, and thus have avoided capture. The War Department was responsible for the delay of more than two months, and that delay rendered the delay of the halt in Texas unavoidable.

While the committee is not prepared to adjudge as a legal conclusion that this delay was the proximate cause of the loss, the conclusion of fact is reached that the delay was caused by the neglect of the Government, and that without such delay the loss would not have occurred.

Application for relief was made to the Thirty-seventh Congress, but without action by the committee. The papers were withdrawn and suit brought in the Court of Claims. In that suit claim was made for unearned profits, now abandoned, and for damages for rescission of contract, also here abandoned, and points raised not material here. In an opinion, necessarily adhering to strict legal principles, the Court of Claims held that the neglect of the Government to inspect the supplies was a cause too remote from the capture to hold the Government legally liable for the results of the neglect. On appeal this decision was affirmed by the Supreme Court.

Mr. Justice Davis, recognizing the strong equities of the case, in the opinion said:

"Whether there are equities in this particular case, and, if so, whether they require that the claimant should be reimbursed, in whole or in part, for the capture of his property under the circumstances, are questions that must be addressed to Congress, for it is not the province of the judicial department of the Government to determine them."

Without taking issue with the decision of the Court of Claims or of the Supreme Court, the committee rests its recommendation upon "the equities" of this case, which the last court says are not within the judicial department to determine.

It was strongly urged in argument by counsel before the committee that since the above decisions the modern doctrine of equitable estoppel has been ingrafted upon the common law and that the application of that principle to the facts of this case was not considered by the court in its decision. Equitable estoppels prevent a party from invoking his strict rights at law, when by his own conduct he has caused the other party to the contract to change his course for the worse, or by such conduct has materially changed his situation for the worse. Under this doctrine it was contended that the Government is estopped from denying that the claimant had failed to deliver the goods according to the terms of his contract.

As the recommendation in favor of the claim is rested on other grounds, it is unnecessary to determine whether this contention is sound in law, but it is not to be denied that the admitted facts of the case, upon which this claim of equitable estoppel is based, furnish a most material feature in the equities which control the judgment of the committee.

In good faith, in 1860, with no thought that war would endanger his contract, Mr. Grant diligently, and without negligence, sought to discharge his contract. The failure of the Government to seasonably inspect the goods would not have justified Mr. Grant in declining to proceed further with the contract. Inspection was daily expected from September 22, 1860, to November 21, 1860, and a heavy train waiting at Lavaca. The Supreme Court has held in United States vs. Wormer (13 Wall., 28) that a contractor must submit to reasonable inspection regulations.

It was Mr. Grant's duty to proceed and to trust to his Government to deal justly with him. When the goods were shipped, December 5, 1860, it is plain there was no such apprehension of hostilities as to lead Mr. Grant to believe performance hazardous. Had he then defaulted, his bond would doubtless have been proceeded against. The possibility or probability that he would be sustained by the courts would not have justified him in incurring the risk. His default would have ended his relation as a contractor in Arizona, where he then was, with the large investments above recited. His duty as a citizen required him to exert himself to the utmost to carry out his contract to supply the then distant military posts in Arizona. It is a matter of history that the Territory was abandoned later because, in part, of the inability to safely transport supplies. After he reached Texas and was obliged to halt there until the middle of March, 1861, it was his highest patriotic duty to then push forward, as he did, at all cost and all hazard, to furnish the much-needed supplies to troops on the remote frontier.

The commendable fidelity of his efforts to serve the United States brought him to ruin and bankruptcy. In 1860 he possessed in his own right $125,000. By May, 1861, by the neglect of his Government, he was penniless. He is now 71 years of age, and for thirty-five years has been compelled to live in actual poverty. By the abandonment of the Territory he suffered other heavy losses. His mills in Arizona were burned by the United States troops, with other property of his, and from inability to obtain technical proof the judgment recovered therefor was less by $20,000 than the actual loss. In settling for goods actually furnished under his contract, owing to the fact that officers resigned or fled after the abandonment, he was unable to replace vouchers burned with his property, and his just accounts were reduced some $13,000 by the Treasury Department. Large quantities of goods were necessarily abandoned. We are assured that Mr. Grant's losses, for which no recompense is now sought, exceeded $100,000.

The goods captured were seized, not as private property, but as quasi public property, solely because they were destined for and needed by the United States troops in Arizona. Upon this issue the claimant introduced evidence never before presented in the case, evidence of a high order—the correspondence between the governor of Texas, his quartermaster-general, and the commander of the capturing forces. The governor ordered that the trains be examined, saying if the goods were for private use to suffer them to pass unmolested, but if intended for troops of the United States to seize them as contraband of war and turn them over to the Confederate authorities. Finding the Government inspection brand, the goods were seized.

When shipped these goods were articles of legitimate commerce. Subsequently, without the fault or neglect of the owner, but owing to the fault of the Government in causing the delay, their character was, while in transitu, changed to contraband of war, and hazards thereby incurred by the owner, unforeseen by him, such as he could not have reasonably anticipated, and from which he was powerless to protect himself.

From the losses sustained by Mr. Grant the committee exclude all items of a purely private nature, apportioning the loss upon equitable grounds. By so doing and by limiting the sum to be recommended to the quasi public property, in which the Government had an inchoate title, the claim stands upon its own peculiar grounds, and its allowance, it would seem, will not open the door for the payment of less meritorious claims.

From the record of the case as it went to the Court of Claims we find that on the day of its capture the train was worth to the claimant $107,471.55. Upon delivery at Fort Buchanan it would have been worth $121,711.75. Additional items of $1,527.60 for expenses incident to purchase, of $18,695.60 for expenses of train while awaiting arrival of goods at Lavaca, and private goods of $9,258.57, making a total of $29,481.17, are not recommended. These private losses of $29,481.17, deducted from the worth of the train when captured, $107,471, leave the losses on the military supplies at $77,989.78, although there is a strong equitable claim for the item of $18,695.60 for the expense of the train while waiting at Lavaca.

Your committee, however, recommend that relief be limited to the actual loss upon the property that was strictly in the nature of military supplies and captured for that reason, stating their values at the place of capture, as shown by the undisputed facts of record, viz, actual cost in Boston and New York of the soap, candles, bacon, pork, and ham, captured as above, $19,517.74; actual cost of oxen, horses, wagons, and mules captured, $22,562.90; amount earned under contract for transportation to place of capture, $35,909.14, making a total of $77,989.78.

Believing that but very few cases can be found in the proceedings of Congress whose equities are equal to those under consideration, and where the hardships befalling the claimant have been greater, your committee would respectfully recommend the passage of the bill to it referred.

Mr. TAWNEY. I move that this bill be laid aside to be favorably reported to the House.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat surprised that on a bill carrying this amount of money there should be an effort to put it through the House without any explanation beyond that contained in the report. I have had only a moment or two to glance at the report, which is of course the only evidence we have in this case. We naturally look with suspicion at claims which are nearly forty years old; and I think that we may well look with suspicion at this case, as well as those that have gone before it, because there is no detailed statement as to the alleged loss of this individual. Let us see what his claims are. He claims that the shipment of some goods of his into Arizona or Texas—it is immaterial which—was delayed by the Government because the inspecting officer was not on the ground from the 1st of October until about the 1st of December; that for this reason the goods reached Texas so late in the season that there was not sufficient food for the animals that he had to haul his supplies; that in this way he was delayed from day to day and from week to week, until ultimately the war came on, and his goods were seized by order of the governor of the State of Texas.

Now, I am not thoroughly familiar with the conditions existing in Texas. There are some gentlemen here from that State who can speak on that matter. But I know something about other regions in that latitude; and it is, in my mind, a serious question whether there would have been any more supplies of food (and that is the main ground of the equity claimed in this case)—whether there would have been any more supplies of food in the latter part of November or the first of December than there were in the month of January. Upon that hinges all the equity asserted to exist in this case. I do not believe that, even if the conditions claimed to have existed in this case did exist, there are any equities in favor of this claimant.

I believe, however, from what I know of countries in a similar latitude that there was more feed for his cattle in Texas in January than there would have been during the last of November or the first of December, at which date he would have been in this country with the goods, if they had been inspected at the time he claims they should have been.

I should have supposed that the advocates of this bill would have made some effort to convince the House as to whether the supply of food for cattle in that country was greater in November than in January. It is a very important question in the determination of this case. I should naturally suppose that at that season of the year the rains had come, grass had sprung up, and there was better feed for his oxen in January than in the last of November.

This man claims that he was delayed by reason of the shortness of the supply of feed until March. This delay extended, as he claims, from the early days of January until that time.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Grazing is better in that country in January than in March.

Mr. LOUD. As I said, I do not know much about the conditions existing there. This, however, is a claim for $77,000; and surely if the man is entitled to the value of the supplies and stores, if he was injured by the Government to the extent of that sum, then assuredly he has a much more equitable claim upon the Government for the loss of 100 or 125 oxen that he claims starved to death because there was not sufficient feed, and this starvation occurred because he was delayed in getting to that country by the action of the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not know the date specified here. When were these goods inspected?

Mr. LOUD. He claims that the goods should have been inspected in the early part of October. They were not, however, inspected until the 1st of December. Inspected as they were on that date, he arrived in Texas about January following.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Where did he start from?

Mr. LOUD. He started from Boston, I believe.

Mr. DALZELL. I think from New York.

Mr. LOUD. Well, either Boston or New York. That is immaterial. It did not take any longer, however, to make a voyage from New York to Texas in December than it would have taken in the month of October. There was as much grass growing on the ocean in October as there was in January, and so we must assume that it would have taken him six weeks to have gotten there, whenever he started.

I believe, from a cursory examination of this claim, that it has no equity. And beyond that it should be remembered that he has already taken it to the courts and exhausted all the remedies that were given to him by the law. It has been taken into the Supreme Court of the United States, and that court decided that he had no claim against the Government. Now, thirty-eight years after that, without a word of explanation, the claim is brought up here and asked to be put through the House of Representatives without any explanation at all. If the claim is just, let us understand its merits and its equities; and then if the House shall wish to pass it, I will acquiesce. But I think that persons familiar with the conditions existing in that country should be called upon to explain, from personal knowledge, whether the facts set forth in the report are accurate or not.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DALZELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed bill of the following title:

H. R. 4769. An act to amend an act granting to the Gila Valley, Globe and Northern Railway Company a right of way through the San Carlos Indian Reservation, in Arizona.

WILLIAM S. GRANT.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from California, I will say, in explanation of the motion I made at the conclusion of the reading of the report, that I had no thought of "railroading" the bill through without explanation. The report of the committee in this case is very full and explicit. It gives detailed information with respect to all of the facts and circumstances on which the claim rests. The report was read in full, and I did not think, in view of the facts therein contained, that any further explanation would be demanded or was necessary.

The gentleman from California objects, as I understand him, to the passage of the bill because it does not appear affirmatively that the conditions in the State of Texas in the months of January and February for the transportation of freight by wagon trains across the State were more favorable than at other periods of the year; that this claimant delayed starting for a considerable time after the goods were received at Lavaca, and that the delay on the route and loss of the property did not arise from the causes set forth in the report.

I would like, Mr. Chairman, if that is true, for the gentleman from California, or any other gentleman in this House, to explain why he did not go on with his wagon train? He had all of this freight; he had thousands of dollars invested in it; and if the conditions had been favorable for his going on, is it not reasonable to suppose that he would have done so and thereby have saved himself the expense and loss incident to the delay? The fact that he did not do so shows that there must have been some urgent necessity for that delay, or otherwise he would have gone on and gotten out of Texas long before the secession ordinance was passed by that State.

There is, therefore, nothing in the claim of the gentleman from California, so far as it relates to the delay in getting these supplies through the State after they arrived at Lavaca.

Mr. LOUD. Yes; but if the gentleman will allow me, would not the same conditions have existed, and perhaps in a greater degree, if he had gone six weeks earlier? That is the question concerning which the House should be informed.

Mr. TAWNEY. If he had gone at the time that he intended to go, at the time that he could have gone, had the inspection of those goods been made by the War Department at the time they were requested to make it, there would have been no delay in his getting out of the State of Texas.

But the delay was over two months. He was ready on the 10th of November, with his trains at Lavaca, to transport the goods across the State of Texas to Fort Buchanan, their destination.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the statement which the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] makes respecting the hearing which this man has had in the courts is true. The Supreme Court, sitting as a court of law and applying to the facts purely technical rules of law, decided that there was no legal liability on the part of the Government. Why? Because the proximate cause of the loss was the rebellion, and the Government of the United States was exonerated from any liability. At the time of this decision the doctrine of equitable estoppel found little, if any, favor in courts of law because of that fact.

That the equities in the case were recognized by the Supreme Court is shown by the concluding paragraph of the decision, where Justice Davis very clearly refers to them.

Mr. DALZELL. He does not say that there are any equities in the case at all.

Mr. LOUD. And he was only one of the judges.

Mr. TAWNEY. He does not discuss the question whether there are any equities. He leaves that question to the Congress of the United States. In this paragraph he says:

> Whether there are equities in this particular case, and, if so, whether they require that the claimant should be reimbursed, in whole or in part, for the capture of his property under the circumstances, are questions that must be addressed to Congress, for it is not the province of the judicial department of the Government to determine them.

Now, let us examine the facts and see whether there are any equities or not. Here was a citizen of the United States who had, by contract, engaged to furnish his Government with a certain amount of supplies in a far distant Territory. That man was required to furnish these supplies at 12 per cent less than the ruling price. In order to meet the obligations of his contract, he employed certain purchasing agents in the city of Boston to obtain the goods and supplies which he was required to furnish to the Government, and at great expense purchased wagons, horses, mules, and oxen to carry these supplies from the port of Lavaca to Fort Buchanan in Arizona.

On the 18th of September, 1860, after supplying the Government for several months with supplies in this same Territory, the Secretary of War issued an order directing that before shipment inspection of the goods and supplies would have to be made by a duly appointed officer of the Government. Mr. Grant acquiesced in that condition, although it was entirely outside of the contract.

It is said by the Court of Claims that he was not obliged to accept this new condition. It was so held in the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in this case, reported in 7 Wallace; but in another case, reported in 13 Wallace, which I have here on my desk, the Supreme Court reverses the ruling in the Grant case, holding that the Departments of the Government have absolute control and full authority to impose any reasonable regulations with regard to the inspection of supplies or other property to be furnished to the Government of the United States under a contract between the Government and a private citizen, and that such regulations, if reasonable, must be complied with.

But even granting that he had the option of accepting this new condition or rejecting it and going on and shipping the goods, what prudent business man would have assumed that risk with the order of the War Department staring him in the face requiring inspection before shipment?

He accepted the order of inspection. A requisition was made for the supplies and forwarded to his agents at Boston. They received that requisition on the 22d of September, 1860, and at the same time they received notice from the War Department that before any shipment could be made the goods would have to be inspected by Colonel Tompkins, then stationed at the city of New York.

That was on the 22d of September. On the 24th of September these agents—Pierce and Bacon—notified Colonel Tompkins that they had in their possession or under their control the supplies necessary to meet the requirements of the contract and were ready for the inspection required. Colonel Tompkins promptly replied that he had received no order from the War Department to inspect any goods purchased by Mr. Grant or by them as his agents.

They then telegraphed to the War Department and received no reply. They wrote urgently requesting the War Department to promptly send some one to inspect the goods, saying that they were ready for inspection, that the opportunities to ship supplies by that route to the port of Lavaca were very few, and that they wanted to avail themselves of the first opportunity; and yet they received no reply.

They kept urging and urging the War Department, time after time, but not until the 3d of December, more than two months and a half after the War Department had been notified that the goods were ready for inspection, did the Department send anyone to inspect the goods. During that time Mr. Grant was lying with all his wagons, his oxen, his mules, his horses, and his men, at Lavaca, Tex., awaiting the arrival of these goods. I say that the delay of two months and a half in performing a condition which the War Department voluntarily assumed to perform, should not now be pleaded by the Government of the United States in opposition to the payment of a loss which a citizen of the United States sustained in consequence of that delay.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. BLAND. Has this claim ever been presented for payment to the War Department?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAND. Why has it not been paid?

Mr. TAWNEY. I can not answer that question, but the claim has been presented.

Mr. BLAND. If it was presented, why was it not paid?

Mr. TAWNEY. I understand that for the purpose of complying with the conditions of his contract Mr. Grant moved to Arizona, and expended large sums of money in building sawmills and making provision for carrying out his contract with the Government. Shortly after the outbreak of the rebellion his property was destroyed by fire, his vouchers and everything else burned, with the exception of about $18,000 in vouchers, which amount was allowed by the War Department. That is the explanation which is made to the Committee on Claims, and of which they have the evidence.

Mr. BRUCKER. Then he was allowed by the War Department $18,000?

Mr. TAWNEY. That was the amount he was able to prove by vouchers.

Mr. BLAND. Was there no way for him to secure evidence of these vouchers that would be satisfactory to the Department?

Mr. TAWNEY. That I can not answer. These were all that he could supply, and therefore all that the War Department could pay.

Mr. GREENE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question for information?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. GREENE. I see here this statement: "The amount of goods that he purchased cost him $19,517.74. The amount earned under contract for transportation to place of capture was $31,919.14." Now, does he mean to say that it cost him $35,919.14 to transfer $19,000 worth of goods from Boston to the place where the goods were captured?

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON], chairman of the committee, is better able to answer that question than I. That is a matter which the committee has investigated, and that is the result of their investigation, and the evidence on that subject was filed before the committee and submitted to it.

Mr. GREENE. That is true; but does anybody believe that it cost $35,000 to carry $19,000 worth of goods from Boston to where they were captured?

Mr. TAWNEY. The committee believed it, unanimously, and the Senate committee were likewise unanimous in the belief.

Mr. GREENE. But does anybody in this House believe that except the Committee on Claims?

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, Mr. Chairman, this was in the year 1860. The gentleman perhaps knows something about the means of transportation at that time. The goods had to be shipped by water from Boston to the port of Lavaca, Tex., and from there about 1,500 miles overland by wagon train.

Mr. GREENE. Well, but they did not get there before they were captured?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; but they did get almost out of the State of Texas—about 400 miles, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. BROMWELL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. BROMWELL. I understand from the gentleman's statement that vouchers were filed with the War Department amounting to $18,000?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not say that that is just the amount. I am informed by the Committee on Claims that it was about that amount.

Mr. BROMWELL. At any rate, vouchers were filed for that amount of this claim.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] will answer your question.

Mr. BROMWELL. You made the statement a while ago that vouchers for $18,000 were filed with the War Department.

Mr. TAWNEY. That was my impression.

Mr. BROMWELL. And that the other vouchers were lost; and then the gentleman from Missouri asked you whether or not other evidence as to these missing vouchers was submitted to the War Department. Now, what I want to know is, what evidence has the Committee on War Claims had before it over and above the vouchers furnished to the War Department as to the amount of this claim. In other words, had they these vouchers, or any evidence as to the amount of these missing vouchers, or did they merely take the word of the claimant himself as to the amount of the vouchers?

Mr. MAHON. The Committee on War Claims did not take the word of the claimant. That report is made on sworn testimony—testimony that is on file. This $19,000 that he was allowed was on vouchers. About the balance, destroyed, ample evidence is on file to show that the goods, without any profit, cost him $77,000, and for over 70 head of oxen and all his wagons the difference between that amount and $112,000 is all shown in the testimony.

Mr. TAWNEY. One word more, and I am through.

By reason of the inexcusable delay of the Secretary of War in making the inspection the supplies could not be shipped, and when they were shipped circumstances had occurred in the meantime which brought about a condition in the State of Texas that resulted in the confiscation of the property. But the members of this House who will recall the history of the year 1860, and who will recollect the conduct of the man who was in charge of the War Department at that time, may readily see some connection between this unexcusable delay on the part of the War Department and the confiscation of the goods by the Southern Confederacy later on.

Mr. GREENE. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. GREENE. I am asking for information and not to annoy. A portion of this claim is for the price of oxen. Is there any evidence in the claim, or in the report, that the Southern Confederacy captured or took his oxen? The statement is made that they took the goods because they were branded by the Government. Is there any claim that the oxen were branded?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say——

Mr. GREENE. Is there any evidence that he did not sell the cattle for double what they cost him?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman that that question is answered in the report, and if that is not satisfactory, I will refer him to the evidence on file.

Mr. GREENE. The report does not answer it. It is said the goods were captured because they were quasi public property. Then it says the cattle cost him so much money, but there is no statement that the Southern Confederacy ever took his cattle.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman's question suggests another fact that I intended to allude to, bearing upon the motive for the delay from September 24, 1860, to December 3, 1860, of the War Department in making the inspection which it had itself required. It is a peculiar fact that the order of the governor of the State of Texas to the adjutant-general, directing the capture of this property, specifically mentions that all property branded with the stamp of the United States Government was to be taken, and that personal property, the goods owned by Mr. Grant personally, should not be taken, thus avoiding the charge and the crime of larceny.

Mr. GREENE. Were the cattle branded "U. S.?"

Mr. TAWNEY. Whether the governor of Texas received information from the War Department that these goods were soon to pass through his State branded "U. S.," and in that way could be identified as being quasi Government property and thereby subject to capture and confiscation, I do not pretend to say, but in the light of subsequent events, for which that same Secretary of War was responsible, during the close of that Administration, we may reasonably infer that there was a strong motive for delaying the inspection of these goods from the 22d of September until the 5th of December, and that it was the same motive which prompted this same Secretary of War to distribute munitions of war in certain localities where the then contemplated Confederacy could with ease avail itself of them.

The War Department never responded to the purchasing agents of Mr. Grant. It did not even reply, and yet if the inspection had been made any time in the month of October even, the goods would have passed through the State of Texas long before the secession of that State, and the loss would have been saved to Mr. Grant. There is, therefore, a strong equity in the case under the doctrine of equitable estoppel, now recognized and applied by all courts of law. The doctrine of equitable estoppel did not prevail in the courts of the United States when this claim was brought there originally as it does now. The equities of the case were not argued nor considered by the court in that case.

The Supreme Court of the United States, sitting as a court of law on a purely law case, did not apply this doctrine, but now all American courts of law recognize and apply it, and that doctrine applies to this case. I say it places the Government of the United States in a position where it is estopped, where it can not in conscience and equity say that the rebellion was the proximate cause of the loss, and thus avoid the consequences of its own wrong in purposely or inexcusably delaying the inspection of these goods. I think, Mr. Chairman, that no man can read the facts as detailed in this report, respecting the merits of this claim, without being convinced that the Government of the United States should make good to this citizen the amount of his loss, and I therefore hope the bill will be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

BOOK AGENTS OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 225) for the relief of the Newberry College, Newberry, S. C.

The bill was read.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the bill just read—No. 3 on the Calendar—was intended by the Committee on War Claims to follow the bill next on the Calendar—Senate bill 629, for the relief of the Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. The committee has no authority, of course, to make a change in the Calendar; but it has unanimously requested that Senate bill 629 be given its proper place as No. 3 on the Calendar, preceding the Newberry College case, without displacing any bills which may follow. I ask unanimous consent that the intention of the committee be carried out, and that Senate bill 629 be taken up for consideration.

Mr. DINGLEY. That can not be done in the committee; it must be done in the House, if at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the bill to which the gentleman from Texas refers on the Calendar?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. It is; it is No. 4.

The CHAIRMAN. The rules provide, as the Chair understands, that the Committee of the Whole may take up a bill out of its order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is very clearly the rule.

Mr. McRAE. It is perfectly legitimate that consent be given to pass over the Newberry College bill without prejudice and without its losing its place on the Calendar, in order that this other bill may be considered.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the understanding of the Chair that the rules allow the Committee of the Whole to take up a bill out of its order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Rule XXIII, paragraph 4, covers the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read clause 4 of Rule XXIII.

The Clerk read as follows:

In Committees of the Whole House business on their Calendars may be taken up in regular order, or in such order as the committee may determine, unless the bill to be considered was determined by the House at the time of going into committee; but bills for raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors shall have precedence.

Mr. DINGLEY. Does not that refer to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The CHAIRMAN. The language of the rule is, "In Committees of the Whole House."

Mr. RICHARDSON. This is the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. COOPER] asks unanimous consent that the bill indicated by him, Senate bill 629, be now taken up for consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. LATIMER. In view of the statement made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COOPER] who reported both these bills, I wish to say, representing the Newberry College bill, that I consent to the arrangement proposed, with the understanding that this bill does not lose its place.

Several MEMBERS. It is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. DALZELL. I think we had better follow the Calendar as printed.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I move that the Committee of the Whole take up for present consideration Senate bill No. 629, to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims in the case of the Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South against The United States.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas there has been pending before Congress for many years a claim of the Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, a corporation located at Nashville, Tenn., and chartered under the laws of Tennessee, for the occupation, use, and consumption of the property of said corporation, of various kinds, occupied, used, taken away, injured, consumed, or destroyed by the United States or its Army during the war, or for its benefit in any way; and

Whereas it is difficult for Congress to determine in a satisfactory manner, either to the claimant or Congress, the sum that ought to be paid to said corporation in full settlement of said claim: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the said claim, with all the accompanying petitions and papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims. That full jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said court to ascertain the loss or injury, if any, that may have been sustained by said corporation in the occupation, use, and consumption of the property, including the buildings and grounds, the time the same was used and occupied, the value of all material of every kind used, taken away, injured, consumed, or destroyed by the United States or its Army or for its benefit in any way, connected with the publishing house of said corporation in Nashville, Tenn., during the years 1864 and 1865, or at any other time; and the said court shall render judgment against the United States in favor of said corporation for whatever sum that may be thus found, which judgment, when paid to the duly authorized agent or attorney in fact of said corporation, shall be in full discharge of all claims of said corporation against the United States.

SEC. 2. That the said court in the trial of said cause shall admit as competent evidence the affidavits now on file in the cause before Congress, both for and against said claim, and may hear such additional proof as may be submitted on behalf of the claimant or the United States, with the right of appeal by either party from such judgment.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. As a substitute for the pending bill, I offer the bill which I send to the desk. My proposition is to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill just read and insert what I send to the Clerk.

Mr. DINGLEY. No amendment is in order until general debate has been closed.

The CHAIRMAN. If any gentleman desires to take the floor for general debate, no amendment can now be offered.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I ask unanimous consent that the substitute be considered as pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can have this proposed substitute read for the information of the committee.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Very well.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and required to pay to the Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, a corporation chartered under the laws of Tennessee, $288,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as full compensation for the property of said corporation, including the buildings and ground, and all machinery, and all materials of every kind, used, taken away, injured, consumed, or destroyed by the United States or its Army, or for its benefit in any way, connected with the publishing house of said corporation in Nashville, Tenn., during the years 1864 and 1865, or at any other time; said sum to be in full discharge of all claims of said corporation against the United States; such payment to be made to the duly authorized agent or attorney in fact of said corporation.

Mr. DALZELL. The original bill before the House provides, as I understand, for a reference of this matter to the Court of Claims. The proposed substitute provides for the payment of $288,000 without reference to the Court of Claims.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. DINGLEY. I understand the substitute has been read merely for information.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this substitute which has been offered for the Senate bill——

The CHAIRMAN. Let there be no misapprehension. The substitute has merely been read in the time of the gentleman from Texas for the information of the committee. Until general debate has been closed no amendment is in order.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the bill which has just been read for the information of the House will be offered by me as a substitute for the pending bill, and I beg to state that this bill has already been considered and favorably reported by the Committee on War Claims as well as the pending bill.

Having reported this bill under the instructions of the Committee on War Claims, it is proper that I should make a brief statement of the facts and law that induced said report.

The claimants in this bill is a corporation chartered by the legislature of Tennessee in 1854 for the purpose of establishing a publishing house. The object and purpose of this publishing house, among other things, was "to advance the cause of charity by disseminating religious knowledge and useful scientific information in the form of books, tracts, and periodicals," and the net proceeds of this enterprise was to be set apart and used "for the benefit of the traveling, supernumerary, superannuated, and worn-out preachers, their wives, widows, and children."

With these objects in view, this corporation in 1856 established an extensive publishing house in Nashville, Tenn., and said house was in successful and profitable operation up to the time the Federal Army, under General Buell, reached Nashville in February, 1862.

Before General Buell reached the city of Nashville, but while near there, a deputation of the citizens of Nashville visited General Buell and invited him to occupy and protect the city. Among these visitors were city officials, prominent citizens, and some of the managers of this publishing house corporation.

General Buell expressed gratification at this proceeding, and assured the deputation "that protection to both person and property of all peaceable citizens would be fully extended by the Army of the United States," and he requested the mayor to so inform the people.

In compliance with this request the mayor of Nashville issued his proclamation, following the advice of General Buell, and, among other things, said that the interview of the General gave "every assurance of safety and protection to the people both in their person and to their property." And on the same day General Buell issued his proclamation, wherein he said that "peaceable citizens are not to be molested in their personal property," and that "if the necessities of the public service should require the use of private property to public uses, compensation is to be allowed."

From the day of the entry of General Buell until the close of the war Nashville and the country north of that place in Tennessee were in control of the Federal Army and the civil authorities. The courts, local and Federal, were in the full and free exercise of their functions and jurisdictions, and from the day of the issuance of General Buell's proclamation to the cessation of hostilities the people of Nashville and the country proximate thereto pursued their usual vocations and pursuits, and the people were clothed with all the machinery and paraphernalia of civil government and were obedient to and paying tribute to the Federal Government.

On the 24th of May, 1862, the United States district attorney for the Nashville district filed a suit or libel of information in the circuit court of the United States to sequester and condemn and sell and to confiscate the proceeds of the property, real and personal, belonging to this publishing house corporation; and on the same day a warrant of arrest was issued, and said warrant was on the next day executed by the United States marshal by arresting the property, real and personal, of the corporation, and he took possession of the same. In June thereafter a replevy bond was given by some of the parties defendant in interest.

Term after term this cause was continued until the November term, 1865, when the cause was dismissed by the direction of the Attorney-General of the United States. During the period this cause was pending in court, the proceedings were conducted with regularity, and Judge Catron, one of the supreme judges of the United States, held the court.

Such, Mr. Chairman, was the situation of this property up to 1862. Then, Maj. Gen. George H. Thomas, commander of the department, ordered Col. J. L. Donaldson, United States quartermaster, to examine the feasibility of the plan "of using this property for doing all sorts of printing for the Army," etc., and on the 27th of January following the major-general directed that the property be seized and it be appropriated and used by the Army, and thereafter it was used by the Army until December, 1865, when the libel suit pending in the circuit court was dismissed, and the property then remaining was returned to its owners.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman let me call his attention to a statement of fact? He speaks of 1862 as the time when General Thomas took charge of the property. General Thomas was not in command at that time.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. He issued his order in December, 1863, and in January, 1864, took charge of the property, and he continued to operate it until the close of the war. After the close of actual hostilities it was turned over to the Freedmen's Bureau, and in December, 1865, the libel suit was dismissed and this property returned to its owners.

It is very evident that when Major-General Thomas ordered this property seized and appropriated to the use of the Army he was under the belief that the property had already been confiscated, when, in fact, the proceedings to confiscate were then pending in court and the property in the hands of the bailee under his replevin bond.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as to the injury done the property while in the unlawful possession of the court and the Army. It is shown by the evidence that when this property was unlawfully taken possession of it was worth "nearly, if not quite," the sum of $700,000, and that when it was returned to the owners in the latter part of 1865, and before it could be put in operation, $300,000 first-mortgage bonds had to be issued and sold to repair the injury done the property.

I have an itemized statement of the claimants, which is as follows:

1. Rent for grounds and buildings	$30,000
2. Rent for machinery, type, etc	124,800
3. Damage to machinery, etc	156,000
4. Value of stationery, ink, paper, blank books, etc., taken by Army for its use	90,000
5. Damage done to merchandise, blanks, books, etc., remaining	45,000
6. Value of job office taken away	5,500
7. Value of front store torn down	5,000
8. Injury to buildings and alterations of interior	5,000
9. Loss of stereotype materials, etc	4,550
10. Use of iron lathes	5,100

It is further shown that the just and fair value of the ground and building was $150,000, and therefore it appears the charge of $30,000 made by the claimants for the use of this lot and building is not unreasonable.

The total value of the machinery in and connected with this establishment was $312,000, and the estimated rental of this property for the time it was in the possession of the agents of the Government is $124,800. This estimate is based on a rental value of 20 per cent. The injury done to the property, by the proof before the committee, is shown to be $156,000.

The value of the merchandise, books, stationery, ink, blank books, material, etc., taken and used by the Government through its agents is shown to be $90,000, and the injury done to the merchandise, books, stationery, etc., remaining is estimated at $45,000. It is further shown that the job office of the corporation was taken away, and the front store torn down, and other alterations made and injuries done to the building. The value of the job office is shown to be $5,500; value of front store, $5,000, and the alterations and injury to the buildings, $5,000.

The Army also destroyed a lot of stereotype plates and other material therewith connected, and removed and used three large lathes for turning cannon and other metals. The value of the loss of the stereotype plates and material, etc., is estimated at $4,550 and the use of and damage to the iron lathes is valued at $5,100. So it appears from the proof that the total injury to this corporation by the unlawful seizure, use, and destruction of this property by the Government amounts to the sum total of $470,950. And this proof is made by credible, honest, and worthy citizens.

The witnesses are members of the various political parties and of the several religious Christian denominations. They are men whose probity of character has been proven by a life of integrity, honesty, and fair dealing, several of them being ministers of the gospel.

Besides, some of the witnesses were soldiers in the Federal Army, and were, I think, participants in the engagements resulting in the surrender of Nashville, and afterwards had in charge part of this printing establishment after it had been taken possession of for the use of the Army, notably, Col. A. W. Wills, who was brevet lieutenant-colonel and assistant quartermaster, stationed at Nashville.

Such, Mr. Chairman, is the testimony and the character of the witnesses upon which the committee in great part has based its findings and report. You will observe that the total injury and damage suffered by this corporation, as appears from the testimony, amounts to $470,950. The committee has not recommended the payment of so large a sum, but does recommend the payment of $288,000, a sum almost less than half the amount of injury claimed, and if not proven with absolute certainty to our satisfaction it appears reasonably certain, and the committee, out of an abundance of prudence and caution, have resolved all doubts in favor of the Government and eliminated all charges that seemed excessive or dubious, and therefore recommend the payment of $288,000 in full and complete settlement of all claims that this book publishing company may have against the Government.

Mr. Chairman, the facts and testimony in connection with this matter I have now reviewed for the information of the committee, and I think it proper now to briefly refer to the orders, proclamations, and law which the committee has applied in reaching the conclusions reported to the House.

In the first place, in 1862, General Buell, prior to his occupancy of the city of Nashville, in response to the deputation of citizens of Nashville that visited him, "expressed gratification at the proceedings of the citizens," and assured the deputation that "protection to both person and property of all peaceable citizens will be fully extended by the Army of the United States," and requested the mayor of Nashville to so inform the people.

Thereupon, the mayor, on the 26th day of February, 1862, issued his proclamation, stating, among other things, that General Buell had given him "every assurance of safety and protection to the people, both in their person and their property," and on the same day General Buell issued his proclamation, in which, among other things, he said:

> We are in arms not for the purpose of invading the rights of our fellow-countrymen anywhere, but to maintain the Union and protect the Constitution. * * * Peaceable citizens are not to be molested in their personal property; all wrongs to either are to be promptly corrected and the offenders brought to punishment, etc. If the necessities of the public service require the use of private property for public purposes, compensation is to be allowed, etc.

It is evident and plain from this proclamation that it was the purpose and intent of General Buell to protect all persons in their personal property, and that if the exigencies of war or the public service required the use of private property for public purposes that adequate compensation should be allowed the owners of such property. After the issuance of this proclamation the United States, on the 24th day of May, 1862, filed a libel of information in the circuit court of the United States to sequester, condemn, and sell, and to confiscate the proceeds of the property, real and personal, of this corporation.

This suit was not tenable, and the best evidence to sustain and maintain this position is the fact that in 1865 this suit was dismissed by the United States district attorney under the direction and order of the Attorney-General of the United States.

I need not further discuss this law, but beg to say that there were two acts of Congress, one passed the 6th of August, 1861, and the other on the 17th of July, 1862, authorizing or making possible the confiscation of private property, and it is to my mind apparent, and it is the opinion of good lawyers, that under neither of these acts was the property of a corporation made confiscable. Both of them had in view the property of natural persons who gave aid and comfort to the rebellion, or who held office under the Confederate government, or one of the States composing it.

When this property was taken possession of for the use of the Army, under the order of General Thomas, it was not liable then to seizure, whatever may have been the character of the property or the condition of its owners, because it was then in custodia legis in a court of competent jurisdiction.

The statutes before referred to provide for condemnation after trial had in court. No authority is furnished for taking property without due course of law, and no army officer could enforce these statutes.

Further, in 1861, when President Lincoln issued his proclamation declaring the people of certain States in rebellion, the proclamation, it is true, embraced Tennessee; but he limited the declaration of those in rebellion by excepting "the inhabitants of that part of Virginia lying west of the Alleghany Mountains, and of such other parts of that State and other States hereinbefore named as may maintain a loyal adhesion to the Union and Constitution, or may be from time to time occupied and controlled by forces of the United States engaged in the suppression of said insurgents."

On March 3, 1862, Andrew Johnson was appointed military governor of Tennessee, and on January 1, 1863, President Lincoln issued his emancipation proclamation designating certain States as in rebellion to which the proclamation should apply, and Tennessee is not mentioned therein as one of the rebellious States. In his message to Congress December 8, 1863, he said that "Tennessee and Arkansas have been substantially cleared of insurgent control."

So it appears that at the time this property was seized by order of General Thomas it was not only in the custody of the court, but that it was at a place or in a State not in rebellion, and that said State was then loyal to the Government at Washington; and it further appears that this property was not seized by reason of the exigencies of war or through military necessity, or that its injury was one of the casualties of war, but it was seized and used solely to make or save money for the Government, and this purpose was successfully accomplished.

There is another factor in this controversy that tends to strengthen me in the position I have taken. We are told that "in the multitude of counselors there is safety." The Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives at four, if not more, different sessions of Congress has had this matter under consideration and have recommended the payment of this. The members that composed these committees were intelligent, painstaking, and honorable men. I do not know how often a like recommendation has been made by the committee of the Senate, but can say a number.

I find petitions before Congress covering a period of twenty years from State legislatures, from conferences of the Methodist Church, both white and black, from bishops, ministers, governors, supreme judges, and judges of inferior courts, mayors and councils, lawyers, doctors, merchants, colleges, and college professors and presidents, and thousands of farmers, mechanics, laborers, etc., and from all the religious denominations, Jews, Catholics, and Protestants, and all colors, the white man, the black man, and the red man, and from persons of all opinions in politics and pursuits in life, asking for the passage of this measure.

The conference of bishops and ministers recently assembled here call attention to this measure and ask its passage. I assume further that this property was protected from the calamities and ravages of war under the proclamation of President Lincoln, known as Order No. 100, which I have here, and which I will read, so that you may better understand the position that I assume. This order was prepared with care by Francis Lieber, LL. D., revised by a board of officers, of which Maj. Gen. E. A. Hitchcock was president, approved by President Lincoln, and promulgated by the Adjutant-General on the 24th of April, 1863. By its terms—

The property—

Referring to property of this character—

belonging to churches, to hospitals, or other establishments of an exclusively charitable character; establishments of education or foundations for the promotion of knowledge, whether public schools, universities, academies of learning, museums of the fine arts, or of a scientific character—was exempt from hostilities of war.

Mr. COX. What is the date of that order?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. That was the 24th of April, 1863, prior to the taking possession of this property by General Thomas.

I now refer to the case of the United States vs. Klein (13 Wallace) and the case of the Marquis de Somerville (Stewart's Report, Nova Scotia), which I will not take the trouble to read, but which I affirm sustains the position that I take, that the Government should respond in damages for the injury done this book publishing company.

In addition to these authorities it could in safety plant itself in its demands upon our own Constitution, which says that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation.

From this review of the facts and the law it is evident to me that the demand of the claimant is just and ought to be paid.

I might supplement this argument or statement with a sentiment that has consideration and force with me. The profits of this book concern is appropriated to the superannuated, supernumerary, and worn-out preachers and to their widows and orphans.

This is not a reason for the passage of the bill, but it is a cogent reason to hasten its passage if the bill is just. The people that will be the beneficiaries of your action, if you pass this bill, are those who have undergone privations and sacrifices for humanity, and who have gone through life preaching a gospel of comfort and hope and have not had time or opportunity to provide for the wants of old age and decrepitude or to lay in store those worldly goods that would give comfort to their widows and orphans.

Mr. COX. I want to ask the gentleman one question before he takes his seat. Have you in your possession the estimate of what was saved to the Government in the way of printing by the use of this property?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I may have it in the report here, but not before me.

Mr. COX. Do you remember what it was?

Mr. CLAYTON. Page 14 of the report shows it.

Mr. COX. What is the sum named?

Mr. CLAYTON. It is quite a long statement, but you will find it on page 14 of the report.

Mr. COX. What is the amount?

Mr. CLAYTON. I can read the paragraph and then you can see.

Mr. GAINES. It is shown by this House report that—

The average saving to the Government, taking Cincinnati, Chicago, Pittsburg, and Nashville prices as shown by monthly reports heretofore sent, is 82½ per cent, while the actual saving was 100 per cent.

Here is the order of General Donaldson showing that he ordered this property taken for the Government and that the saving would be from $25,000 to $30,000 a year in printing alone. The property was used for other purposes and also greatly damaged, the total claim being $458,400. The House report, on the point of saving, is in this language:

It was the largest printing and publishing house south of New York, except the Government Printing Office in Washington. Its capacity is shown by the very large results set forth in the report of the quartermaster of the Department of the Cumberland above copied. Over 5,300,000 impressions were made in one year, and 4,352 forms were printed, 101,000 quires of paper were used, and 223,000 quires of blanks were furnished in the same period. The cost of all this work to the Government was only $29,261.40. The average saving to the Government, taking Cincinnati, Chicago, Pittsburg, and Nashville prices, was 82½ per cent. The actual saving was fully 100 per cent, according to the quartermaster's estimate.

The committee understand this statement in the report of the quartermaster to mean that the Government gained a clear profit in the use of this printing house and machinery, and of the material found there, of the entire amount of the work turned out. This was a large sum of money, all of which the claimant could have made if the property had been allowed to remain in its possession. Besides this, the presses and machinery were used so constantly, and were run at such a high rate of speed, as greatly to damage them. A large amount of books in the storerooms were lost or seriously damaged. The stores were taken to house the quartermaster's property, and the claimant was driven out.

On the 28th of December, 1863, while the confiscation proceedings were pending, General Thomas issued an order, addressed to Col. J. L. Donaldson, United States quartermaster at Nashville, stating:

"It has been for a long time in contemplation at these headquarters to make an army printing office of the Methodist Publishing House in Nashville. The house has been confiscated by the United States Government, and is represented as being in every way eligible for the printing of blanks and orders and the binding of the same, and by being run by the Government would save from $25,000 to $30,000 per year to the Government, without counting loss of time in getting work beyond the Ohio."

This order asserts that the house "has been confiscated." Such was not the fact. Proceedings had only been instituted to confiscate, and it was in the custody of the court when General Thomas ordered its seizure.

It is clear, then, that the property was not taken possession of as captured property. General Buell's order protected it. General Thomas did not withdraw this protection. On the contrary, he assumed that it had been confiscated.

It was not seized with reference to its usefulness in any tactical or strategic sense for the Army. It was seized to save money in printing for the Army and as a convenience for the civil department of the Government. The law of military necessity did not apply. A publishing house is in no respect a part of army equipment.

I ask to insert the following petition of claimant, showing the items of damage and the history in part of the claim:

PETITION OF THE BOOK AGENTS OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

Your petitioners beg leave respectfully to represent to your honorable bodies that the Southern Methodist Publishing House, situate in Nashville, Tenn., was chartered by the legislature of that State the 26th of February, 1856, under the name and style of the "Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South." A copy of the charter, herewith submitted, will show that the said house is different from ordinary corporations in this, that it has no stock or shareholders, or any personal or individual interests whatever, but is a mere privilege to publish and sell books, etc., by or on behalf of said Church.

The capital with which said house commenced business was mainly the share which fell to this Church of several funds belonging to the Methodist Episcopal Church on the division of said Church in 1844, awarded pro rata by the Supreme Court of the United States, and which funds amounted to something over $400,000. To this was added large private donations in money and other property, by bequest and otherwise; and also two smaller publishing establishments of said Church at Richmond, Va., and Louisville, Ky. Thus set agoing, the house continued to do a respectable and increasing business.

It might be well for us to state that our buildings were of stone and brick, among the best, and one of the best sites in the city, from four to seven stories high, fronting 80 feet by 212 deep, with a wing fronting 120 feet on another street, and about 50 feet deep.

The house is strictly a charity for the dissemination of literary, scientific, and religious knowledge among the millions that come within its influence of all classes and races, particularly the young and illiterate.

In addition to the ordinary implements and machinery of a printing and publishing manufactory, the remoteness of Nashville from the Northern cities caused the managers of this institution to possess themselves of large iron lathes and other implements constituting a machine shop, for turning and handling heavy iron for manufacture or repairs of presses and other machinery of the establishment.

In 1862 the Army needed these lathes, etc., and, with the consent of the agent, took and used them until the close of the war; and early in 1863 the Army found it necessary to have a job office at the front for printing, which was ordered from our house, and to which was added various other lots of printing material at different times. These supplies were furnished as required by the general in command. Toward the close of 1863 the necessities of the Army for printing and binding, etc., having increased very much beyond all expectation, and in the then condition of the country it being impracticable to procure suitable supplies from the North, Major-General Thomas, then commanding, took possession of our entire establishment, with all its buildings, machinery, paper, types, ink, stationery, books, etc., and property of every kind.

The actual possession was taken with but three hours' notice, so that there was no possible opportunity to take even the most cursory inventory of the property. So great was the stress of the Army for shelter in bad winter weather that our large stores and warehouses, filled with costly books and stationery, had to be emptied in a day to make room for large quantities of leather, saddlery, and medical stores. It was at the time impracticable for the Army to find shelter in the city for all Government stores, so that the taking of the establishment was solely the result of the necessities of the Army, the same as many similar instances in the city. We were informed, and believe, it was not the intention to interfere with these buildings and their contents, if it could be avoided, and they were suffered to remain till a very late period, but the necessity came with the arrival of large, valuable army supplies; and though the agent in charge believes the Army officers took all reasonable measures to prevent loss of property, it was impossible to do so. It will be observed that our entire property passed immediately and absolutely into the possession of the Government.

At the end of two years what was left of the property unconsumed was returned to us very much broken and damaged. The reason why the machinery was worn, broken, and used up beyond ordinary wear is explained by the testimony of the engineers as being caused by the necessity of the Army, the machinery being pushed far beyond its capacity, and subjected to kinds of work for which it was not intended. The buildings themselves were also considerably modified and changed to meet the necessities of the Government. One entire store was torn down and removed, and considerable other changes made in the interior of the buildings for the use of the Army.

Under these circumstances we were a little at a loss how to state an account in the ordinary positive form against the Government, but thought it best to relate the facts in this form, support them by testimony, and leave them before your honorable bodies, believing, as we confidently do, that you will do us ample justice. So we herewith present the testimony, as, fortunately for both parties, we are able to do, of every engineer, head printer, and head clerk in the different departments of the establishment, together with that of the agent in charge of the house at the time, and who is now before Congress in this petition authorized to settle the matter with the Government. These witnesses comprise every man who did or could possess valuable information in the premises. We also present the testimony of officers of Government, well known in Washington, who fully indorse the good character of these gentlemen. It will be seen that each man testifies of matters in his own hands, and of which he had the best knowledge that could exist. It will be seen that the character of these witnesses for truth and veracity is above question. From this testimony the claim will sum up as follows:

Rent of real estate, two years, $15,000 per annum, the property being valued at $150,000, 10 per cent per anum	$30,000
Rent of machinery, presses, etc., 25 per cent per annum on the valuation, $312,000, two years, $78,000 per annum	156,000
Use of three iron lathes, $17 per week, one hundred weeks	5,100
Injury and consumption of machinery, presses, type, etc., 50 per cent on valuation	156,000
Front store torn down	5,000
Stereotype materials, etc., consumed	4,550
Job office, etc., carried to the front, and stock with it	5,500
Belting worn out	750
Merchandise in front stores used and destroyed	90,000
Injury by alterations of buildings internally	5,500
	458,400

The delay in the presentation of this claim was unavoidable. The entire business is under the direction of the General Conference, which meets only quadrennially.

At its session in 1866 we were advised by counsel to let the matter rest until the affairs of the country would become more settled. At the conference of 1870 an agent was appointed to present the claim, but his failing health and inability to spend the necessary time in Washington caused further delay, when the present agent was appointed. The claim was presented to the second session of the Forty-second Congress, in December, 1872, but we could not get a report from either of the committees of that session. On the assembling of the Forty-third Congress our petition was in the hands of the House of Representatives on the day of its organization, but we utterly failed to get a report from the Committee on War Claims, to which it was referred, until one or two days before the close of the first session. Then we have four different reports—one of them stating little else than that the case had not been fully examined by the committee; another that it was inexpedient now to pay the claim; and one favorable and one unfavorable, for reasons stated.

In the second session of the last Congress it is well known that little or no business of this character was acted upon, nor could we get our claim before the House.

The report of the honorable chairman of the Committee on War Claims in our case was adverse; but neither in this report nor elsewhere have we ever heard of any objection to any of the commercial or accounting aspects of our claim. The objections are of a strictly legal nature, denying our right to compensation at all for anything, because of alleged disloyalty to the Government on the part of certain individual members of the church which is the virtual owner of this publishing house. There are some other things in this report which we regarded as both unjust and remarkable, and which caused us to print an explanatory reply, which we beg leave to submit herewith, and to which we respectfully ask attention.

We also present herewith a legal argument prepared by our counsel on the subject, which was asked for by the committee, and which we have no doubt will have proper attention at the hands of Congress.

Before this case was presented we were advised of the possibility that objections of the class brought forward by the honorable chairman of the War Claims Committee might be set up; and to present, as we thought, an effectual estoppel to all and any objections of that nature, we presented testimony of a general convention of the church held in Louisville, Ky., in April, 1864, and of the action thereupon of the regular general conference of the church held in New Orleans in April, 1866.

While we know full well that it were unreasonable to predicate disloyalty of a corporation, we deemed it proper to show that whatever might be said of individuals, many or few, acting each on his own responsibility, the church took care, under the advice of counsel, to advertise to the world, in the best manner possible, its unchanged relation to the United States, and the steadfast pursuit of its one exclusive business of propagating morality and religion, and to take no part whatever in any civil or political questions. To this doctrine the church had long since committed itself.

We respectfully and earnestly ask that this matter be examined into at the earliest convenience of Congress, and the amount found to be fairly due be paid. And in this appeal we beg leave to add that we represent not only the national integrity and honor, but the anxious and earnest expectations of more than 5,000,000 of the American people.

R. ABBEY,
Agent of Book Agents Methodist Episcopal Church South.

WASHINGTON, December 1, 1875.

The following letters are instructive:

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY,
Drexel Building, New York, April 9, 1874.

MY DEAR SIR: In response to your favor of the 8th instant, I beg leave to say that I was assigned to duty in Nashville, Tenn., in April, 1865, and was in command of the district of Tennessee a part of that and the following year. I was also assistant commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau, and gave the order (under direction of my superior officer) for the restoration of the property of the Methodist Episcopal Church South to its righful owners.

I was familiar with the facts presented in your memorial to Congress, asking consideration of your claim, and do not hesitate to say that your representations are correct and the demands of the church you plead for are reasonable. I hope the Committee on War Claims will recommend such award in this case as justice to the multitude of men, women, and children interested in the claim demands. The committee is composed of eminently fair-minded, just, and able men, who will doubtless give this important matter such consideration as it deserves.

Yours, truly,
CLINTON B. FISK,
Late Brevet Major-General, United States Volunteers.

To Rev. R. ABBEY Washington, D. C.

AFFIDAVIT OF BVT. LIEUT. COL. A. W. WILLS.

Personally appeared before me, Josiah Ferriss, a notary public in and for the county of Davidson, State of Tennessee, A. W. Wills, a person well known to me, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says that in the late war of the rebellion he was an officer in the Federal Army, brevet lieutenant-colonel and assistant quartermaster, stationed at Nashville, Tenn., in the years 1864 and 1865, and was detailed under command of Gen. J. L. Donaldson, chief quartermaster of the Army of the Cumberland, and placed in charge of the Southern Methodist Publishing House, in said city of Nashville, then recently seized by the United States Army, by order of the late Major-General Thomas, and used as a Government printing house for the said Army of the Cumberland. Affiant had immediate charge of said printing house from about 1864 until about or near the close of the year 1865, when it ceased to be used by the Army.

Affiant further states that the demand for army printing increased greatly and much beyond the general anticipation, and this Methodist Publishing House, being the only large establishment of the sort in the South known to this affiant, and it being impracticable to procure suitable printing machinery from the North in suitable time to meet these demands and necessities, the said publishing house was of very great, if not almost or quite essential, service to the Army of the Cumberland.

And this affiant further states that in consequence of and by the use of the large and ample machinery, extensive buildings, type, and printing materials of the said publishing house he was enabled to furnish the army printing at an immense saving of money to the Government, as his reports to the proper department will more fully show.

A. W. WILLS.

The above statement is made by me at the request of R. Abbey, esq., agent of the corporation. The facts therein contained are a matter of record among my reports on file in the office of the Quartermaster-General, United States Army, at Washington, D. C.

A. W. WILLS.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this September 20, 1873.
[NOTARIAL SEAL.] JOSIAH FERRISS, Notary Public.

PETITION OF THE BISHOPS OF THE AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

BALTIMORE, MD., January 20, 1876.

At the bishops' council of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, in session at Baltimore, at which Bishops H. M. Turner, W. J. Gaines, B. W. Arnett, B. F. Tanner, A. Grant, B. F. Lee, M. B. Salters, and J. A. Handy were present, the following statement and resolution were unanimously adopted, to wit:

We, the bishops of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, representing a membership of a half million of souls, residing in different States of the Union—North, East, South, and West—are persuaded that the bill now pending in Congress for the relief of the Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South is entitled to favorable action by Congress.

Honorable committees having at various sessions of Congress adjudged the claim to be due, we are persuaded that payment should no longer be withheld.

The Publishing House of the Church is an eleemosynary institution; not operated for private gain, the net proceeds thereof being appropriated to the relief of "supernumerary, superannuated, and worn-out preachers, their wives, widows, and children." So that this claim stands on higher grounds than many of the claims which have been presented and already paid.

We believe with the several committees of the Senate and House that "the law of the land, justice to a large and helpless class of people, a magnanimous spirit on the part of the Government toward the beneficiaries in a great charity which has been injured through its action, popular sentiment North and South, and the heartfelt desire of the people throughout the country for a perfect restoration of peace and amity between them, all concur in supporting the recommendation."

Signed, on and in behalf of the bishops' council of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, this the 20th day of January, A. D. 1876.

H. M. TURNER, Senior Bishop.
B. W. ARNETT, Secretary of Bishops' Council.

[Senate Report No. 146, Forty-fifth Congress, second session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of the Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, a corporation at Nashville, Tenn., have had the same under consideration and submit the following report:

The Confederate forces having occupied Nashville, Tenn., for a short period during the late civil war, evacuated that place after the surrender of Fort Donelson. Within three or four days after that event General Buell, with his army, reached Edgefield, a village separated from Nashville by the Cumberland River. There he was met by the mayor of Nashville, who was accompanied by a delegation of citizens and some members of the city council.

When General Buell was informed of the object of their mission, which was to inform him of the condition of Nashville and to invite him to occupy and protect the city, he expressed gratification at the proceeding, and assured the deputation "that protection to both persons and property of all peaceable citizens would be fully extended by the Army of the United States," and he requested the mayor so to inform the people of Nashville. Whereupon the mayor issued the following proclamation:

PROCLAMATION.

The committee representing the city authorities and the people have discharged their duty by calling on General Buell at his headquarters in Edgefield on yesterday. The interview was perfectly satisfactory to the committee, and there is every assurance of safety and protection to the people, both in their persons and their property. I therefore request that business be resumed and all our citizens, of every trade and profession, pursue their regular vocation.

The county elections will take place on the regular day, and all civil business will be conducted as heretofore; and the commanding general assures me that I can rely upon his aid in enforcing our police regulations. One branch of business is interdicted—the sale or giving away of intoxicating liquors. I shall not hesitate to invoke the aid of General Buell in case the recent laws upon this subject are violated.

I most earnestly call upon the people of the surrounding country who are inside of the Federal lines to resume their commerce with the city, and bring in their market supplies, especially wood, butter, and eggs, assuring them that they will be fully protected and amply remunerated.

R. B. CHEATHAM, Mayor.

This proclamation was issued on the 26th of February, 1862. On the same day General Buell issued his proclamation, as follows:

[General Orders No. 13.]

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE OHIO,
Nashville, Tenn., February 26, 1862.

The general commanding congratulates his troops that it has been their privilege to restore the national banner to the capital of Tennessee. He believes that thousands of hearts in every part of the State will swell with joy to see that honored flag reinstated in a position from which it was removed in the excitement and folly of an evil hour; that the voice of her own people will soon proclaim its welcome, and that their manhood and patriotism will protect and perpetuate it.

The general does not deem it necessary, though the occasion is a fit one, to remind his troops of the rule of conduct they have hitherto observed and are still to pursue. We are in arms not for the purpose of invading the rights of our fellow-countrymen anywhere, but to maintain the Union and protect the Constitution, under which its people have been prosperous and happy. We can not look with indifference on any conduct which is designed to give aid and comfort to those who are endeavoring to defeat those objects; but the action to be taken in such cases rests with certain authorized persons, and is not to be assumed by individual officers and soldiers. Peaceable citizens are not to be molested in their personal property.

All wrongs to either are to be promptly corrected and the offenders brought to punishment. To this end all persons are desired to make complaint to the immediate commander of officers or soldiers so offending, and if justice be not done promptly, then to the next commander, and so on until the wrong is redressed. If the necessities of the public service should require the uses of private property to public uses, compensation is to be allowed. No such appropriation of private property is to be made except by the authority of the highest commander present, and any other officer or soldier who shall presume to exercise such privilege shall be brought to trial.

Soldiers are forbidden to enter the residences or grounds of citizens upon any pleа without authority.

No arrests are to be made without the authority of the commanding general except in case of actual offense against the Government, and in such cases the fact and circumstances will immediately be reported in writing to headquarters through the intermediate commanders.

The general reminds his officers that the most frequent depredations are those which are committed by the worthless characters who straggle from the ranks on the plea of being unable to march; and where the inability really exists it will be found in most instances that the soldier has overloaded himself with useless and unauthorized articles. The orders already published on this subject must be enforced.

The condition and behavior of a corps are sure indications of the fitness and efficiency of its officers. If any regiment shall be found to disregard that propriety of conduct which belongs to soldiers as well as citizens they must not expect to occupy the post of honor, but may rest assured that they will be placed in position where they can not bring shame on their comrades and the cause they are engaged in. The Government supplies with liberality all of the wants of the soldier. The occasional deprivations and hardships incident to rapid marching must be borne with patience and fortitude. Any officer who neglects to provide properly for his troops, and separates himself from them to seek his own comfort will be held to a rigid accountability.

By command of General Buell.

JAMES B. FRY,
A. A. G., Chief of Staff.

Official.

J. M. WRIGHT, A. A. G.

From the date of the foregoing proclamation until the end of the war Nashville and the country north of that place, in Tennessee, was under the control of the Federal Army, and the civil authorities, including the courts, local and Federal, were in the full and free exercise of their functions and jurisdictions. These results were the fruits of the proclamation of General Buell restoring that part of Tennessee to national authority and giving "the full measure of protection to persons and property consistent with a necessary subjection to military government."

The proclamation of Major-General Butler, when he occupied New Orleans, on the 29th of April, 1862, after announcing that the city was under martial law and the principles by which the commanding general would be guided in its administration, contains this clause of protection: "All rights of property of whatever kind will be inviolate, subject only to the laws of the United States." In the case of The Venice (2 Wallace, 258) the Supreme Court of the United States decides that this clause "only reiterated the rules established by the legislative and executive action of the National Government in respect to the portions of the States in insurrection occupied and controlled by the troops of the Union."

In the same opinion the Supreme Court says further: "The same policy may be inferred from the conduct of the war. Wherever the national troops have reestablished order under national rule, the right of persons and of property have been, in general, respected and enforced. When Flag-Officer Farragut, in his first letter to the rebel mayor of New Orleans, demanded the surrender of the city, and promised security to persons and property, he expressed the general policy of the Government. So, also, when Major-General Butler published his proclamation and repeated the same assurance and made a distinct pledge to neutrals, he made no declaration which was not fully warranted by that policy. There was no capitulation. Neither the assurance nor the pledge was given as a condition of surrender. Both were the manifestation of a general purpose, which seeks the reestablishment of national authority and the ultimate restoration of States and citizens to their national relations under better forms and firmer guaranties without any views of subjugation by conquest."

There was no formal military surrender either of New Orleans or Nashville, but in Nashville there was no formal submission of the local civil authorities to the national authority; while in New Orleans the mayor refused to give the pledge of such submission. "There was no capitulation, neither the assurance nor the pledge was given as condition of surrender" in either case. The orders of General Buell were much broader and more definite than those of General Butler. They reached to the conduct of officers and men of his army and put them under express injunctions against all interference with the property and homes of the people who would remain peaceable, and expressly provided for compensation for all property taken for public use.

Your committee are impressed with the conviction that the orders of General Buell (above copied), while in the military occupation of Nashville—which was not "illusory, not imperfect, not transient, but substantial, complete, and permanent"—drew after them "the full measure of protection to persons and property consistent with a necessary subjection to military government," and that the citizens of Nashville who remained peaceable during such occupancy and their property can not be regarded as remaining enemies or their property as enemies' property after the 26th of February, 1862, by intendment of law. They were protected against this condition by the proclamation of General Buell.

This view seems to derive much additional force from the proclamation of the President, dated August 16, 1861, in which he limits the declaration that certain States and parts of States are in rebellion, as follows:

"Except the inhabitants of that part of the State of Virginia lying west of the Alleghany Mountains and of such other parts of that State, and other States, hereinbefore named, as may maintain a loyal adhesion to the Union and Constitution, or may be from time to time occupied and controlled by forces of the United States engaged in the dispersion of said insurgents."

The generals of the Army, including General Buell and his successors, permitted this loyal status of the people of Nashville to remain, and followed the avowed policy of the Federal Government in their dealings with them as declared in the case of The Venice. Many houses of citizens and some of the churches were used for Army purposes, but they were paid for, or quartermasters' vouchers were given for their use.

In this way the public pledges of General Buell were faithfully observed; the people engaged freely in their business pursuits; the courts were opened and the civil administration of the laws prevailed so far as was "consistent with a necessary subjection to military government."

This condition of the national authority in Nashville during its military occupation by the Federal Army is satisfactorily established by the history of that property the use of which by the Army quartermasters is the foundation of this claim.

On the 24th of May, 1862, a libel of information was filed by the United States district attorney in the circuit court of the United States to sequester, and condemn, and sell, and to confiscate the proceeds of the property, real and personal, for which the corporation called the "Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South" is claiming rent, and also compensation for such of it as was consumed in the use, or was lost, wasted, injured, or destroyed.

The record of the proceedings in said cause is appended to this report, and is marked Exhibit 1. Under a warrant of arrest issued in pursuance of the prayer of the libel on the 24th of May, 1862, the marshal of the United States arrested the property described in the libel, and indorsed the arrest on the warrant which he returned to the circuit court.

On the 3d of June, 1862, the "Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South" by that name interposed its claim to the property arrested in the circuit court; gave security for costs; asked to be allowed to intervene for its alleged rights of property and possession, and to plead to and defend against the libel and to replevy the property so arrested and seized, and the court granted the prayer of the petitioner.

The bond to replevy the property was filed on the 4th of June, 1862, in the sum of $60,000, with two sureties.

On the 27th of June W. R. Elliston, one of the sureties, applied to court to be released from the bond for the following reasons set forth in his affidavit: "He states that said cosurety (R. Abbey) has rented out some of the machinery, including a press and type, etc., to other persons without deponent's consent or knowledge and against his wish, and he fears that it will be so used that if destroyed or misused he will be liable upon his bond without his consent to the misuse. He is willing to remain liable for the forthcoming of the property if he and his cosurety can be permitted to hold it in the state in which it was when seized in this case.

"But his cosurety has not so acted, and has placed a part of the property beyond his own control, where it may be destroyed and deponent made responsible for the acts of others and against his consent." These statements relate to the fact that R. Abbey, as the agent of the defendant corporation, after the property had been so replevied, had consented or acquiesced in the taking of certain presses and type, lathes and tools, for the quartermasters of the Army, which were taken to the front to be used to do printing and other work for the Army near its lines, then advanced far to the south of Nashville.

On the 28th of June, 1862, Justice Catron, presiding in the United States circuit court at Nashville, after notice had been served on said Abbey, as agent, etc., heard said motion and entered the following order:

"On consideration of the matters founded on this affidavit I refuse to release William Ellison as a surety to this bond.

"J. CATRON, Presiding Judge.

"JUNE 28, 1862."

On the 24th of April, 1864, an amended information was filed in said cause by the district attorney of the United States, and a second seizure of the property was made or indorsed on the process. This was a seizure pro forma to secure regularity in the proceedings.

Answers, pleas, and demurrers were filed in the cause, as well by the said corporation as by other intervenors who were admitted to defend the suit for such interests as they claimed respectively. Issues were formed on these several pleas. Afterwards the case was continued by the United States, at the request of the Attorney-General, from term to term, until the 13th of November, 1865, when it was dismissed by the direction of the Attorney-General of the United States. The said Attorney-General says he will not further prosecute herein. And the court imposed certain costs and allowances on the defendants, and certified that there was probable cause for the seizure of the property, thereby certifying to its legality when it was made.

After General Buell entered Nashville the corporation of "Book Agents," etc., continued its business of publishing books, tracts, etc., and doing job work for its customers until the property was arrested under the libel proceedings above referred to, and after the property was replevined it still continued its business. Some of its lathes, presses, types, cases, and tools suited for detached job offices and some other machinery were taken by the quartermasters of the Army, as before stated.

With this exception, the property remained in the custody of the bailee, the defendant corporation, until on or about January 1, 1864, when the entire establishment, the house and all its contents, were taken possession of by Col. J. D. Donaldson, chief quartermaster of the military Department of the Cumberland, by order of Maj. Gen. George H. Thomas, commander in chief of the department, for the use of the Army of the United States, "as confiscable property," and so held and used until the 13th of December, 1865, when what remained of it was returned to said 'Book Agents.' The following extract from the report of the chief quartermaster of the Department of the Cumberland, dated June 30, 1865, sets forth the circumstances under which the seizure was made:

"UNITED STATES PRINTING HOUSE.

"'The Methodist Printing House,' confiscable property in the city of Nashville, was taken possession of in January, 1864, by order of Maj. Gen. George H. Thomas, commanding the department, and used as a Government printing house. The operations of the establishment up to June 30, 1864, were given in my last annual report. During the year ending June 30, 1865, over 5,300,000 impressions were made; 4,352 forms printed; 101,000 quires of paper used; 223,000 quires of blanks furnished, at a total cost to the United States, including pay, commutation, etc., of enlisted men, of $29,281.40; actual cost to the Quartermaster's Department, $25,456.45. (These figures are shown by the monthly reports of the officer in immediate charge of the printing house heretofore forwarded to your office.) The details of the establishment have been under the direction of Bvt. Maj. A. W. Wills, A. Q. M., who deserves great credit for its economical management.

"The average saving to the Government, taking Cincinnati, Chicago, Pittsburg, and Nashville prices, as shown by monthly reports heretofore sent, is 82½ per cent, though it is believed the actual saving is 100 per cent. No work of any description is allowed until a requisition is first approved at this office. At this writing it is being turned over to the 'Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen and Abandoned Lands,' as no longer needed for the public service. The concern merits my warmest praise, and I recommend it to your favorable notice and consideration."

The proceedings in this case of libel for confiscation were conducted with as much regularity, and with as little interruption, as if they had been instituted in a court of New York. Justice Catron presided in his circuit court at Nashville, from term to term, with as little obstruction and as little threat from the enemy as he did in the Supreme Court at Washington.

Whatever theories may be advanced, and with whatever skill they may be supported, as to the legal status of the people of Nashville, the fact remains that the national authority was actually enforced there through the national courts, and they administered the laws, local and national, so far as applicable to controversies between citizens, as completely and effectively within the territory protected by the Federal armies as could have been done in any loyal State. This condition of the country included within the operation of General Buell's orders would of itself give to the people there the same protection under the laws of the United States that is so distinctly provided for in the terms of the order, viz: "If the necessities of the public service should require the use of private property for public purposes, compensation is to be allowed."

This law of compensation declared by General Buell is the same that is found in the Constitution of the United States and in all States regulating the right of eminent domain. This is not the rule that governs in cases of capture or seizure jure belli. In such cases the property is taken without reference to compensation. The order of General Buell also provides that "no such appropriation of private property is to be made except by authority of the highest commander present," thus cutting off all right to make a capture of private property in Nashville after the date of the order, except on the conditions named in the order, and by the express order of the highest commander.

On the 24th of May, 1862, there was nothing in the military or political situation at Nashville, or in the condition of the people, or in the condition of the property of the Book Agents corporation, to prevent the jurisdiction of the United States circuit court from attaching upon the property of that concern, on a libel instituted to condemn it, if the property or its owners were guilty under the confiscation statutes; and when that property was seized under such proceeding, while it continued under the jurisdiction of the circuit court of the United States it was not liable to capture by the Army. Yet it is scarcely necessary to consider this point, for the reason that the United States has never claimed ownership of this property as captured property, nor even that its seizure for the use of the military department was made jure belli.

In both instances, when the Government seized the property, first under the libel proceeding and then under the order of General Thomas, it was seized as confiscable property. It was seized for confiscation under the penal statutes of the United States, and not as property in which the United States had acquired any interest otherwise than by virtue of those statutes.

Those statutes provide only for condemnation of the property in the courts of the United States after a trial duly had.

They furnish no authority for appropriating the property of rebels without due course of law. The Army can not enforce these statutes except in aid of the powers and proceedings of the courts. It certainly can not exercise jurisdiction under the confiscation laws so as to oust the circuit courts of the United States of a jurisdiction acquired and exercised over property seized under their orders on libels of information.

The following records from the War Department disclose the grounds on which the seizure of the claimants' property was made by order of General Thomas:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE CUMBERLAND,
Chattanooga, Tenn., December 28, 1863.

COLONEL: It has been for a long time in contemplation at these headquarters to make an army printing office of the Methodist Publishing House in Nashville.

The house has been confiscated by the United States Government, and is represented as being in every way eligible for the printing of blanks and orders and the binding of the same, and by being run by the Government would save from $25,000 to $30,000 per year to the Government, without counting loss of time in getting work beyond the Ohio.

The major-general commanding desires that you will examine into the feasibility of the plan of using the office for doing all sorts of printing for the Army, and report upon the same.

Very respectfully,

_____ _____,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Col. J. L. DONALDSON,
United States Quartermaster, Nashville.

CHIEF QUARTERMASTER'S OFFICE,
Nashville, Tenn., January 6, 1864.

GENERAL: In obedience to the order of the major-general commanding, I have had the Methodist Book Concern in this city examined, and find it suitable for the Army printing, and have accordingly directed Capt. J. F. Isom, acting assistant quartermaster, to take possession of it for that purpose.

I am, General, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. L. DONALDSON,
Senior Quartermaster.

Brig. Gen. W. D. WHIPPLE, A. A. G.,
Chattanooga, Tenn.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE CUMBERLAND,
Chattanooga, January 27, 1864.

Lieut. Col. J. L. DONALDSON,
Senior and Supervising Quartermaster:

The major-general commanding directs that you seize the establishment in Nashville known as the Methodist Printing House, and that you prepare it as early as possible for the printing of forms and binding of books of all kinds required by this army, particularly at these headquarters, such as muster rolls, returns, record books, for department, corps, division, and brigade headquarters.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. D. WHIPPLE,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

The letter to Colonel Donaldson, United States quartermaster, asserts that "the house has been confiscated by the United States Government." Such was not the fact, however, as it had only been libeled for confiscation, and was in the custody of the court through its bailees at the time when General Thomas ordered its seizure. It is therefore clear that the United States never made a capture of this property. General Buell's order prevented it from capture and seizure, and General Thomas, whatever may have been his power over the property to withdraw the protection of General Buell's orders, did not withdraw such protection. To the reverse, he assumed that it had been confiscated by the Government, and was Government property, and took it into possession as such, as being "in every way eligible for the printing of blanks, orders," etc.

It was not seized with reference to its usefulness in any tactical or strategic sense with reference to army movements. Such a seizure could not oust the circuit court of the United States of its rightful custody and control of this property and added nothing to the right or authority of the Government in its disposal.

The seizure was made by the commanding general for the convenience of the civil department rather than of the Army and to save money to the Government in printing for the use of a military department and the Army.

The law of military necessity did not apply, but whether or not it was applicable the protection given by the proclamation of General Buell, by the President's proclamation, and by the custodianship of the property in the hands of the circuit court (either, and certainly all together) places this property beyond the reach of the ordinary rules which apply to enemies' property. When the Government gives such protection to property, it assumes to pay for the use of it if any urgent necessity requires it to apply the property to the public use. Under such circumstances, the property being relieved by the act of the Government from liability to military capture, the seizure of it, even if it was a military seizure, made by competent authority, was an exercise of the right of eminent domain, which is never exerted except upon the condition prescribed in the Constitution, that just compensation shall be made to the owner.

The application of this provision of the Constitution is not affected by the fact that the seizure was made by a military government. Conceding as a fact that which does not appear to be true, that civil government in Nashville at the time of the seizure of this property was not in full and effectual operation, the military government there, when it undertook to enforce the confiscation of property for the crimes of its owners, under the authority of the statutory laws of the United States, was bound also to respect the Constitution of the United States in the administration of those laws. But there should be a very clear and very grave necessity to justify the Army or a military government in taking property from the lawful custody of a court of the United States.

It is to be presumed that the court would surrender the property so in its custody to the Army whenever the necessity was shown to exist, but it should never be held that when a court holds property in its custody for the adjudication of the question whether it is forfeited to the Government for the crime of its owner, the Army or a military government can take the property from the custody of the court and appropriate it to the Government as confiscated property. The court alone can render judgment of forfeiture in such cases, and can alone proceed to condemn and confiscate it, and when it is proceeding to adjudicate in such a matter, and is in the full and free exercise of its lawful authority, neither prevented nor controlled by any cause from discharging its duty, no other authority can take the matter out of the hands of the court and proceed to render judgment, or declare, in any form, that the property is confiscated.

Congress could not do so much, and it is not possible that a military government, while acknowledging the laws of the United States, can lawfully exercise such authority over a court of the United States.

And yet this is the precise attitude of this matter. The property was seized by order of General Thomas, the major-general commanding the Department of the Cumberland, as confiscated property, while the United States was suing in its own courts for its condemnation, and it was not released by the army officers until after the suit had been dismissed and after peace had been proclaimed in Tennessee by the President, when it was "turned over to the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands as no longer needed for the public service."

Judge Catron refused to discharge a surety on the replevy bond because the "Book Agents," etc., corporation had consented to the use of some of the property by army quartermasters, thereby holding that the bond was a valid obligation, and that the property was in lawful possession and control of its lawful bailee. His ruling was, in effect, that property in the situation of this property was not subject to the supreme control of martial law, so that the mere taking of it by a quartermaster, under the orders of a military commander, would exonerate the sureties of the bailee from responsibility for its forthcoming.

Judge Catron did not think that the taking of this property in its then situation was a taking under the law of necessity, or under the domination of military force to which the civil power could properly yield, so far, at least, as to surrender its jurisdiction over the property.

In this matter, as well as in the final disposal of the case, and especially in the order made at the request of the Government to enter judgment of nolle prosequi in the proceedings, and in certifying to probable cause for the proceedings, so as to protect the informer against damage for an unlawful seizure, and in the imposition of costs on the claimants personally, for which execution was ordered to issue, the circuit court of the United States asserted its jurisdiction, and maintained it over this property continuously from the moment it was seized until it was released by its final judgment.

It never admitted that its powers of jurisdiction during this period had been suppressed by martial law, nor that, by any lawful exercise of military force, its custody of the property had been broken. This is the more certain and plain when we recur to the fact that its jurisdiction under the libel was in rem and not merely in personam. This is true, not only in consequence of the nature of the proceedings under which the property was seized, but also for the reason that the statutes, known as the confiscation laws, create a forfeiture of the title of the property to the United States for the offense of the owner, or for the offensive use of it by any authority with the consent or acquiescence of the owner or his agent.

In such cases and under such proceedings the Government simply proceeds to assert, through its judicial tribunals, its title to the property and to dispose of it according to its laws. The jurisdiction of the circuit court did attach on the filing of the libel, and could only be exerted by the arrest of the property, which is an indispensable prerequisite of the exercise of such jurisdiction. The property was arrested under process of law in all respects regular, and the court maintained its custody of the property by express orders until it finally decided the cause.

This cause proceeded, from its beginning to its end, so far as the circuit court of the United States was concerned, just as it would have been conducted in any State not included within the insurrectionary territory.

It is difficult to perceive why the judgment is not equally conclusive though it was rendered in Tennessee. The court found no impediment to its initiating the suit, or in the execution of its lawful process therein; in exerting its power in continuing the cause; in maintaining its authority, or in making its final orders. The United States attended regularly in court to prosecute its suit through the entire proceeding, and made no suggestion that the Government had relieved the court of its jurisdiction over the property by having interposed the superior power of martial law. The Government, on its own motion, continued the cause in court, thus constantly maintaining the jurisdiction of the court over the property. This jurisdiction was not released or in any way impaired, but was rather confirmed by the fact that the court had permitted a claimant to replevy the personal chattels included in the arrest or seizure.

A bond was interposed and sureties were provided for the return of the property to answer the judgment to be rendered in the cause. Such a bond has no other effect than to change the custody of the property from the marshal to the special bailees. They hold it for the court and must surrender it to the court when required, and are subject to punishment for their refusal to do it. They are liable also for injury and loss to the property while in their custody. Their custody is the custody of the court, and while it lasts the property is in gremio legis. The court may require the bailees to pay rent for the property while it is in their custody if it is finally condemned. In every respect, therefore, the circuit court of the United States at Nashville had the authority to proceed to final judgment upon every question touching the ownership of this property and its confiscable character. It did proceed to judgment on that subject at the instance of the United States, and it must be now considered that the United States did not own this property at the time that its Army seized it in January, 1864, or else it waived and solemnly abandoned its right.

The Government has admitted by its refusal to prosecute the suit, and the court has decided, that this property never was forfeited to the United States by the crime of its owners.

The judgment of nolle prosequi rendered at the instance of the Government, in which costs are imposed, is not merely an act of amnesty; it is a judgment upon its confession, either that it never had the right to condemn this property or that it was unwilling to assert its right to condemn it, and waived it on condition of the payment of costs by the intervenor. And it must have been for this reason that Justice Catron entered the order that there was probable cause for the prosecution, but not actual cause.

The United States is conclusively bound by that judgment, so that none of its courts can now condemn the property, and so that Congress should not assume that it should have been condemned. This view of the matter seems to dispose of it so far as the right of the parties to the property is concerned.

A final judgment of discharge of the property seized for confiscation is as conclusive of the title as a judgment of condemnation would be, because such a judgment binds the courts. Chief Justice Marshall, in Williams vs. Armroyd (7 Cranch, 432), says:

"It appears to be settled in this country that the sentence of a competent court, proceeding in rem, is conclusive with respect to the thing itself, and operates as an absolute change of property. By such sentence the right of the former owner is lost and a complete title given to the person who claims under the decree. No court of coordinate jurisdiction can examine the sentence. The question, therefore, respecting its conformity to general or municipal law can never arise, for no coordinate tribunal is capable of making the inquiry."

The military authorities never seized the property as "captured or abandoned property," but as confiscable property; and in June, 1865, by order of General Thomas, it was "turned over to the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands as no longer needed for the public service."

In any view of the case, the property remained the property of the "book agents," etc., corporation, and the ownership was not changed by either the legal or military custody to which it was subjected.

The Government of the United States under its laws, duly enforced through the judicial department, arrested and seized as its own the property of the claimant, and put it in charge of the claimant under bond and security as the bailee of the court which became its custodian, and under the further pledge of the laws and the court that the property should be returned to the claimant at the end of the suit if the Government should not make good its assertion of title.

And the Government, with its military arm, took the property out of the custody of the law, in which it was held to answer judicial proceedings for its confiscation, for the purpose of enforcing the same statutory right of confiscation by the mere order of a military commander; used it for its own purposes, in which use it was greatly damaged, and returned a part of it to the claimants, much of it having been lost, consumed, and wasted in the use that was made of it. This property having been seized by the court, and also by the Army, for the purpose of confiscation, and not in the assertion of a title by capture, conquest, or other mere right of war, we are relieved from further inquiries into the questions whether the general commanding the Department of the Cumberland could lawfully have captured the property situated as this was, and could have used, converted, or destroyed it at his pleasure, and could also have deprived the claimant of the right of just compensation for it under the Constitution.

The property of a citizen in the custody of a court of the United States as confiscable property can not be taken out of that custody by the executive power for the same purpose without imposing on the Government the duty of paying for the use of it, and for such damage or loss as the owner may sustain by reason of such intrusion upon the property as well as upon the authority of the court.

The testimony in support of this claim is the best and most satisfactory the nature of the case admits of, except that the witnesses have not been subjected to cross-examination. The witnesses are well known, or well vouched for, as men of good standing—the agent, the head clerks in the different departments, engineers, master mechanics, bookkeepers, and other men employed in the house, each testifying to matters under his own supervision.

The values of the different kinds of property taken are necessarily inexact, being estimates made up by experts from such data as existed—books, invoices, etc. But there was no sufficient opportunity of taking an inventory of the property itself, the actual possession being taken with but three hours' notice in the bad weather of midwinter. It was a very large printing establishment, and run by steam power. It was amply supplied with machinery, presses, type, material for stereotyping, lathes, and tools, and had a large stock of paper suited for book and job printing, besides much other material for binding books, and the many appliances which belong to such establishments. It was the largest printing and publishing house south of New York, except the Government Printing Office in Washington. Its capacity is shown by the very large results set forth in the report of the quartermaster of the Department of the Cumberland, above copied.

Over 5,300,000 impressions were made in one year, and 4,352 forms were printed, 101,000 quires of paper were used, and 223,000 quires of blanks were furnished in the same period. The cost of all this work to the Government was only $29,261.40. The average saving to the Government, taking Cincinnati, Chicago, Pittsburg, and Nashville prices, was 82½ per cent. The actual saving was fully 100 per cent, according to the quartermaster's estimate. The committee understand this statement in the report of the quartermaster to mean that the Government gained a clear profit in the use of this printing house and machinery, and of the material found there, of the entire amount of the work turned out.

This was a large sum of money, all of which the claimant could have made if the property had been allowed to remain in its possession. Besides this, the presses and machinery were used so constantly and were run at such a high rate of speed as greatly to damage them. A large amount of books in the storerooms were lost or seriously damaged. The stores were taken to house the quartermaster's property, and the claimant was driven out.

While there is not seen by your committee any necessity—certainly no pressing emergency—that this printing establishment should have been taken possession of and conducted by the Army, there was very great and apparent necessity that it should be used for the benefit of the Army, for there was no other property in the country nearer than the Northern cities that would be at all adequate to those necessities; and that it was of great service to the Army is abundantly apparent. Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, of New York, who was intimately conversant with this property and the use the Army made of it, states as follows:

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY,
Drexel Building, New York, April 9, 1874.

MY DEAR SIR: In response to your favor of the 8th instant, I beg leave to say that I was assigned to duty in Nashville, Tenn., in April, 1865, and was in command of the district of Tennessee a part of that and the following year. I was also assistant commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau, and gave the order (under direction of my superior officer) for the restoration of the property of the Methodist Episcopal Church South to its rightful owners.

I was familiar with the facts presented in your memorial to Congress asking consideration of your claim, and do not hesitate to say that your representations are correct, and the demands of the church you plead for are reasonable. I hope the Committee on War Claims will recommend such award in this case as justice to the multitude of men, women, and children interested in the claim demands. The committee is composed of eminently fair-minded, just, and able men, who will doubtless give this important matter such consideration as it deserves.

Yours, truly,

CLINTON B. FISK,
Late Brevet Major-General, United States Volunteers.

Rev. R. ABBEY, Washington, D. C.

A portion of the building was torn down to arrange for more convenient access to the printing rooms. Job offices, consisting of types and presses, were taken away and not returned, and so of lathes and other tools.

Your committee are informed, through the agents of the claimant, that it is willing to accept $288,000 in full discharge of all liabilities of the Government. The payment of this sum would probably do the Government no injustice if the allowance to be made is placed on the footing of compensation to be awarded for all the damage done the claimant's property and all the profit it could have derived from its use in job work for the Army.

This is the sum that remains after reducing the price for the rent of the machinery, etc., below the estimates of the witnesses from 25 per cent to 20 per cent of its cost, which is the lowest sum named in the testimony by any of the experts, and reducing the amount claimed for injury done to the property from 50 per cent to 20 per cent, which is less than half the amount named by any of the experts, and by reducing the charge for merchandise used, etc., from 50 to 25 per cent. Your committee think it more in accordance with a wise and just policy in such cases to make reasonable restitution rather than to enter into an accounting of losses and damages, or of profits that might have accrued to the claimant if there had been no disturbance of its business. In this case there was no wanton destruction of property. There was much unavoidable loss to the claimant, which resulted in no benefit to the Government. The claimant sustained other serious losses by the alteration of the buildings to adapt them to the purposes of the Quartermaster's Department.

The sum of $288,000, with the present purchasing power of the national currency, would provide a fair means of restoration to the Book Agents corporation of the foundation of this charity, and would be, as we understand the proof, a less sum than was saved to the Treasury in the use of material, machinery, houses, and the appliances of this great printing house. This sum is much below the lowest estimates of any of the witnesses as to the losses actually sustained by the claimant, and would not be adequate compensation if measured by such a standard. But with the prudent use of this sum, at the present prices of property, it is believed that this public charity can be reinstated.

The following statement, made in the petition, your committee find to be correct, viz:

"The delay in presenting this claim was unavoidable. The entire business is under control of the general conference, which meets only quadrennially. At its session in 1866 we were advised by counsel to let the matter rest until the affairs of the country should become more settled.

"At the conference of 1870 an agent was appointed, but his failing health and inability to spend the necessary time in Washington caused further delay, when the present agent was appointed. The claim was presented to the second session of the Forty-second Congress, in December, 1872, but we could not get a report from either of the committees of that session.

"On the assembling of the Forty-third Congress our claim was in the hands of the House of Representatives on the day of its organization, but we utterly failed to get a report from the Committee on War Claims, to which it was referred, until one or two days before the close of the first session. Then we have four different reports—one of them stating but little else but that the case had not been fully examined by the committee; another that it was inexpedient now to pay the claim; and one favorable and one unfavorable, for reasons stated.

"In the second session of last Congress it is well known that little or no business of this character was acted upon, nor could we get our claim before the House."

The loyalty or disloyalty of the claimant, its agents, its membership, or its beneficiaries does not appear to your committee to be a necessary inquiry in this case.

The Government, acting under its own civil statutes and through its courts in the confiscation of property, puts in issue the only phase of the disloyalty of a citizen which affects his right of property.

The decision of the court that the property is not confiscable is a decision that such person owns and has the right to enjoy it. And the refusal of the United States to proceed under the statutes to get a decree of confiscation on a libel filed for that purpose, which is ended with a nolle prosequi, is a final declaration that the Government will not claim the forfeiture. No treasonable use could have been made of this property by the agents of this corporation which would not have been a gross violation of their authority. They could not impress the property of this charitable institution with their crime so as to render it liable to forfeiture. There was no law to justify the circuit court of the United States at Nashville in withholding the property of the claimant when it was not condemned. If it had rented out the property or sold it, the right of the claimant to the rental or the proceeds of the sale would be unquestionable.

The Government can refuse to pay a person who was disloyal any debt it may owe such person, but this discretion should be exercised with wisdom, and for the highest reasons of public policy. Your committee do not believe that public policy or public sentiment requires Congress to refuse to restore this charity.

This corporation was chartered by the legislature of Tennessee 25th of February, 1856, "for the manufacture and distribution of books, tracts, periodicals," etc., "under control of the said Methodist Episcopal Church South, according to the laws and usages of the same, as contained in their present or in any future edition of their Discipline."

It was intended, in the broadest sense, to be an eleemosynary institution through which there could be furnished at very low rates, and also gratuitously, religious literature and schoolbooks to the people. There was no stock of the corporation, and all its increase was to be and was devoted to increasing the usefulness of the charity. The means placed within its control, from whatever source they were derived, were dedicated to the purposes of its foundation. The ecclesiastical body known as the "Methodist Episcopal Church South," which was also a legal corporation, selected the persons to conduct the business of the "Book Agents'," etc., corporation, and give general direction to its operations.

The Discipline of the church referred to in the act incorporating the "Book Agents," etc., is the authentic declaration of the relations of the church to the Government. Nothing but the authority that is competent to change this Discipline can alter these relations. They have been the same for nearly a century, and were not altered as to either branch of the church by the unfortunate division that occurred in 1845.

These relations conform to and correspond with the constitutional declarations on the subject, leaving no room for any agent of the church, in any way, except by obedience to lawful authority, to participate officially in any matter relating to the government of the country.

When the war commenced, this church found its territorial boundaries cut in twain by the operations of the armies, so that nearly equal portions of it were on the opposing sides. In this emergency it sought to preserve its relations to the Government of the United States, so as to avoid the embarrassments of the war. The deposition of the Rev. Thomas M. Finney on this subject gives a full account of this matter, and is as follows:

STATE OF MISSOURI, County of ——:

Personally appeared before the undersigned, Joseph E. McGinnis, notary public for St. Louis County, Mo., Thomas M. Finney, a man well known to me, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says he is a minister of the gospel in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and is and has been since the year 1851 a member of the St. Louis conference of said church. That in the year 1863, seeing the course the war of the rebellion was taking in most of the Southern States, and that a considerable portion of the ministers and members of his said church lay in that direction, said affiant, with other loyal ministers and members of said church, felt great fear and apprehension lest in some way the war might work a real or apparent disturbance or disruption of the relations heretofore existing between said church and the Government of the United States; that, as said affiant understood and believed, some of the leading members and ministers of said church consulted with able lawyers and were advised thus what they had best do in the then anomalous circumstances of war and general disturbance.

Affiant further states that, as he understoodand believes, the most suitable measures practicable were adopted under and in pursuance of such legal advice above alluded to, and conformable as near as practicable to the usage and custom of said church. A general convention of said church was advertised and called to be holden in the city of Louisville, State of Kentucky, on the 6th day of April, 1864, and that the following-named conferences of said Methodist Episcopal Church South appointed delegates to said convention in the usual way, or as nearly so as practicable, to wit: the Kentucky and Louisville Conference, comprising the State of Kentucky; the Western Virginia Conference, comprising the western part of the State of Virginia; the Holston Conference, comprising parts of Virginia, North Carolina, and Tennessee; the Tennessee Conference, comprising most of the State of Tennessee except the western portion; the Memphis Conference, comprising west Tennessee and north Mississippi; the Missouri and St. Louis Conferences, comprising the State of Missouri; the Arkansas Conference, comprising the State of Arkansas; and the Indian Mission Conference, comprising western Arkansas and the Indian Territory west thereof.

The said delegates representing said conferences met at the appointed place in the city of Louisville on the said 6th day of April, 1864, and organized themselves in the usual way, or as nearly so as practicable, into a general convention of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. The said convention in the regular way appointed this affiant its secretary, in which capacity he then and there acted. The late Rev. Charles B. Parsons, D. D., of Kentucky, was in like manner chosen and acted as president of the convention. The convention declared itself to be "delegates to the convention, and representing loyal members of several conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church South," and that said delegates "do hereby, in the name of and for the loyal members of several conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, assert their right to and claim possession of and the administration of said property for the original foundation of said charity," meaning the Southern Methodist Publishing House, then in charge of Rev. Richard Abbey, financial secretary thereof, and situated in the city of Nashville, Tenn.

So the said convention, in the course of its business, sitting and transacting various business pertaining to its legitimate internal affairs during three days, viz, the 6th, 7th, and 8th days of April, 1864, held and avowed itself on several occasions to be a true, legal, and loyal convention of the Methodist Episcopal Church South in and under the Government of the United States, and holding and affirming its original relation thereto. The said convention, in the name and on behalf of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of which it was a delegated convention, memorialized the President of the United States on matters of interest to said church; which memorials, as far as is known to this affiant, were duly and respectfully considered.

THOMAS M. FINNEY.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 26th day of November, A. D. 1872.

JOSEPH E. McGINNIS,
Notary Public, St. Louis County, Mo.

This action of the convention at Louisville was afterwards fully ratified and confirmed by a general conference of the representatives of the entire church, held at New Orleans, in May, 1866, as is more fully seen by the following extract from the journal of said general conference, at pages 90 and 91, viz:

"Reports Nos. 2 and 3 of the committee on books and accounts were taken up and adopted, as follows:

"2. In regard to sundry papers sent to this committee referring to the action of a convention of preachers held in Louisville, Ky., in April, 1864, and to the action of certain commissioners appointed by that convention, we respectfully report: That, in view of the fact that the members of that convention, representing eight annual conferences, together with the commissioners appointed by them, were acting with the sole design to protect and preserve to its lawful owners the property of the church; and in view of the further fact that the convention and its commissioners did much toward the accomplishment of that very desirable end, the committee recommend that the general conference approve the action and object of said convention, and also direct the agent of our publishing interests to pay the traveling expenses of the commissioners, and also the fee to the lawyer employed by said commissioners.

"Respectfully,

"D. R. McANALLY.

"NEW ORLEANS, April 16, 1866."

It can not, therefore, be imputed to this great ecclesiastical body that it took ground against the Government of the United States during the war. That the sympathies of many of its members were in favor of the South is not to be denied; still, it is a question whether the majority of the whole body were not loyal to the Government. Very many of them were loyal in the strictest sense of the word. But the Government of the United States can not justly or wisely adopt a policy that will take from the people, even though they were disloyal, the fruits of a charity which provides them with literary, scientific, and religious instruction, and the means of educating their children, for the purpose of enriching its Treasury. There was no such policy in the war. The arms of the United States could not have been directed against such charities as something worthy of destruction. They were restrained, rather, by section 2, paragraphs 34, 35, and 36 of General Order No. 100, which declare that—

"34. As a general rule, the property belonging to churches, to hospitals, or other establishments of an exclusively charitable character, to establishments of education, or foundations for the promotion of knowledge, whether public schools, universities, academies of learning, or observatories, museums of the fine arts, or of a scientific character, such property is not to be considered public property in the sense of paragraph 31; but it may be taxed or used when the public service may require it.

"35. Classical works of art, libraries, scientific collections, or precious instruments, such as astronomical telescopes, as well as hospitals, must be secured against all avoidable injury, even when they are contained in fortified places while besieged or bombarded.

"36. If such works of art, libraries, collections, or instruments belonging to a hostile nation or Government can be removed without injury, the ruler of the conquering State or nation may order them to be seized and removed for the benefit of the said nation. The ultimate ownership is to be settled by the enduring treaty of peace. In no case shall they be sold or given away, if captured by the armies of the United States, nor shall they ever be privately appropriated or wantonly destroyed or injured."

If reasons have heretofore seemingly existed that would justify Congress in withholding compensation to the claimant, they no longer exist in such form as to require the Government to deny an act of justice to the generation now needing the benefits of this great public charity.

The petitions laid before this committee represent that many of the people of the United States, of all sections, earnestly desire that Congress will give just relief in this matter. It is believed that no private claim was ever presented to Congress that was so extensively and earnestly supported by various memorials and recommendations. That four are from State legislatures; one from the General Conference of the Colored Methodist Church; others from eight of the bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, viz: Bishops Morris, Janes, Simpson, Ames, Bowman, Merrill, Peck, and Haven, and many other ministers of that Church; others from the mayor and council of Nashville and of Edgefield, Tenn.

During the reading of the report,

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I want to inquire if the gentleman's time has not expired?

The CHAIRMAN. It has not.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. How much time has he remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. About ten minutes.

The reading of the report was resumed and continued as above.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the further reading of the report be continued in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Another from the governor and most of the officials——

Mr. RICHARDSON. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman from Indiana asked for the reading of the report in his time. That requires unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman. The rules——

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, no.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Oh, yes. The rules of the committee, as I understand them, with all due respect to the Chair, provide that a gentleman who favors a bill shall have an hour and then a gentleman in opposition shall have an hour. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has occupied one hour in opposition to the bill.

Mr. DALZELL. I will say to the gentleman that I am in favor of the bill S. 629.

Mr. RICHARDSON. A gentleman in opposition to the bill has occupied the floor for one hour; and now, Mr. Chairman, under the rules, it reverts to this side, or to gentlemen favoring the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, as a matter of custom, the Chair would alternate between the opposite sides of the measure, and if any gentleman on the other side of this measure desires to take the floor for general debate, the Chair will recognize him in preference to a gentleman on the opposite side.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not in opposition.

The CHAIRMAN (continuing). No other gentleman rose except the gentleman from Indiana, and the Chair recognized him——

Mr. RICHARDSON. I beg pardon.

The CHAIRMAN (continuing). And he said that he desired to have the report read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I was on my feet, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COOPER] was on his feet asking for recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has already occupied the floor.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I had reserved my time, and I think I have thirty-five or forty minutes remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to be recognized for any part of that time?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I desire to be recognized, and I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee such time as he desires.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Tennessee in the time of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to say that the friends of this measure desire to close this debate; and now, as I have the floor, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on the bill be now closed. I ask the Chair to submit that request while I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman was recognized for debate.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But I have the right to make that request.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit it. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all general debate on the bill be now closed. Is there objection?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I object.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I ask unanimous consent that debate be closed in one hour. If we are going to get a vote on the bill, we ought to close debate in one hour. I am willing to give one-half of that time to the other side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that all general debate on this bill be closed in one hour. Is there objection?

Mr. LOUD. I object.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I shall only occupy two or three minutes in what I have to say in respect to this measure.

Mr. DALZELL. May I ask the gentleman a question? Do you mean in support of Senate bill 629?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I mean in support of the claim.

Mr. DALZELL. That is not before the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It will be when we make the motion to substitute the bill providing for the payment of this sum of $288,000 to the Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Mr. LOUD. Does this bill provide for the payment of the claim?

Mr. RICHARDSON. If gentlemen do not understand it, I will state that the first bill, the Senate bill, provides for the reference of the case to the Court of Claims. That is the bill first reported, the Senate bill reported by the Committee on War Claims. We propose to substitute for that a House bill, favorably reported by the Committee on War Claims, for the payment of $288,000. I want to say to the friends of this measure that I believe we should close the debate in one hour. It is well known that under the rules of the House the committee must take a recess at 5 o'clock, and therefore we must get a vote in one hour from this time or not at all to-day. I shall only ask the attention of the committee for three or four minutes myself. The appropriation asked for in this bill is for as pure a charity as ever was asked for by any claimant within my knowledge.

The claimant is a corporation, but unlike most corporations there are no stockholders, or at least no stockholders who share in the profits. There is no stockholder in this corporation that can share one dime of interest in this claim. The corporation—the publishing house—is a charitable one. Every dollar of the net proceeds earned by the corporation goes for purely charitable purposes. Every dollar goes to the benefit of traveling preachers of the Methodist Episcopal Church, or to superannuated or supernumerary preachers who have broken down in the service of that church, or to their wives, widows, or children. Not a dollar of it can go to any individual. Now, who objects to a charity like that? It is a just claim. The proof shows that it would take $460,000 to pay anything like what this corporation lost in the city of Nashville that the Government got the benefit of.

Who ought to object, thirty years after the war, to paying to this great church a part of its claim? As the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COOPER] states, it is indorsed by every clergyman and minister and every member of that church in the South, and by every bishop of the Northern church and by every minister of the Northern church. Nobody has objected to the claim. Why not allow it? I yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS].

Mr. SAYERS. I differ with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] in respect to the nature of this claim. I regard it as an obligation on the part of the Government to discharge a just indebtedness incurred because of the unjust and unlawful seizure and use of the property belonging to the Methodist Episcopal Church South. The friends of the measure are not asking for charity. The amount that is embraced in the bill that will be offered as a substitute is not 50 per cent of what can be recovered in the Court of Claims if it should be sent to that court. There are thousands and tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of good Christian men and women deeply interested in the passage of this bill. They have been asking Congress for more than twenty years to do them justice, and now that the opportunity is offered the House ought not to have the slightest hesitancy in granting the relief asked for.

Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand, which I will ask to have printed with my remarks, the indorsement of this measure by some of the most distinguished divines and dignitaries of the Methodist Episcopal and of the African Methodist Episcopal churches. These eminent divines tell us that they have examined into the claim most carefully, and that they are entirely satisfied that it is absolutely just and ought to be paid.

Mr. BUTLER. Did Bishop Simpson, of Pennsylvania, indorse it?

Mr. SAYERS. I can not say. I do not see his indorsement here, but it is heartily approved by other bishops of his church. I have in my hand the indorsements of Bishops Hurst, McCabe, Bowman, Cranston, Ninde, Walden, Goodsell, and Vincent, and of Rev. R. S. Foster; and in addition the claim has the unqualified approval of the conference of the representatives of the Methodist Episcopal Church and of the Methodist Episcopal Church South which lately met in this city. Those gentlemen could not afford to recommend the allowance of a suspicious claim. They would not do so.

No claim has ever come before Congress with more merit than the one under consideration. Justice, and not charity, demands that this bill should be immediately passed. If it is done, thousands and hundreds of thousands of Christian men and women in our country will in their hearts thank Congress for having done them this tardy justice.

The facts upon which the claim is founded can not be disputed. The amount asked for is far less than that actually due. All things conspire to make it a most acceptable measure to all just-minded people. No single valid objection can be urged against it. It is in every respect just and meritorious. If it were not so, it would not be before Congress. Those directly interested would under no circumstances ask an appropriation of money for an object that was not altogether worthy.

The claim, Mr. Chairman, is absolutely without the shadow of suspicion. It is faultless in every respect, and the members of this committee will do themselves honor in promptly recognizing its merit and in recommending its allowance by the House. And in doing so the House will receive the sincere gratitude of hundreds of thousands of good Christian people all over our land.

Mr. Chairman, I trust that the committee will act promptly and favorably in the matter, and that there will be no further delay of justice. The claim stands solely upon its merits.

PETITION OF THE BISHOPS OF THE AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

BALTIMORE, MD., January 20, 1896.

At the bishops' council of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, in session at Baltimore, at which Bishops H. M. Turner, W. J. Gaines, B. W. Arnett, B. F. Tanner, A. Grant, B. F. Lee, M. B. Salters, and J. A. Handy were present, the following statement and resolution were unanimously adopted, to wit:

We, the bishops of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, representing a membership of a half million of souls, residing in different States of the Union—North, East, South, and West—are persuaded that the bill now pending in Congress for the relief of the Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South is entitled to favorable action by Congress.

Honorable committees having at various sessions of Congress adjudged the claim to be due, we are persuaded that payment should no longer be withheld.

The publishing house of the church is an eleemosynary institution; not operated for private gain, the net proceeds thereof being appropriated to the relief of "supernumerary, superannuated, and worn-out preachers, their widows, wives, and children." So that this claim stands on higher grounds than many of the claims which have been presented and already paid.

We believe with the several committees of the Senate and House that "the law of the land, justice to a large and helpless class of people, a magnanimous spirit on the part of the Government toward the beneficiaries in a great charity which has been injured through its action, popular sentiment North and South, and the heartfelt desire of the people throughout the country for a perfect restoration of peace and amity between them all concur in supporting the recommendation."

Signed, on and in behalf of the Bishops' Council of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, on the 20th day of January, A. D. 1896.

H. M. TURNER,
Senior Bishop.
B. W. ARNETT,
Secretary of Bishops' Council.

REV. BISHOP JOHN F. HURST, D. D., LL. D.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 17, 1897.

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

I have a knowledge of measures proposed for the relief of the Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at Nashville, which have been pending in Congress for many years, and have had occasion with individual Senators and Representatives to urge the immediate passage of a bill for the relief of this institution. I am fully persuaded that the claim, as recommended for payment by the several committees of Congress, is a just one. This publishing house represents a great charity. It is now over thirty years since it suffered its great loss, and in my judgment the payment of this claim ought not to be longer deferred.

I am, with much respect, yours, sincerely, JOHN F. HURST.

I most cordially append my name to the above statement.*
CHARLES C. McCABE.

REV. BISHOP BOWMAN, D. D., LL. D.

EVANSTON, ILL., December 27, 1897.

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

From my knowledge of measures proposed for the relief of the Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, which have been pending in Congress for years, I am fully persuaded that the claim as recommended for payment by the several committees of Congress is a just one and ought not to be longer deferred.

This publishing house represents a great charity.

Respectfully,

THOMAS BOWMAN,
One of the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

REV. BISHOP EARL CRANSTON, D. D. (LOCATED AT PORTLAND, OREG.).

To the Senate and House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

I sincerely trust that it may be the pleasure of your honorable bodies to grant to the Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church South the relief asked by that religious corporation for use of and damage to its property during the war.

The publishing enterprises of both the great Methodist Episcopal organizations in this country represent a form of Christian beneficence which I believe it to be good public policy to protect. All the profits of these institutions are devoted to the circulation of wholesome literature and the support of worn-out ministers and their wives and orphaned children.

I can not complacently regard the application of the principle of confiscation to such an institution by our National Government; and if any act of our national legislative bodies could be more significant of the new and happier era of the Republic than would be the measure under consideration I am not able to name it.

As to the amount asked and the data upon which it is estimated, I have no information. I venture, therefore, to express myself solely with reference to the principle and policy involved in the special legislation asked at the hands of the Congress of the United States.

Very respectfully, EARL CRANSTON.

BALTIMORE, MD., December 27, 1897.

REV. BISHOP W. X. NINDE, D. D.

DETROIT, MICH., December 23, 1897.

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

I am profoundly interested in the passage of a bill for the relief of the Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at Nashville, Tenn. I hope the prayer of the petitioners will be speedily granted.

W. X. NINDE,
Resident Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

REV. BISHOP JOHN M. WALDEN, D. D., LL. D.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, December 24, 1897.

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

HONORED GENTLEMEN: I am advised that the measures proposed several years since for the relief of the publishing house of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at Nashville, are still pending in Congress. As the payment of this claim has been recommended by several Congressional committees, its just character is beyond question. This publishing house is a denominational trust, managed by the church to which it belongs for the production and dissemination of religious literature and for other charitable purposes.

From personal knowledge I know that its usefulness has been limited because of the loss it suffered during the war—a loss by which it has been embarrassed for more than thirty years. In my judgment the payment of an equitable sum through an act of the present Congress would be ranked among the commendable efforts being made to restore patriotic fellowship throughout our country. Hence, with highest respect, I would hereby ask that Congress take final and favorable action without delay.

Yours, sincerely,

JOHN M. WALDEN.

THE REV. BISHOP D. A. GOODSELL, D. D.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., December 31, 1897.

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

For many years I have been persuaded of the justice of the claim for relief presented by the Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. This great charity, which is of individual profit to none and whose income is devoted to the aid of worn-out ministers, their widows and orphans, suffered serious and almost ruinous loss during the war—loss which still limits and embarrasses its work. I trust that the claims already admitted to be just by Congressional committees will have early and favorable decision.

Respectfully, yours,

DANIEL A. GOODSELL,
A Minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Resident at Chattanooga.

THE REV. JOHN H. VINCENT, D. D.

TOPEKA, KANS., January 1, 1898.

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

The claim presented for the relief of the Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South is just. The cause which this business firm represents is deserving of your perfect confidence and your active effort. The claim rises above all sectional and partisan limits. The recognition and relief sought would exert a blessed influence on all sections of our common country.

Sincerely, yours,

JOHN H. VINCENT,
Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church and Chancellor of Chautauqua.

THE REV. R. S. FOSTER, D. D.

42 ELM HILL AVENUE, ROXBURY, MASS., December 30, 1897.

It gives me pleasure to express my sincere judgment that if in some way Congress can find it possible, it will be a noble and worthy deed to furnish the relief sought by the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Very truly, yours,

R. S. FOSTER.

JOINT COMMISSION REPRESENTING 5,000,000 METHODISTS RECOMMEND ADJUSTMENT OF THE CLAIM.

The following joint commission on federation was appointed by the general conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church South, to wit: Bishop John F. Hurst, D. Bishop JNO. C. GRANBERRY.
Chairmen.

Rev. E. E. HOSS, and Rev. R. J. COOKE, Secretaries.

*Bishop McCabe, of Fort Worth, Tex., in transmitting the indorsement, dated December 30, 1897, says: "I append my name to Bishop Hurst's letter. If that will not do, I will write one of my own. I hope you will succeed in this effort. I believe you will."

Mr. RICHARDSON. It seems I was unfortunate in my remark. If I understand my friend from Texas, he says that we differ on this question. I do not so understand.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman called this a "charity." I call it an obligation.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But it is intended—and I thought I made myself understood on this point—that the money when appropriated shall go altogether to a charity.

Mr. Chairman, I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I regret very greatly that any controversy should have grown up here about the order in which the various measures representing this claim should have come before the House. I was not present when the controversy arose. The few words I shall say will have reference to the equity and legality of this claim.

I have stood on this floor in opposition to every species of war claim that could be in anywise described or denominated as a claim for the ordinary results, the ordinary wreck and havoc, of war. But Congress, since I have been a member of it, has passed a number of bills for the payment of claims not coming under the category of havoc of war—some with my consent and some without my consent. I hold in my hand a list of the claims already paid, and my effort shall be to show that, above all, this claim has the best right to be adjusted here. And so far as I am concerned, I do not care whether the question shall go to the Court of Claims or whether this claim shall be paid upon the basis of $288,000. I know enough about this claim to know that that sum is a very low estimate of these damages.

We have paid from time to time to the Presbyterian Church at Knoxville, Tenn.; the Methodist Episcopal Church at Knoxville, Tenn.; Temperance Hall, Knoxville, Tenn.; the Baptist Church, Knoxville, Tenn.; the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, Chattanooga, Tenn.; the St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Chattanooga, Tenn.; the Methodist Church, Carthage, Tenn.; the Presbyterian Church, Nashville, Tenn.; the First Baptist Church, Nashville, Tenn., and so on, claims for use and occupation of buildings and damages to buildings. We paid to the Kentucky University at Lexington, Ky., for use, occupation, and injury, $25,000; to the Kentucky Agricultural and Mechanical Association, for use, occupation, and injury, $25,000; to the East Tennessee University, for use, occupation, and injury, $18,500. We also paid to the William and Mary College, of Virginia, $34,000. In that case the buildings were destroyed by fire. Nobody knew who was to blame. The fire was supposed to have been caused by the incendiary conduct of some soldier.

We paid to the Washington and Lee University $17,848; to the Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary at Alexandria, for use, occupation, and injury, $20,000; and we made that payment when, in my humble judgment, the institution had been benefited to the extent of vastly more than $20,000 by the occupation of the buildings by the Union Army. We paid to the Roman Catholic Church of Charles County, Md., $4,035.50; and we paid to the Roman Catholic Church at Chattanooga, Tenn., "for use and injury" (as my report has it), $18,729.09. Now, in point of fact, that payment was not "for use and injury" at all. I called up that bill on this floor and advocated its passage. I believe I did as much as any one member to secure its passage; and the ground on which that payment was put was not that of "use and injury," but the taking and appropriation of property that belonged to that church.

Whether the members of that church were Union men or not was a matter of no possible importance. There was a certain quantity of stone which had been cut for the new Catholic Church at Chattanooga, and which was taken by order of General Rosecrans and afterwards allowed for by General Thomas, to be used in the defenses of the city of Chattanooga. I had full knowledge of that case, knew the ground on which the claim rested, advocated it, and we paid it.

Now, what have we here? When the army under General Buell got to Nashville, we found there a certain corporation. There is no difference of opinion on this subject between the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS]. The gentleman from Texas says that he puts this claim on the ground of a legal and just obligation, while something that the gentleman from Tennessee said sounded as though he was claiming this money as "charity." The fact about it is that the money itself, the property that was taken, was for a charitable purpose; but this claim stands upon an absolutely legal basis. We have never yet made any allegation of lack of loyalty against the members of any of the churches of the country.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman allow me a single remark?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES. The question has been asked, What was the original amount of this claim? I wish to say, according to the document I hold in my hand, which is a printed copy of the original petition filed by the claimant, that the original amount of the claim was $458,400.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, there was at that time a necessity for a printing establishment in connection with the operations of the Army. Anybody who knows anything about the operations of that great army, extending from Cincinnati to Nashville, and then projected away down to Chattanooga and Knoxville and Atlanta, and on the right flank, by way of Columbia and Decatur, down into the then Southern Confederacy, knows that there was an absolute, indispensable necessity for a great printing establishment.

It was not necessary to have as large a one as this one was; but it was necessary to have a very large one, and this was taken possession of at that time as a matter of military necessity. It was the property of this corporation. Everybody who knows anything about the Methodist Church in this country, and I think I know something about it, knows what is meant in connection with that church by the term "book concern." That is the name I should apply to this establishment. It was a printing house, but it was, in effect, the "book concern" of the Methodist Church South. We have a book concern of the Methodist Church North. These two book concerns stand upon exactly the same line of administrative policy. The net profits made by the publication of newspapers and books, and by job printing, or whatever else they do, are administered under a committee of the church for the benefit of the superannuated, not the supernumerary, as some gentleman has said, the superannuated and disabled ministers of the church, the widows of dead ministers, and their children, etc.

Mr. COLSON. I should like to correct one statement of the gentleman.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Very well.

Mr. COLSON. The gentleman has said there is a "Methodist Episcopal Church North." That is an error. There is a "Methodist Episcopal Church," and there is also a "Methodist Episcopal Church South."

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not think anybody knows that better than I do.

Mr. COLSON. The gentleman said there was a "Methodist Episcopal Church North."

Mr. GROSVENOR. I did say so.

Mr. COLSON. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There is no "Methodist Episcopal Church North." I agree with the gentleman in that respect. That is not, however, a material interruption. There is a Methodist Episcopal Church in this country, and it lies principally North, though it is extending South, and the time is coming rapidly, if we will keep these distinctions down here, when that mighty agency of the civilization and enlightenment of the age will be found—both branches alike—in one great common cause. [Prolonged applause.]

Now, this institution, with its presses, to which I have referred, was used as I have stated. It was seized by the Government authority, and up to that time, as is distinctly shown, no utterance of a disloyal character was ever made or authorized by the managers of that institution. But when we arrived at Bowling Green, it is true that the Confederate army had possession of Nashville, and they were not so wealthy as we were; but they were compelled to get their printing done somehow, and therefore they forced the printing of Hardee's Tactics through the agency of this publishing house. They did it by force, by the presence of the Confederate army, and under duress, as a military necessity. That is all they are claimed to have done, for otherwise it appears without question that never during the whole war was this corporation otherwise than loyal to the Government of the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, shall this bill be paid? Several gentlemen here believe it ought not to be paid. If there is one here who believes it to be too large, that is one thing. In my judgment the original sum of four hundred and fifty-odd thousand dollars was not only low enough as an estimate of the damage, but I believe our Government saved in actual money, in addition to the convenience afforded by this institution, more than twice the amount that Congress is asked to pay. Therefore, inasmuch as we have had already so many of these claims, and as this is in no regard and under no construction to be assigned to the ravages of war, and inasmuch as the property actually was taken and appropriated for the use of the Government, I think the claim ought to be paid without further delay. [Applause.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining? [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has eleven minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask now unanimous consent, while I have about eleven minutes, that the general debate be closed. Otherwise I shall want to use that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the general debate on this bill be now closed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I now offer as a substitute the bill which was read from the desk as a part of my remarks a few moments ago.

Mr. DALZELL. I make the point of order on that motion, Mr. Chairman, that the bill the gentleman has sent up is not germane to the pending bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the proposed substitute has been already read in the time of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. It was.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, Rule XVI, paragraph 7, prescribes, among other things, what is admissible and what is not admissible as an amendment, as follows:

No motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the situation of things is just this: When the committee commenced its session to-day it began in an orderly way to take up the bills on the Calendar as they stood on the Calendar. The motion was made and put to the House that a number of bills should be passed by and Senate bill 629 be taken up. That motion was carried, and the committee agreed to consider a bill the subject of which is, "An act to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims in the case of the Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South against The United States."

Having obtained consent of the House for the consideration of that particular bill, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COOPER] undertakes now to force upon the House another bill by way of amendment—or substitute—a bill which relates to an entirely different subject. The subject of the first bill is the creation of a tribunal to adjudicate a certain alleged claim. The subject of the second bill is an appropriation from the Treasury of the United States—without the intervention of any tribunal or court—of $288,000, in payment of a claim. Now, putting aside altogether the propriety of the proceeding on the part of my friend from Texas, which, perhaps, after all, is a matter of taste, I submit to the Chair that the substitute, so called, offered by him infringes the provision of paragraph 7 of Rule XVI, because it undertakes to admit, "under color of amendment," a subject "different from that under consideration by the House."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, it appears perfectly plain to me that the point of order is not well taken. The original proposition before the House, the Senate bill, was to settle the claim of the Methodist Publishing House against the United States. The settlement authorized by that bill was that the Court of Claims, upon an investigation, should ascertain the extent of the damage done by the United States to the property of this publishing company, and upon the ascertainment of that damage the court was authorized and directed to render a judgment for the sum found to be due. The substitute offered by my colleague from Texas [Mr. COOPER] proposes that instead of a settlement in the manner prescribed by the Senate bill, the House, upon the information before it, shall provide for the payment of the claim.

The general purpose of the substitute is as germane to the purposes of the Senate bill as it would be possible for one proposition to be to another proposition.

I am free to admit that if the Senate bill had merely authorized the Court of Claims to find the facts and refer those facts and the conclusion of the court upon them back to Congress, the question would have been a very close one, and the probability is that the committee would have been without jurisdiction to entertain the substitute. But it must appear perfectly clear that it is within the power of the committee and within the power of the House to adopt a substitute providing for the specific and instant payment of the claim, instead of adopting the slower method of settling it by a reference to the Court of Claims and a judgment to be found thereon. The Senate bill provides what?

That full jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said court to ascertain the loss or injury, if any, that may have been sustained by said corporation in the occupation, use, and consumption of the property, including the buildings and grounds, the time the same was used and occupied, the value of all material of every kind used, taken away, injured, consumed, or destroyed by the United States or its Army or for its benefit in any way, connected with the publishing house of said corporation in Nashville, Tenn., during the years 1864 and 1865, or at any other time; and the said court shall render judgment against the United States in favor of said corporation for whatever sum that may be thus found, which judgment, when paid to the duly authorized agent or attorney in fact of said corporation, shall be in full discharge of all claims of said corporation against the United States.

The proposition there is to leave it to the court to ascertain the damage. The proposition of my friend from Texas [Mr. COOPER] is that the House shall now itself, with the information before it, say what the damages are. One postpones the appropriation until a judgment is found. The other acts upon the present knowledge of the House, and proposes immediate payment. It is merely a difference in time, merely a difference as to whether the House is content to act upon its present information. If it is, I take it that it will adopt the substitute, if it be held in order. And if the House, with this information, is ready to adopt the substitute, then certainly our rules are not of such a character as to deny to the House the opportunity to do what it is anxious and willing to do.

The whole question is whether you shall postpone the payment or whether you shall make it at once. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], I believe, does not question the justice of the claim. It is possible that he would like to have that question settled for his conscience by the Court of Claims. A large majority of this House, however, have already settled the question with both their judgment and their conscience. The gentleman from Pennsylvania ought not to interpose this point of order for the purpose of delaying justice. It is within the knowledge of those who have taken an interest in this claim that the delay on the part of the Government has already seriously embarrassed the publishing company. They have been here year after year, or, at least, they have, within my memory, been here more than once, asking the Government for a settlement.

I desire to say just here, Mr. Chairman, that my opinions have undergone something of a change since I have been a member of Congress on the question of claims against the Government. When I first entered this House I was inclined to believe that every claim was a fraudulent one. I was disposed to believe that every claimant was trying to impose upon the generosity of the Government. But my seven years' of service here has taught me that the Government imposes upon the patience of the claimants quite as often as the claimants impose upon the generosity of the Government. I have more than once seen bad claims passed, and I have felt compelled to vote against them; but I have seen many good claims denied a hearing.

I have seen men with honest claims against this great Government haunting these corridors, asking for justice; and I have seen their claims delayed until, broken-hearted and penniless, they have been sent to the charity hospitals to die, while the greatest Government on the globe withheld from them what it justly owed them. A government that does that and does it willingly and knowingly is a disgrace to the map of the world. I am sure that no man here, with a full knowledge that any claim was just, whether it be the claim of a private citizen or the claim of a great charity, would deny it. And this happens to be one of the cases where, by the appeal of those directly interested, the members of this House have informed themselves upon the merits and the justice of it. I say for one, let us speedily settle this claim and do a tardy justice to a great institution.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Before my friend sits down, I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Is it not true that if the proposition to send this matter to the Court of Claims is passed and the Court of Claims gives judgment, you will have to have another bill before this House before the judgment will be paid?

Mr. BAILEY. That is perfectly true.

Mr. GAINES. Right in that connection let me say to the gentleman, after investigation, I find that if the case were referred to the Court of Claims, they would not be able to get a trial in less than four or five years.

Mr. BAILEY. I have not gone that far in the matter, but I am quite prepared to believe that it is true.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, on the point of order—but if the Chair is ready to rule, I will not say a word.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Texas yielded the floor?

Mr. BAILEY. I believe I have said all I care to say.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not want to argue the point of order if the Chair is ready to rule in our favor. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. "The gentleman from Tennessee" takes that as an intimation that the Chair is not ready to rule in favor of sustaining the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas. Now, on that point I just want to say, if the Chair will indulge me for a moment, that the amendment must be in order if it is germane. This is an amendment simply. The gentleman offered it as an amendment. A substitute in the nature of amendment is simply an amendment. Now, I say it must be in order, Mr. Chairman, if it is germane to this bill. The fact that it is inconsistent with the bill, as shown by the gentleman from Texas, does not make it obnoxious to the point of order, as the Chair can very well understand. The question as to whether it is germane was so well argued by the gentleman from Texas that I do not intend to repeat the argument he has made with more force than I could.

The bill offered as an amendment or substitute contemplates the same thing as the original bill—the payment of this claim; the ultimate payment of the claim. The first bill, or the Senate bill, which was first called up, provides for its payment by reference to the Court of Claims simply. The House bill, which is offered as an amendment or a substitute, provides for the immediate payment, and it is certainly within the power of the House, so far as the question of its being germane is concerned, to make an immediate payment rather than to make a reference to the Court of Claims. Now, the point that it is inconsistent does not make it obnoxious to the point of order. In the Forty-eighth Congress the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. Carlisle, then in the chair, one of the best parliamentarians who ever presided here, decided that very question. The Chair will find it on page 267 of the Manual:

> While a large part of the proposed amendment may be identical with some provision of the bill already stricken out, yet, if, as a whole, it contained matter substantially different from that already voted on, it is not necessarily out of order.

And need not necessarily be declared out of order by the Chair.

The only thing that can be insisted in reference to the substitute is that it is somewhat inconsistent with the bill. The object sought is the same, the claim is the same, and therefore the Chair must hold it in order. I only want to add that the only rule that could prevent it from being in order would be that you can not substitute one private bill for another private bill—that is, where the claimants are different. If we were to bring in here a different claim and offer to substitute such a bill for that bill, it would be obnoxious to the rule. The claimant in this case is the same. The object sought has the same purpose and scope. The two propositions are the same, and therefore it can not be insisted that it would not be germane.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the payment of this claim, and agree with the views so well expressed by the gentleman from Tennessee on the point of order. Suppose the original bill had provided for an appropriation of $288,000, and in that condition of affairs the gentleman had offered a substitute to send the whole question to the Court of Claims with authority to render judgment. Would not the Chair under those circumstances hold the substitute to be in order?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I thank the gentleman for calling my attention to that. I might not have noticed that point. But it is in the experience of every gentleman who has been a member of this House at some former Congress that the very thing that the gentleman from Missouri suggests has been done time and time again, and yet no member has made the point of order that it would not be in order to send a proposition which offered to appropriate money to the Court of Claims.

Mr. SETTLE. May I ask you if this is not the same claimant?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes.

Mr. SETTLE. Then the real question is not the effect of the substitute, but as to whether it relates to the same subject?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is a question of whether it is germane.

Mr. SETTLE. Whether it is germane to the subject?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman is correct. The subject-matter is the same, the claim is the same, the object and purpose, I say, of the substitute is the same; and therefore it can not be insisted that it is not germane.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, the only interest I take in the point of order that has been raised relates to its use as a precedent in cases that may hereafter arise; and in that view it is peculiarly important. Gentlemen are aware that unanimous consent is frequently asked in this House for the immediate consideration of a bill to refer a certain claim to the Court of Claims for the purpose of ascertaining whether the United States is legally liable, and if so, how much ought to be paid. There is generally little objection to bills of that class, which propose to have a judicial determination, first, of the legal liability of the Government, and secondly, when that is determined, the amount that should be paid under such circumstances.

Now, if it should be held that a bill having been called up the subject-matter of which is simply to refer a claim to the Court of Claims to determine the legal liability of the Government, and if found legally liable, then what amount shall be paid, then the moment such a bill shall be brought here an amendment is in order to substitute another bill making an appropriation from the Treasury, the House would find that the unanimous consent to call up one bill for consideration would be converted into consent to consider another bill, or at least another subject, to which there might be serious objection.

Now, what are the facts in this case? When the House went into Committee of the Whole this afternoon for the purpose of considering the Private Calendar, after we had considered two bills the consent of the House was asked to pass over the bills next in order and take up a Senate bill which proposed to refer to the Court of Claims the question of the legal liability of the Government of the United States with respect to the pending claim, and if there was a legal liability, then the amount that should be paid. On that same Calendar there is another bill which provides for the payment of this claim. Now, if the gentleman in charge had brought up the latter bill and asked the House to take it into consideration, the House would have had the distinct subject before it.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Will the gentleman allow me? Does the gentleman from Maine say that unanimous consent was given for the consideration of this bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. I say that the House gave consent.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. It was carried over the protest——

Mr. DINGLEY. I remember that one gentleman did protest, but it was said that the bill simply referred the question to the Court of Claims, and hence I myself and many others consented.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman from Maine does not want to misstate the case. It was moved that this bill be submitted to the committee, and the motion was submitted and carried.

Mr. DINGLEY. I understand this. The House voted, with only one dissenting vote, to take up this bill and refer this case to the Court of Claims for the purpose of determining the legal liability of the Government, and in case it was found that the Government was liable the claim should be paid. That is the bill that the House took up. Now, it seems that the House having taken up that bill and considered it, the gentleman in charge moves to substitute for it another bill, recognizing the liability of the Government of the United States, without sending it to the Court of Claims to determine the question, and providing for immediate payment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have this to say——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman allow me? Notice was given by the gentleman in charge that this substitute would be presented.

Mr. DINGLEY. Not until after the bill was taken up.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I think the gentleman from Maine is mistaken. I think the notice was given by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COOPER] at the time the bill was taken up.

Mr. DINGLEY. That was not the fact; but I am not making any point with reference to that.

The practical question before the House, and it is an important one with reference to future conduct, is whether a bill which proposes to refer a claim to the Court of Claims for the purpose of determining whether the Government is legally liable and what amount shall be paid, presents such a subject-matter that there can be offered as an amendment to it in this House, if objection is made, a substitute proposing to pay that claim without any reference to the court to determine the legal liability of the Government. Mr. Chairman, I think not. I think they present two different subjects, and that they should come before the House in their own proper character.

During my experience in this House I have heard many decisions upon that point, as presented by the rule, which provides that when a bill is under consideration an amendment relating to a different subject-matter shall not be in order.

I hold in my hand a decision made by Speaker Carlisle in the Forty-eighth Congress, exactly parallel to this. A bill was pending for the retirement of General Pleasonton from the Army. General Browne, of Indiana, then a member of the House, offered a substitute striking out all after the enacting clause—exactly what is proposed here—and proposing a pension for General Pleasonton. The temporary Chairman at that time was Mr. Cox, of New York. A point of order was made that the amendment was not germane. Mr. Cox immediately decided that it could not be offered as an amendment, because it was on a different subject. General Pleasonton was, in one sense, the subject of both bills; but in the one case the real subject-matter was the retirement of General Pleasonton, and in the other it was a pension for General Pleasonton. The bill was reported to the House. Speaker Carlisle was in the chair, and the point was again raised. Speaker Carlisle held that the amendment was not germane, being on a different subject.

Now, here is a bill before us referring a particular claim to the Court of Claims for the purpose, in part, of determining the legal liability of the Government. That is an important matter for us to know, whether the Government is legally liable in a case of this kind; and, if legally liable, what do the facts show ought to be paid by the Government? It is proposed to change the whole character of that bill by a substitute ordering the immediate payment of this money. Now, if such a bill had been called up, as it might have been called up this morning if the House were willing, and considered by the committee, so that we could have had notice as to the precise character of the proposition, there would have been no question of this sort; but I object, Mr. Chairman, to this attempt to bring up a bill having a specific subject-matter—a proposition to refer a question to the Court of Claims for the purpose of determining the legal liability of the Government, and then when it is before the House or committee offering a substitute for the immediate payment of the claim. The latter is a different subject, and it ought to be reported upon separately and considered by the House separately.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that if it should be held that there can be such a change as this made in the whole character of the bill, the establishment of such a method of legislation would fatally interfere with the conduct of business in this House. There ought to be, and the rules contemplate that there shall be, good faith in the transaction of our business, so that whatever bill may come before the House its general subject and character and object may be known, and that no amendment be received changing the subject-matter of the measure and placing before the House a subject of an entirely different character.

In my view, this question has an importance far beyond the immediate question before us. The principle adopted in this case is to govern the conduct of this House in the future. I submit that the Committee of the Whole and the House should hold, as Speaker Carlisle held on a similar occasion, that the character of a bill should not thus be changed by amendment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a single word with reference to this bill. I am not prepared to say whether the Government is legally liable upon such a claim as this or not. I should like to have the opinion of the Court of Claims upon that question. I should like to know what the legal liability of the Government is in a case of this kind, because there are behind this claim scores of others resting on substantially similar facts; and if we concede the legal liability of the Government in this case, those claims will troop up here in large numbers. We want to know where we stand in reference to this matter. Hence I submit this claim ought to go to the Court of Claims for the determination of this question.

I want to call attention to the fact that this claim has been on the calendars of the House for ten or fifteen years. If it is so well founded and urgent, why has it not been taken up? When our friends on the other side had control of the House, why did they refuse to take up this bill and pay this money, instead of coming in here to-day and solidly urging the passage of the bill because a Republican majority has control of the House? If there was such pressing necessity, if this was such a measure of justice, why has favorable action been deferred?

I think that this claim ought to go to the Court of Claims for a determination of the legal liability, but whether there be such a reference or not, I insist that it is not in accordance with our rules, nor would it be safe as a legislative principle for us to accept the doctrine that a bill providing simply for the reference of a claim to the Court of Claims to determine whether the Government is liable, and the amount of the liability, may be changed by an amendment on this floor to a bill making absolute payment of the claim, except by unanimous consent. I hope, therefore, Mr. Chairman, this point of order will be sustained.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a statement which is due to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COOPER]. It has been intimated here that that gentleman has taken unfair advantage of the House—has not acted in good faith. Now, we all want to be honorable in matters of this kind, as we are in all other transactions of life. When this bill first came before the committee—the bill providing for a reference of the claim to the Court of Claims—the committee ordered it to be reported with a favorable recommendation. At a subsequent meeting of the committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COOPER] called up the other bill, making a direct appropriation. I asked him what was his purpose. He said his purpose was that when the first bill was brought up, under the rules of the House he would move to substitute this last bill for the other. After some discussion a vote of the committee was taken, and he was authorized to report it. So he has acted in good faith; and I am satisfied that gentlemen of the House will accord to him the credit of so acting.

As to the point of order, one word. If this amendment is not germane, you can not offer an amendment in this House that is germane to any bill. [Applause.] If the bill making a direct appropriation of $288,000 had been called up by the gentleman from Texas and some gentleman had offered as a substitute a bill sending the claim to the Court of Claims, no point of order of this kind would have been raised. What does the original bill provide? That the Court of Claims shall determine the amount due. The gentleman from Texas had the right to move in Committee of the Whole to take up any bill on the Calendar; he had the right to make the motion without any explanation; it was entirely parliamentary under the rules of the House to do so. He asked unanimous consent to take up the first bill, and the request met with opposition. Then, under the rules of the House, he moved, as he had the right to do, that the bill be taken up, the bill sending the claim to the Court of Claims. That was a question for the Committee of the Whole to determine, and by a majority vote they authorized the taking up of that bill.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The gentleman will pardon me. I think he is in error in the last statement. The bill which the gentleman from Texas moved should be taken up out of its order was the bill referring the question to the Court of Claims.

Mr. MAHON. I understand that. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. OVERSTREET. No action has been had, either by consent or by a vote, upon taking up the other bill.

Mr. MAHON. I am coming to that. I say that, under the rules of the House, the gentleman had the right to move to take up any bill on that Calendar. That will be conceded by everyone. When the committee agreed to that motion, the bill was before it for consideration. Over and over again in past Congresses bills have been brought up in this way, by a vote of the House or the committee. The gentleman had a right to offer any amendment he saw proper.

A MEMBER. If germane.

Mr. MAHON. Yes; if germane. Now, is this amendment germane? The first bill which the gentleman asked to have taken up and which the committee consented to take up was to determine the amount of this claim—not to create a tribunal, as has been stated here, but to send the claim to a tribunal already created to ascertain the sum of the claim.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman will allow an interruption, he is mistaken in saying that this bill proposes to "create a tribunal" to determine the legality of the claim. The bill already recognizes the legality of the claim, and the submission of it to the Court of Claims is only for the purpose of determining the amount.

Mr. MAHON. I understand that is correct.

Mr. STURTEVANT. Then we have been deceived in the bill; that is all.

Mr. MAHON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I come back to my original proposition. The question before the House——

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. MAHON. Certainly.

Mr. DALZELL. The bill offered as a substitute for the pending bill admits the existence of a debt on the part of the United States and proposes the payment of that debt. Now, the original bill did not admit the existence of a debt on the part of the United States, and the legality of the claim set up against it but creates a tribunal——

Mr. MAHON. The tribunal is already created.

Mr. DALZELL (continuing). To ascertain and report as to whether the claim has any legal standing.

Mr. MAHON. This tribunal is already created.

Mr. DALZELL. I understand that. But it is directed to ascertain the facts in regard to the claim, and if it has any legal standing, to ascertain how much is due.

Now, the subject-matter of the amendment—with the permission of my friend—is the recognition on the part of the United States of a debt of $288,000 to this Southern eleemosynary institution. That is the subject of the proposed substitute. The subject of the other is the claim made by this same eleemosynary institution against the United States, and its object is the creation of a tribunal, or the submission of the claim to a tribunal already created, to ascertain whether or not the United States owes anything to this institution.

A MEMBER. But the tribunal is already created.

Mr. DALZELL. So far as that is concerned, it utilizes an institution already existing for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not there is any legal liability on the part of the United States, and if so, how much it is.

Now, it seems to me that the bare statement of the proposition is sufficient to sustain the contention that the proposed substitute is not germane to the original bill.

My friend from Pennsylvania said a few moments ago—I am only interrupting him now by his consent—that if you reversed the proposition, and had a bill pending here for the reimbursement of a corporation, it would be germane to move to send it to the Court of Claims.

Mr. MAHON. I said that the point of order would not be raised on such a proposition as that.

Mr. DALZELL. But why would it not be raised? Because the greater includes the less. But in this case you are trying to make the less include the greater. The gentleman from New York——

Mr. MAHON. Well, I think I can not yield longer to my friend. I hope he will occupy his own time, if he desires to make a speech.

Now, Mr. Chairman, after all, the subject-matter is like Mohammed's coffin. It is suspended between these two bills. That is all there is of it.

I want to say a word in reply to something that has been said heretofore. It is no argument against a bill pending before Congress that it has been before this body for twenty or thirty years. As we all know, men have gone again and again into the poorhouses of this country who have been appealing to Congress for years and years for their money without avail. They have been turned away from the doors of Congress, where they have sought in vain a settlement of their long-deferred claims. Two hundred and thirty-seven thousand dollars is all that has been paid for buildings like this, destroyed or injured during the war, over thirty-five years ago. Eleven million dollars is every dollar that has been paid in the way of war claims.

Why, do you know after the Franco-Prussian war, when a brave people, a nation of 40,000,000 was defeated, when the enemy had entered its capital city, after the surrender; with a treasury bankrupt, with an immense war debt, and war indemnity to pay, that in less than a year they sent a commission down into the country where the war had raged, and the people had been pillaged, and that French Parliament, with a bankrupt treasury, appropriated $20,000,000 to make their people whole again?

After the close of the Revolutionary war a commission was sent out by the English Parliament, and the losses of every man who had remained loyal to the Crown were ascertained. In a few years the British Parliament appropriated $42,000,000 to pay the people who remained loyal to the Crown. This Government acts more like a heathen people in regard to our private creditors than any nation on the face of the earth. We have heard the writings of Grotius and Vattel quoted on the floor of this House as reasons against the payment of war claims.

I will ask any lawyer on the floor of this House to read those great writers carefully, and they will find the conclusions that they come to in all their writings is that every government is bound to protect its people and make them whole, and the only exception which is made is in a case where a government is not able to pay. That is the only exception these great writers make.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I contend that this amendment is germane to this very subject, and I hope this House will vote so.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word. I do not propose to be drawn into any discussion as to the merits of this claim. The fact is, that so far as the evidence has been submitted I believe it to be a meritorious claim. But the question here is one of vast importance to this House with respect to its orderly procedure. I want to call attention just now to a question propounded by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], the answer to which demonstrates the inconsistency of these two bills, the pending bill and the proposed substitute. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] asked the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], "Suppose this does go to the Court of Claims and a judgment is rendered, would it not have to come back here again and have an appropriation bill passed?" and the gentleman from Texas said "Yes."

So here you have the most glaring inconsistency between the two bills pointed out in this conversation between these two gentlemen. The bill which is offered as a substitute for the pending bill is an appropriation bill. The pending bill, so far from being an appropriation bill, is simply a preliminary bill, a bill to lay the groundwork for an appropriation, a bill of inquiry to set on foot an investigation to find out whether there is any necessity for an appropriation, and if such necessity exists, to ascertain the amount proper to be appropriated.

Mr. VANDIVER. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. VANDIVER. Does the gentleman consider that the Court of Claims is more competent than the Committee on War Claims of this House or the Committee of the Whole itself to determine the question of the legality or the amount of the claim?

Mr. DALZELL. Why, Mr. Chairman, that question is not involved in the discussion now. There is no question pending here as to whether the Committee on War Claims or the House in Committee of the Whole is better adapted to ascertain the justice and amount of a claim than the Court of Claims. The simple question here is whether you can tack onto a bill which, in orderly procedure, is before this House for discussion another bill containing a subject not germane to the subject of the original bill in the teeth of the express language of the rules of this House.

Mr. BLAND. May I ask the gentleman this question: If the Senate sends to the House a bill providing a mode of paying a claim, for instance by sending it to the Court of Claims, would it not be germane and proper for the House to strike out the mode suggested by the Senate and provide a mode for the payment of it? That is all there is here.

Mr. DALZELL. Not at all.

Mr. BLAND. Why, certainly. The Senate seems to want to adopt one mode of doing a thing. The House wishes to adopt another mode, and the subject-matter is identical. There is no difference as to the object to be accomplished. The only difference is as to the means of accomplishing it. That is all there is of it.

Mr. DALZELL. Not at all.

Mr. BLAND. If the Senate bill was up for consideration, we would have a right to strike out that part of the Senate bill and put in an amendment of the House to that Senate bill.

Mr. McRAE. This is the Senate bill which is being considered.

Mr. BLAND. I say, in considering the Senate bill, we have a right to strike out the mode suggested by the Senate and provide our own mode of payment. We are not bound by the Senate at all.

Mr. DALZELL. But the fallacy of my friend's argument is this——

Mr. BLAND. There is no fallacy in it.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, from my standpoint, the fallacy is this: Passing a bill that makes an appropriation is the acknowledgment of a debt. Passing a bill creating a tribunal to ascertain whether a debt exists or not, and, if so, the amount of the debt, is an entirely different thing.

Mr. BLAND. Can the Senate preclude us from providing a different mode of payment? Are we bound by the mode which they suggest?

Mr. DALZELL. Not at all.

Mr. BLAND. Can we not acknowledge the debt and pay it in our own way, and amend the bill in that way? Why, certainly.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I think the gentleman ought to be permitted to make his argument in his own way. It is a legal argument, although gentlemen do not seem to appreciate the fact. I think, Mr. Chairman, he ought to be allowed to make it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman has given his consent.

Mr. DALZELL. I think I have said substantially all I care to say.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, this bill provides for only one thing—not for the determination of the legality of a claim, but for the determination of the amount. The proposition is to refer the claim to the Court of Claims to determine the sum which should be paid, not the question of legality. The question of legality is not involved.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, but my friend will concede in that inquiry the question of the legality and the amount of the claim.

Mr. MAHON. It is not mentioned in the bill. That is only an inference.

Mr. DALZELL. It must necessarily be involved.

Mr. MAHON. It must, by inference.

Mr. DALZELL. The question of legality and the amount are both included by inference. The legality is admitted, the amount of the claim is admitted, and there is no determination for the United States Government to get at the hands of the court. Now, the pending bill does not admit the legality of the claim, does not admit the amount of the claim, but it creates a tribunal to ascertain both and report to this House when this tribunal shall have performed its function.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania permit me to state to him that it is now only a few minutes from the hour when the House must take a recess? Will he permit me to make the request that the House extend the session for fifteen or twenty minutes for the consideration of this bill?

Mr. DALZELL. I do not think we want to spend any more time on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That would have to be done in the House.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I want to obtain the consent of the gentleman.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to me?

Mr. DALZELL. I will yield to the gentleman. For how long?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. About two minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. I reserve the balance of my time, and yield two minutes to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to address myself to the bill, but I desire to advise the Chair—— [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The Chair desires to hear the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, lest my remark might have appeared officious, I was saying, when members interrupted me by their mirth, that I desired to advise the Chair that the eminent Speaker of this House, by the position assumed by him upon a corresponding subject with that before the present Chairman, has taken a position which we insist is thoroughly consistent with the attitude we occupy, and one which should govern the present Chairman.

The purpose of my rising is to endeavor to clarify this dispute by calling your attention to the position of the honorable Speaker when he stood upon the floor on a similar occasion, and his position, I trust, will be a guide to the present Chairman. I call the Chair's attention to a decision reported in the Fifty-third Congress, and I read from volume 73, page 423, of the RECORD; and I will state the matter. The Senate passed a law, something in the form of a resolution, allowing hire for clerks to Senators.

The bill came into this House; an amendment was offered to incorporate the word "Representatives" as well as Senators. To that there was a substitute offered creating another debt of a different amount and for a different object. The question was, Was it germane? I have the statement of the present Speaker of the House to the then presiding Speaker upon his ruling, as follows:

The Chair makes a distinction which I think, on reflection, he will see is not sound. That is, that there is a difference between changing the amount and changing the nature of the object for which the amount is appropriated.

That is precisely the distinction, I will state, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania seeks to make. The report proceeds:

Provided it is germane, it is just as proper to change the object as it is to change the amount, and the Chair already having ruled on a previous occasion, and properly I think, that the amount can be changed, surely it follows logically the object also may be changed.

I respectfully submit that this position, urged by the honorable gentleman from Maine being sustained by Speaker Crisp, ought to be sufficient to control the gentleman in the Chair on that question.

Mr. DALZELL. Read what the ruling of the Speaker was.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. The ruling of the Speaker was in harmony with the position taken by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

Mr. DALZELL. I want the gentleman to read it. Let us know what it is.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I will turn the volume over to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DALZELL. Send it to the Clerk's desk to be read.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I have not time to have it read.

Mr. DALZELL. I will yield the gentleman all the time he needs.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I want to vote.

Several MEMBERS. He yields you time. Demand a vote.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. In the time I demand a vote. [Laughter.] That is merely a slip of the tongue. I ask for a ruling of the Chair.

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman send the book to me so that I may see the ruling?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. With pleasure.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon this point of order, and as it may be a matter of great importance, the Chair desires to state the reasons for the ruling, and there is not time between this and 5 o'clock, there being but a minute and a half.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Make the ruling, and state the reasons for it afterwards. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 852 and the bill S. 357, and had directed him to report the same back with a recommendation that they do pass. The committee had also had under consideration the bill H. R. 4829, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 15, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. In the issue of the Evening Star of January 13, 1898, appears an article which I ask to have reported from the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

THEY ARE BARRED—OFFICIALS CAN NOT HAVE ANYTHING TO DO WITH CLAIMS.

An application for a pension for Ada C. Cheney, the widow of Jackson W. Cheney, a member of Company C, of the Fifty-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry has been received by the Pension Office and has been made special in view of the exigencies of the case.

The application has attracted attention for the reason that it is filed by W. L. STARK, attorney. Mr. STARK is a member of Congress from the Fourth district of Nebraska, and the case is the first one of its kind in which a member of Congress has acted as an attorney.

In the application to have the case made special Mr. STARK writes upon a Congressional blank, issued exclusively for the use of Representatives and Senators, and sets forth that the inquiry is not made at the request of any pension attorney or claim agent, although the original application bears the name W. L. STARK, M. C., attorney.

It may not be generally known, but there is a law on the statute book which provides that "every officer of the United States or person holding place of trust or profit, or discharging any official function under or in connection with any Executive Department of the Government of the United States, or under the Senate or House of Representatives of the United States, who acts as an agent or attorney for prosecuting any claims against the United States, or in any manner or by any means, otherwise than in the discharge of his proper official duties, aids or assists in the prosecution or support of any such claim, or receives any gratuity or any share for interest in any claim from any claimant against the United States, with intent to aid or assist, or in consideration of having aided or assisted, in the prosecution of such claim, shall pay a fine of not more than $5,000 or suffer imprisonment not more than one year, or both."

Mr. STARK. The allegation that there is any claim in the Pension Department that has my signature, "W. L. STARK, M. C., attorney," is absolutely false and without any foundation. I was never an attorney for an applicant for a pension in my life. I never was admitted to practice in the Departments of this Government. I now ask that this letter from the Hon. Henry Clay Evans be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C., January 15, 1898.

MY DEAR SIR: In reply to the matter of your personal interest, I beg to say that, upon investigation of the invalid claim of Jackson W. Cheney, Company C, Ninth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry; Company C, Fifty-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and Company B, United States Cavalry, it is found that the attorney recognized by this Bureau was T. E. Spencer.

In the claim of Ada C. Cheney, widow of Jackson W. Cheney, of above service, for widow's pension, you are advised that Edwin T. Gaddis is the recognized attorney, and the latter claim is now pending before this Bureau.

There is nothing in the case to show that you are in any way connected with it as attorney. You have called for Congressional status, which you have a right to do.

Very truly, yours,

H. CLAY EVANS, Commissioner.

HON. WILLIAM L. STARK,
House of Representatives.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have read and incorporated in my remarks the only piece of testimony that I have ever filed in the case, and a copy of the Congressional status slip. Before that is done I want to say that under the law of the State of Nebraska the board of county commissioners levy the tax and allow claims against the county. It is provided by the law of the State of Nebraska that any honorably discharged Union soldier shall never become a county charge, and we levy a tax to support and maintain them, which is administered by the soldiers' relief commission.

I make this statement because the piece of evidence discloses the fact that I was asked by the board of county commissioners of Saunders County, and that is indorsed by the soldiers' relief commission of that county. You will find my name is indorsed, printed on the front of that blank, "W. L. STARK, M. C., Fourth district of Nebraska, Aurora, Nebr." My name is W. L. STARK. I am a member of Congress. I represent the Fourth district of Nebraska, and I reside at Aurora, in the State of Nebraska. That is a true statement of fact, and it is printed on there for this purpose and no other, that in returning the testimony they will return it to me, that I may make the proper entry on my book. With the reading of that by the Clerk I am done.

The Clerk read as follows:

REQUEST FOR SPECIAL ACTION IN PENSION CLAIM.

STATE OF NEBRASKA, County of Saunders, ss:

In the matter of the pension claim of Ada W. Cheney, widow of Jackson W. Cheney, being claim No. W. O. 645860, whose service was Company C, Ninth Regiment Missouri Infantry, and C, Fifty-ninth Illinois Infantry, and B, United States Cavalry, and whose post-office address is Wahoo, Nebr., on this 24th day of December, A. D. 1897, personally appeared before me, a county clerk in and for the aforesaid county, duly authorized to administer oaths, H. K. Marcy, aged 39 years, a resident of Saunders County and chairman of the board of county commissioners in the county of Saunders and State of Nebraska, and of the Fourth Congressional district thereof, who, being duly sworn according to law, declares as follows, and for the reasons given below request is made for special consideration of the claim by the honorable Commissioner of Pensions:

In reference to the pension of Mrs. Cheney, the widow of Jackson W. Cheney, deceased, we would say that Mrs. Cheney is and has been a charitable ward of the county commissioners of this county, together with her five little children, who are all small and unable to maintain themselves, and has received from the board of county commissioners of this county from $5 to $10 per month since I have been on the board, January 3, 1895. Mrs. Cheney is a lady in poor health and has the sympathy of all who know her; honest and industrious to a fault, and should have had the pension which is due her and hers long before, saving the trials of parting with her husband, who had to leave the only thing dear to him on earth, his family, to die among strangers in a soldiers' hospital. In looking after this claim you are doing a thing that is prayed for by every person in the community who knows these people.

By order board of commissioners.

H. K. MARCY,
Chairman County Commissioners.

STATE OF NEBRASKA, County of Saunders, ss:

Sworn to and subscribed before me this day by the above-named affiant; and I certify that I read said affidavit to said affiant and acquainted him with its contents before he executed the same. I further certify that I am in no wise interested in said case, nor am I concerned in its prosecution; and that said affiant, H. K. Marcy, is personally known to me, and that he is a credible person.

Subscribed in my presence and sworn to before me this 24th day of December, 1897.

[SEAL OF SAUNDERS COUNTY.] C. A. WESTRAND,
County Clerk.

REQUEST FOR SPECIAL ACTION IN PENSION CLAIM.

STATE OF NEBRASKA, Saunders County, ss:

To the honorable Commissioner of Pensions, Washington, D. C.

The soldiers' relief commission in and for said Saunders County, having carefully inquired into the facts touching the request of the within-named Ada W. Cheney to have her claim made "special," hereby find and return: That she is a bona fide resident of said Saunders County, which is a part of the Fourth Congressional district of Nebraska; that her request is meritorious, and that special action is necessary for the reason that she is needy, sick, destitute, and must have help at once, as she can in all probability not live very long.

Therefore, in consideration of the premises, we respectfully give our approbation to her request as herein set forth.

Witness our official signatures this 24th day of December, 1897.

J. N. MILLER, President,
NATHAN D. THORP, Secretary,
THOMAS GRIFFIN,
The Soldiers' Relief Commission.

STATE OF NEBRASKA, Saunders County, ss:

These presents certify that I am the duly elected, acting, and qualified county clerk in and for said Saunders County; that the signatures of the members of the Soldiers' Relief Commission above appearing are genuine and that full faith and credit should be given to their certificate of approbation. Further certify that on this day they are the duly appointed acting and qualified members of said commission under the provisions of sections 4977, 4978, and 4979, Compiled Statutes of Nebraska.

Witness my official signature and the seal of said Saunders County this 27th day of December, 1897.

[SEAL OF SAUNDERS COUNTY.] C. A. WESTRAND,
County Clerk.

Congressional.—W. O., No. 645860. Name of claimant, Ada W. Cheney; post-office, Wahoo, Nebr. Name of soldier, Jackson W. Cheney, Company C, Ninth Missouri Infantry; Company C, Fifty-ninth Regiment Illinois Infantry; Company B, United States Cavalry.

The above-named claimant is, to the best of my knowledge and belief, a bona fide resident of the district which I represent; and this inquiry is not made at the request of any pension attorney or claim agent.

I desire to be advised if the showing hereto attached, made by Hon. H. K. Marcy, chairman county commissioners, and indorsed by soldiers' relief commission of Saunders County, is sufficient to make claim "special."

W. L. STARK.

These slips are exclusively for the use of Representatives in Congress, and when used by any other person will not receive consideration.

Representatives will greatly aid the Bureau of Pensions in giving them an early answer, if they will fill and use these slips in making calls in pension cases.

H. CLAY EVANS, Commissioner.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, House Document 63, a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, with accompanying report, submitting designs and estimates for a stone arch bridge and for a steel bridge with stone foundations over Rock Creek, on the line of Massachusetts avenue extended, has been referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. The Committee on Appropriations is dealing with that subject, and I ask that the document be returned and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the change of reference will be made. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

BERING SEA CLAIMS AWARD.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State in regard to the award to the commissioners appointed pursuant to the stipulations of the convention of February 8, 1896, between the United States and Great Britain, providing for the settlement of claims presented by the latter against the former in virtue of the convention of February 29, 1892.

The report of the Secretary of State presents a clear epitome of the award and renders unnecessary any extended observations on my part, further than to say that I cordially coincide with his recommendation, and that our treaty obligations demand prompt and favorable action by Congress, which I urgently hope may be taken, to the end that these long-pending questions may be finally and satisfactorily terminated.

The total amount necessary to satisfy the award of the commissioners is $473,151.26, which I recommend be appropriated.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, January 14, 1898.

MAP OF ALASKA.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I have been directed by the Committee on Printing to report back favorably the joint resolution (S. R. 81) authorizing the Director of the Geological Survey to prepare a map of Alaska.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Director of the Geological Survey is hereby authorized and directed to prepare a map of Alaska showing all known topographic and geologic features, including what is known of the gold-bearing rocks, and a descriptive text of the same, the text to contain also an explanation of the best known routes and methods of reaching the gold fields; 40,000 copies of the map and text to be printed, 10,000 for the use of the Senate, 20,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 10,000 for distribution by the Geological Survey; and the Director is authorized to have said map and text prepared and printed in the engraving and printing division of the Geological Survey; and $2,500 is hereby appropriated for the purpose, and that this appropriation be made immediately available.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to say just a word in explanation of this resolution. This map has already been prepared and is now ready to be printed in the Department of the Geological Survey.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question? Have we not already had a large number of maps of Alaska printed?

Mr. PERKINS. None have been authorized except such as the Geological Survey have had printed. There is a large demand for this map. Accompanying the map is an explanatory text, and we get a large number, if we order now, at a low price. I think there can be no objection to the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The consideration of this joint resolution requires unanimous consent. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PERKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

DISTRICT JUDGE, NORTHERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6554) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the northern judicial district of the State of Texas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint an additional district judge for the northern judicial district of the State of Texas, whose qualification, term of office, and salary shall be the same as provided by law for the district judge in and for said northern district of said State, and who shall have and exercise the same power, authority, and jurisdiction as now or that may be hereafter conferred by law upon said judge of said northern district of Texas.

SEC. 2. That in the event of a vacancy in said district, by death, resignation, or otherwise, of the district judge now provided for by law, said additional district judge herein provided shall immediately succeed to and become the judge of said district, with all the power and jurisdiction now or that may hereafter be conferred by law, and shall receive the salary as now or that may hereafter be provided for the judge of said district, and thereupon said office of additional district judge herein provided shall cease and determine.

SEC. 3. That this act take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before consent is given for the consideration of this bill, I wish the gentleman from Texas would explain to the House the necessity for the appointment of an additional judge in that district.

Mr. LANHAM. In response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], I will state that an extraordinary condition prevails in the northern judicial district of Texas. The present district judge, on account of long-continued ill health and disability, can not possibly discharge the duties of his office. For nearly if not quite three years he has not held court within the district. For two years he has been out of the district. The ordinary resources for judicial service by assignment of other judges have proven wholly inadequate to the existing demands. There are five different places for holding court in that district, three of which are among the largest cities in our State. The dockets are heavily crowded. In addition to the great volume of civil business, there are a number of criminal cases in which the Government has not been able to obtain trials; and besides, defendants have been precluded from having a speedy disposition of their cases. This bill is designed to meet an existing emergency. It has received the careful consideration of the Committee on the Judiciary, and their favorable report of it is unanimous.

Mr. DINGLEY. I recognize the exigency of this case as the gentleman states it; but as I did not hear the exact language of the bill, I should like to know whether it is so drawn that on the death of the present judge, who seems to be incapacitated for duty, there shall remain but one judge in that district.

Mr. LANHAM. It is. The second section of the bill provides that in the event of a vacancy caused by the death, resignation, or otherwise of the district judge now provided for by law, this additional district judge shall succeed to all the functions and jurisdiction of the present district judge, and thereupon the office of additional district judge shall cease and determine.

Mr. DINGLEY. I should like to have the second section of the bill read, in order that we may understand this matter.

The Clerk again read the second section of the bill.

Mr. LOUD. Is there no law now in existence by which this judge can be retired?

Mr. LANHAM. The present district judge has not served ten years, neither has he reached the age of 70; and we know of no constitutional method whereby we can dispose of this question otherwise than by just such a bill as this.

Mr. LOUD. Is there no law that would provide for the removal of this judge?

Mr. LANHAM. There are no causes existing, as I think, which authorize his removal. I could explain the situation more fully to the gentleman privately.

Mr. LOUD. I desire only to say that we have some Representatives from Texas who are opposed to any additional retirement provisions by Congress; but if this measure is considered perfectly proper, I do not know that I have any objection. It is a law, however, providing for an additional retirement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. BAILEY. In response to the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD], I simply desire to say, before the vote is taken, that this bill was put in this peculiar form, if it is peculiar, to meet my own objection. I would not have supported a bill to create a fourth district judgeship in the State of Texas. We already have three; and under anything like ordinary or normal conditions three are as many as we ought to have—more, in my opinion, than any State of this Union ought to have.

Neither was I willing to undertake to provide for the retirement of this judge. But his condition is such that it is utterly impossible for him to discharge the duties of his office—illustrating to my mind very forcibly the folly of giving any man in this country a commission to hold his office for life. But this judge has committed no offense for which he can be impeached. It is doubtful whether he is in such a position that he could resign his office. And the only way to enable the judicial machinery in that district to continue in motion is by such a bill as this. To meet the peculiar exigency of this case, I reluctantly agreed to the measure.

Mr. LOUD. Perhaps it would be advisable to amend our laws in this respect. This seems to be a kind of distinction without a difference, or a difference without a distinction. It is providing for a new method of retirement, which I suppose is satisfactory to the conscience of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BAILEY. No; this man can not retire.

Mr. LOUD. He could resign, could he not?

Mr. BAILEY. He can not, because he is without mental capacity to do so.

Mr. LOUD. Could not a law be framed to remove a man who is incompetent?

Mr. BAILEY. I should be glad to amend the Constitution so as to remove the incumbent in such a case as this. I have voted, as every Democrat on the Judiciary Committee of the Fifty-third Congress did, to amend the Constitution so as to fix a term of years for all these officers. That is the sensible way to reach the difficulty. But inasmuch as our friends on the other side would not permit that change to be made, we must deal with the condition as we find it.

The question being taken, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LANHAM, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill making appropriations for the support of the Army. And pending that motion, I would like to ask my associates on the Military Committee if we can not agree to some time when the general debate shall be closed?

Mr. DOCKERY. Who are the minority members?

Mr. HULL. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] is the senior member present.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I would make this suggestion to the gentleman from Iowa: I do not know to what extent anyone may desire to discuss the bill, but I am sure that there will be no unnecessary time consumed. Let us go on, then, for the present, and doubtless we can make some arrangement shortly.

Mr. HULL. I suggest that the debate be closed at 2 o'clock today, when I understand that eulogies are to begin.

Mr. COX. Well, this bill has just been printed, and nobody as yet has had an opportunity of examining it. I think it would save time if the House were afforded an opportunity of examining it. I will be governed, of course, by the wishes of the members on this side on the question.

Mr. HULL. I suggest that there is one member of the minority of the committee who is not now present who desires some time to discuss the matter. I refer to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCLELLAN]. If we close the general debate at 2 o'clock, I will agree that we shall extend his time when we reach the debate under the five-minute rule, as long as he may desire to address the House.

Mr. COX. Quite a number of gentlemen around me suggest that they prefer no time should be agreed upon at present until they have had an opportunity of examining the bill. And while there is no purpose to prolong the discussion, I think it will save time to let us go on now and consider the matter for a while.

Mr. HULL. Very well; then I will let the debate run on for the present, and simply move that we go into Committee of the Whole.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, if the members of the committee of the House take the report of the committee and the hearings held before it and examine them fully, it will obviate any extended explanation of the bill. The deficiencies heretofore reported by the Department on the Army bill, especially in the last deficiency bill, refer especially to the pay of the Army. In this bill the Committee on Military Affairs have largely increased the amount for the pay proper of the Army over that embodied in the bill expiring on the 30th day of June, 1897, for the reason that the Army is nearer its maximum now than at any time since the maximum was fixed at the present limit of 25,000 men. The evidence of the Paymaster-General before the committee was that there is only an average of one man to a company short, which is probably as near the maximum strength as it is possible to attain.

It is impossible, of course, to recruit beyond the number provided by law, and there is naturally a little shortage arising at all times by death, desertion, and other causes, reducing the number below the maximum strength.

We have made large reductions in the Quartermaster and Commissary Generals' Departments, for the reason that these two officers report quite a large surplus in their departments, and a general reduction in every place where efficiency is not impaired by economy.

The new legislation in the bill is confined to two items, as I now recollect, and by that I mean legislation which will be subject to the point of order. The committee will take pleasure in explaining these when we reach the items.

Mr. CLAYTON. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. CLAYTON. How much does the bill carry?

Mr. HULL. It carries the sum of $23,185,992.

Mr. CLAYTON. Is that an increase over the same bill which was passed by the last Congress?

Mr. HULL. Yes, sir; an increase of about $60,000, in round numbers.

Mr. CLAYTON. And you will explain wherein the increase is made as you proceed?

Mr. HULL. Yes. The items of appropriation will be all explained in the five minutes' debate; and if the gentleman will take the pains to look at the appendix to the bill, which is added for the information of the committee, and which, of course, will be stricken out when the conclusion of the bill is reached, he will find these various items.

Mr. COX. Before the gentleman proceeds, I understand that of course all points of order have been reserved on this bill.

Mr. HULL. Yes. I was saying to the gentleman that if he will look at the appendix to the bill he can see every increase and decrease which is made in the bill by comparing it with the items embodied in the last appropriation bill for this purpose. This appendix is added for the information of the Committee of the Whole House.

I was saying of the new legislation, before interruption, that one is a proviso for the pay of the Army. The War Department, I think some two years ago, made a regulation by which the paymaster was directed to pay troops by express, money orders, and drafts to the different posts. The paymaster reports that this has been found to work very badly, for the reason that the money passes into the hands of men who are not bonded, and while it is true that the express company is responsible for the money package—that is, for its safe delivery to the officer to whom the money is directed—yet the express company does not guarantee that the amount is there, and it has caused disputes as to whether the true amount was sent or not.

The committee believe that every dollar dispensed by an officer of the Government should be by a bonded officer; and by the paying of the troops by the paymaster directly, if there is any discrepancy, if there is any dispute about the amount, it is corrected at the paymaster's board, the same as it is at the counter of a bank before the customer goes away. So that we believe it is right to change this back, although it will cost in the neighborhood of $11,000 a year more to pay the Army by the paymasters directly than under the present system. We believed it was better to do this, and that it would save money to the Government in the end. The paymaster is bonded. He is responsible for the money.

Under the present system, even, it is held that he is responsible for the money until it is receipted for by the man to whom it goes, and yet he can not in the nature of things have absolute control over the funds for which he is responsible.

Another thing, Mr. Chairman: The committee believe that it is absolutely important that in time of peace the staff departments shall carry on the business of their departments as they would carry it on in the event of war; and there is not a man on the floor of this House who does not recognize the fact that in the event of war the paymaster would have to make the payment direct to the individual soldiers.

Another item of new legislation was recommended by the Chief of Ordnance, General Flagler. That is a proviso for making effective an act passed by the last Congress, in 1897. It provides simply that whenever the Government sells to the State, for the use of the militia, any ordnance or ordnance stores, it can take the same money received for ordnance and ordnance stores and apply it to replacing the stores so sold. The General reports that under the present law, with the amount appropriated by Congress only sufficient to supply the Army in its immediate needs and to accumulate a small reserve, they have been compelled to refuse what the States have applied for. Members can see the full argument on that, if they will turn to the report of the Chief of Ordnance, on pages 4 and 5.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think these cover the two points especially that would be subject to a point of order. The committee have made a change with regard to the mileage of officers traveling without troops. Under the last Secretary of War a recommendation was made to put the mileage proper under the Paymaster's Department and to give to the Quartermaster-General the furnishing of all transportation. I suppose you gentlemen of the committee know that under the law as it exists officers traveling without troops or with troops are entitled to a mileage of 4 cents per mile. That does not include their transportation. It is simply for the payment of their meals and incidental expenses and their board while they are absent on detached duty.

Mr. DALZELL. Is not their transportation paid for?

Mr. HULL. Their transportation is paid for, but it is not paid for out of the 4 cents per mile. Their transportation is given them in addition to the 4 cents per mile. Officers get in transportation the amount actually required over the nearest usually traveled route in addition to 4 cents per mile. Under the act passed by the Fifty-fourth Congress we transferred all the transportation to the Quartermaster's Department, and left the mileage proper under the Paymaster's Department; but the committee believed that it was impossible to keep track of the amount used for transportation under this system, and have transferred it all back to the Paymaster's Department. Under the quartermaster, one lump sum is given for transportation of the Army.

It makes no difference in the amount appropriated, because in the last appropriation we took $60,000 from the mileage account and transferred it to the Quartermaster-General's account, and we now take that amount from the Quartermaster-General's account and transfer it back. It makes a difference in the phraseology of the bill. I do not believe it is subject to a point of order, but I call attention to it so that members may look the matter up and determine as to the advisability of the changes.

Mr. Chairman, there was one question which came up on the urgent deficiency bill that, it seems to me, in fairness to the Committee on Military Affairs, I should have spoken to at that time; but, being called to the chair while the debate was in progress, I failed to refer in that debate to the questions raised by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] as to the establishment of a new soldiers' home.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND], if I understood his discussion, gave the impression that the Committee on Military Affairs established this Home without any consideration of the general question of a home. I was not on the subcommittee that made the report recommending the new home, but, being chairman of the full committee, I was cognizant of all that was going on, and I want to say to this House that during the last Congress, when the question of establishing a new soldiers' home was before the committee, there were at least seven bills offered from different parts of the country, proposing the establishment of a new home in as many different States.

Many hearings were had as to the best location for the Home. Every gentleman in Congress had notice that the question was open and the Committee on Military Affairs was investigating the question of location. There was no difference of opinion in the committee as to the necessity for the Home. That was conceded on all hands. The gentleman who was chairman of the subcommittee on Soldiers' Homes in the Fifty-fourth Congress represented a district in Missouri, so Missouri, at least, was not cut off. After a full examination had been made, the subcommittee reported in favor of establishing the Home at Danville, Ill. The full committee adopted the report because the argument showed the location to be a proper one.

Mr. BELKNAP. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. BELKNAP. That situation now exists, and we have petitions in this Congress to establish additional Homes.

Mr. HULL. Oh, yes.

Mr. BELKNAP. That was not only true in the last Congress, but in this Congress.

Mr. HULL. Yes, we have a great many bills before us; but the same necessity does not exist now that did then. While it is true the Homes are overcrowded, and probably will be overcrowded when the new Home is completed, the same demand does not exist that did before we started this new Home; because this new Home, when completed, will draw 2,500 from the number now clamoring for admission. To-day more than 3,000 old soldiers are unable to gain admission because there is no room for them. Now, the statement that I wish to emphasize is this: That every member of the House of the Fifty-fourth Congress had, or should have had, from the report of the Board of Managers, from the bills that were introduced in Congress, from the discussion that was had in the Committee on Military Affairs, due notice that a new Home was to be established; and if any gentleman wanted that Home in his locality, it was his place to introduce a bill and go before the committee and show his location was better than any other proposed to the committee. There was nothing carried on behind closed doors and nothing done surreptitiously.

Now, as to the way the appropriation was made, that is not in my province. The Home was absolutely necessary, and the Committee on Military Affairs gave a hearing to every member of the House who had a bill before the committee to establish a Soldiers' Home; and certainly my friend from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] would not claim that it is the duty of the Committee on Military Affairs, or any other committee of the House having a subject before it, to come into the House and inform members that if they want to establish an institution in their districts they had better introduce bills and try to have the committee report them favorably. There has been much discussion of this question. I have had letters from my own State and others asking why bills were not introduced for the different States and why hearings were not given.

In reply, I say they were, and were given full consideration. I will say, gentlemen, very frankly, that the State of Iowa, I believe, is the best place in the United States for a cavalry post, and a bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs in favor of establishing such a post; but it could not be brought up. Fighting for that, I had personally no interest of a local nature in a home. There was no bill favoring a soldiers' home in Iowa or Missouri. There were bills for the establishment of soldiers' homes in Kentucky, South Dakota, Arkansas, and other States; but after a full view of the situation there was no dissenting voice in the Committee on Military Affairs that of all the bills presented before that committee for the establishment of a home Danville gave the best reasons for securing the location, on account of being the center of a great soldier constituency, and other natural advantages.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I should like to ask the gentleman a question, for I have not read the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Is there any provision in this bill for an increase of the Army—the Regular Army?

Mr. HULL. No; we could not introduce such a proposition on this bill. It would go out on a point of order, and we did not desire to raise that question.

Mr. DINGLEY. If the gentleman will allow me, I notice on page 23 another paragraph of new legislation.

Mr. HULL. Subject to a point of order.

Mr. DINGLEY. And subject to a point of order. It is the paragraph contained in lines 16, 17, 18, and 19, providing for the admission free of duty of a certain article.

Mr. HULL. I thank the gentleman for calling my attention to it. The bill was reported yesterday, and I had not put that on my memoranda. There is new legislation there that is subject to the point of order.

Mr. DINGLEY. On page 23 of this bill I find the following provision:

> And when, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, it is necessary to purchase material abroad for the manufacture of sacks for artillery cartridges, it shall be admitted free of duty.

I merely desire to call attention to the fact that this is a variation from the policy of the Government with reference to materials imported for use of the Departments. I understand the special reason is that this particular article is not made in this country, and not with any view of changing this policy. It was thought advisable to make the Government, like individuals, pay the duties on imposts, because it does not affect financial conditions one way or the other, but it does tend to the use of articles made here.

If the duties are paid they come in as revenue, if used by the Government. It was found in practice that whenever a Department was given the option of importing free of duty articles for certain purposes there would be sometimes imported material made here, and the manufacturers of that article had not a fair opportunity to compete in the matter of supplying the article; therefore it has been found desirable not to introduce as a policy that an article should come in free of duty when purchased for the Government. But in this case there is this exception, that this particular article is to-day not made in this country. I suggest, if that provision is to be inserted, as it does not affect the general principle of the law or our particular legislation, that in connection with the words—there be inserted the words "because such material is not manufactured in this country." That would give the reason that exists, and would not allow an officer to import when the article was made in this country. This is simply carrying out the policy which the Government has pursued in these matters. I make that suggestion to my friend from Iowa.

> And when, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, it is necessary to purchase material abroad for the manufacture of sacks for artillery cartridges—

Mr. HULL. When we come to it under the five-minute rule that amendment can be offered. I want to suggest to my friend from Maine that the fortifications bill carries a provision much broader than this. I know it did last year, and the amendment submitted to the committee was broader than that put in the bill. We confined this to the only article that they could show us should be admitted free of duty if the sentence stays in the bill.

The Chief of Ordnance says that the duty under the general clause of the tariff bill increases the cost of this cloth about 1,600 per cent because of that particular material, exceptional material; and if we do not put this in, they will use flannel, which is not nearly as good.

Mr. DINGLEY. They would simply pay the duty, and it would come in as revenue.

Mr. HULL. No; they would not pay the duty; they would not buy it because it would be such an excessive price. They would use flannel, which is not so good for the purpose, because it is not so firm. My impression is that the matter is covered very fully and is amply protected; but when we come to that point in the bill under the five-minute rule and it is open to amendment, that question can be settled.

Mr. DINGLEY. Of course, as a matter of finance it does not affect the Government in either way. If the duty is paid, it comes in as revenue, and then goes out as expenditure.

Mr. HULL. In this case the Chief of Ordnance says he must have $30,000 for this item, if this provision is not in the bill, and that perhaps that will not be enough to cover it. He says he will not import it, but he will buy flannel made in this country. So that we would have increased price for an inferior article and no compensation duty.

Mr. DINGLEY. I take it for granted that this material is not made in this country, because the demand for it is so small as to not justify it.

Mr. HULL. Precisely. There is no demand for it outside of the Army.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Will the gentleman allow me a question? Do I understand that the duty increases the cost of this article?

Mr. HULL. Yes; it is the cheapest kind of goods, but not classified in the tariff law, and under the general provision is subject to a high duty.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. It increases the cost to our Government. How much does it increase the cost?

Mr. HULL. I think it is thirteen and a fraction cents a yard, and when the duty is added it is some $2.50.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Then this is a case where the foreigner does not pay the tax imposed by the Government?

Mr. HULL. Neither party would pay the tax, because it would not be bought or imported.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is a case where an article is not made in this country, and the duty operates in such a case as a tax always. That is the reason why a duty put upon an imported article not made here is a tax upon the people of this country, while a duty placed on an article that is made here is not in its final effect a tax upon the people, because competition here fixes the price.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I am glad the gentleman from Maine has explained the matter. I was asking for information.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, the difference in the amount of this bill and the one that preceded it is not very large; in fact, it can be easily explained why it is no increase at all. I am as much opposed to extravagant appropriations as any man in this House. I have carefully gone through, as a member of the subcommittee and with the committee, this bill, and I am at a loss, outside of a few items, to see how any reduction can be made. The difficulty in my mind arises from the legislation that preceded the bill and by arrangements made, so that it is almost utterly impossible to get anything like a reduction of the general expenses. Now, I have no desire to detain the committee, but I do want to call attention to some items in the bill that can probably be considered on amendments under the five-minute rule.

On page 6 of the bill, line 16, you will find, "for pay of officers on the retired list, and for officers who may be placed thereon during the current year, $1,200,000." Now, when I come to reflect what that is for, and the large amount of money that item carries, as I understand it, the query arises why so large a sum is necessary. As I understand, it has grown up under this kind of a system. The promotion of the officers is under the discretion of the President, and the habit seems to have gone into the Army——

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman allow me a question? Is it not under the discretion of the President only as to officers above the rank of colonel?

Mr. COX. Yes; I said that or intended to. The habit has grown up—and if I say anything that is not correct, I will thank the chairman or anybody else to correct it—in this way: You take the old officers in age not in the service, and the young officers old in the service, and, when the promotion comes, instead of promoting them according to the time of their service, they are promoted according to age. The result is that they soon reach the retired list, and the promotion follows along up the line. Now, as long as that is the practice, as long as that thing is tolerated, your retired list will necessarily increase, and you see to what proportions it has already grown.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. COX. Certainly.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Can the President increase the rank of an officer after he is on the retired list?

Mr. COX. No; the promotion comes before that.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Is it not a fact that they do increase the grade before they are put upon the retired list, and then, after being put upon the retired list, they draw pay that they were not entitled to in the service. Is not that the way this bill is drawn up?

Mr. COX. It is drawn up on that idea. What causes it is what I have suggested. The promotion ought to be governed by the time in service, and to prevent this enormous list of retired officers that now takes over a million dollars to pay.

There is another item in this bill which I wish to call attention to, and I suppose that unless some gentleman has had his attention specially directed to it he would not know that such a thing existed in our Government. I did not until I examined into the matter. On page 8, line 4, you will find "interest on deposits of enlisted men, $85,000." Now, the estimate made upon that item was $96,000.

Now, that has grown up in this way: Under the act of 1872 the soldier had a portion of his pay retained by the Government, and that money was put at interest. Afterwards that provision was changed so that the Government could not at its own will retain this money, but that the soldier, if he chose, might deposit the money with the Government, which money should draw 4 per cent interest.

Mr. BLAND. How long is this money permitted to remain?

Mr. COX. Until the soldier is discharged—until his time is out.

Mr. BLAND. Does this provision apply to all soldiers, or merely to officers who may be retired?

Mr. COX. It applies to all soldiers until they have been discharged—until they have served out their time.

Mr. BLAND. Does it apply to retired officers?

Mr. COX. No, sir; it does not include officers. The gentleman will see the difficulty in a moment. The money thus retained is retained in the paymaster's office; and it nowhere appears in the books of the Treasury of the United States. Whatever the principal sum may be, we have no means before our committee to ascertain what that principal sum is——

Mr. BLAND. What is the object of this provision—to enable the soldier to save a little money which he may have when he is discharged?

Mr. COX. That is the intention.

Mr. BLAND. How is it, then, that we do not know the amount of the principal?

Mr. COX. Because it does not appear in the books of the Treasury of the United States; the money is in the hands of the paymaster.

Mr. BLAND. It seems to me that he could be compelled to make some report.

Mr. COX. It is but justice to say that there is a detailed account of this money in the paymaster's office. But my point is this: Here is a large amount of money, reaching, as appears from this appropriation, the sum of $85,000, which is in the paymaster's department, with nothing appearing upon the Treasury books in regard to it; and this sum of money—I call special attention to this point—this sum of money, whatever it is, belonging to the soldiers, is used in the payment of the expenses of the Army. It is true that when the soldier applies for his money he can get it. But your appropriation is made for a certain amount of money for the different departments. Without any law upon the statute book authorizing the Government of the United States to use this fund in the payment of liabilities, this money is taken to pay expenses; and I have not been able to distinguish whether it is interest that is thus paid out or principal.

I have not been able to ascertain the amount of the principal that is drawing 4 per cent, or the amount due as interest upon that sum. Whatever the principal may be, it is drawing interest at the rate of 4 per cent. The great wrong, as I think, is in the Government paying 4 per cent interest upon this fund, while it does not appear anywhere in the Treasury books what the amount of the fund is, and in taking this fund, without any appropriation whatever, and applying it for the payment of the expenses of the Army.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I understood the gentleman to say a few moments ago that there is nothing on the books of the Treasury Department to show how this money of the soldier has been used.

Mr. COX. That account is kept in the paymaster's department.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I understand the gentleman now to say that the money of the soldier deposited with the paymaster is used in paying the general expenses of the Army.

Mr. COX. That is true.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. How, then, does the gentleman arrive at the conclusion that there are no data at the Treasury Department showing the expenditure of this money?

Mr. COX. Because of the trouble we have had in ascertaining it there.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Does the gentleman mean to say that the paymaster of his own volition appropriates this money?

Mr. COX. I mean to say that without any law appropriating the money it is used in payment of expenses.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Does the gentleman say that the paymaster does not account to the Treasury Department for the expenditure?

Mr. COX. I say the method of expenditure does not appear on the books of the Treasury Department.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. How, then, can it be known that the army officer making the expenditure does not appropriate the money to his own use?

Mr. COX. Oh, the books are kept in the paymaster's office. But I am contending that, if this fund is used by the Government for any purpose, the expenditure ought to appear on the books of the Treasury Department. This money should appear as an item of indebtedness when it is used and as an item of credit to the soldier when it is not used.

Mr. HULL. I believe my colleague said there was no law under which this money was paid out or taken in?

Mr. COX. I did not say that. I say there is no law authorizing the use of this money in the payment of the expenses of the Army or in any other way. In other words, the money is not appropriated.

Mr. HULL. I think, if my colleague on the committee will read the act of 1872, he will find a provision that this money shall be taken and used and repaid, in the ordinary transaction of business. But I rose for the purpose of calling my friend's attention to the report of the Paymaster-General. I understood him to say, in answer to a question, that we can not tell how much of this money is principal or how much is interest.

Mr. COX. We can not from the Treasury books.

Mr. HULL. But the report of the Paymaster-General, which we had before the committee, gave that information.

Mr. COX. My point is this: Whether this money remains idle or is used, the debits and the credits should appear upon the books of the Treasury; but they appear only on the books of the Paymaster-General.

Mr. HULL. But the War Department has given us a statement of the amount. That is what I wanted to call the gentleman's attention to.

Mr. COX. The chairman of our committee [Mr. HULL] is aware how that statement was brought in. I voluntarily promised the chairman of the committee that I would go to the Paymaster-General's Office and see how this money was accounted for. But the point of my objection lies in this: If we hold money belonging to the soldier, it ought to be in the Treasury Department; if we pay it out, such payment ought to appear there. It is not right that a fund belonging to the soldiers, or any other fund in any Department of this Government, should be paid out without an act appropriating the money.

Mr. GAINES. I wish to ask my colleague this: What provision is there in this bill against payments to officers who have been retired by the Government on salary and who have engaged in other occupations?

Mr. COX. None in the world. There is an appropriation in a lump sum for retired officers; that I have just referred to.

Mr. GAINES. The point to which I call my friend's attention is this: A number of navy officers, who have been retired on salaries, have made contracts with these armor-plate concerns to work for them, and while the armor-plate factories are doing work for the United States. In other words, these men are drawing salaries from the Government as retired officers and are at the same time drawing salaries from these armor-plate concerns. Now, is there any provision in this bill touching upon this reprehensible practice?

Mr. COX. No——

Mr. GRIFFIN. There could not be any provision in the Army bill in respect to naval matters. That comes in another bill.

Mr. COX. Of course I understand that it could not be in this bill.

Mr. CLAYTON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. COX. Certainly.

Mr. CLAYTON. Referring to this matter to which the gentleman called attention and read from page 8:

Interest on deposits of enlisted men, $35,000.

I would like to ask if the matter of that deposit is purely voluntary with the soldier? I understand that it is. Is that correct?

Mr. COX. Oh, yes.

Mr. CLAYTON. Then is the Government going into the business of paying interest on voluntary deposits?

Mr. COX. Well, that is authorized by an act of Congress. It provides that we shall pay interest if they leave the money on deposit there.

Mr. CLAYTON. What act does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. COX. The act of 1872; and a subsequent act was also passed changing it a little different, but still that is substantially in force.

Mr. CLAYTON. And I understand the gentleman to say there is no account of this kept in the Treasury Department?

Mr. COX. I repeat what I have said before, that it does not appear on the books of the Treasury Department, though it does appear on the accounts of the paymaster.

Mr. CLAYTON. And your point is that it should appear on the books of the Treasury Department?

Mr. COX. I advocate the broad principle that if the Government owes a soldier a dollar, or if it owes anybody a dollar, it should appear on the books of the Treasury Department.

Mr. CLAYTON. And I agree fully with the gentleman.

Mr. COX. It should always appear by our accounts in the Treasury Department exactly what the Government owes, or what it does not owe, and if at any time a man wants to ascertain the outstanding obligations of the Government these books should exhibit fully and exactly the condition of our indebtedness.

But I desire to call the attention of the committee to another item in the bill, on page 25, and I hope it may be remedied before we get through with the consideration of this legislation. There is on that page an item, under the head of "Office of the Chief Signal Officer," of an appropriation of a lump sum of $18,000 for the Signal Service of the Army. If any man on the committee has ever been able to find out what that money has been paid out for, I certainly have not done so, and have not seen any statement which would give the information. We have called upon the Chief Signal Officer for a statement as to how that money was used, and the response was that whatever we have given has been exhausted, but no response was made as to how the expenditure was distributed or used.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I would like to ask the gentleman if this officer did not furnish the exact amount which was paid out during the last year?

Mr. COX. Oh, about $18,000 he said was paid out. With a few exceptions——

Mr. GRIFFIN. I desire to correct the gentleman; he stated that the amount paid out was seventeen thousand nine hundred and eighty-eight dollars and some cents.

Mr. COX. Well, I put in the words "about $18,000." Is not that about $18,000?

But anyhow that is not the point. Here is a lump sum of $18,000 appropriated, which seems to have been running through the bill for a number of years, and I appeal to any member of the committee here if he is able to give to the House an exact statement of what that expenditure has been made for.

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman will yield to me a moment, I think the letter that I sent to the Signal Officer did not ask for a detailed statement of what it was paid out for. I think the committee assumed that it was paid out for the objects and purposes prescribed in the appropriation act. What the committee wanted to find out was as to the amount that was expended—how much was necessary to be appropriated in order to determine whether it could cut down the appropriation or would find it necessary to increase it.

Mr. COX. Well, whatever may have been in the mind of the chairman of the committee and other members I do not know; but what I wanted to find out was how the money was spent.

Mr. BAIRD. Does the gentleman state that there was no detailed statement as to how the money was spent?

Mr. COX. None whatever. Now, Mr. Chairman, I close what I should like to say about this matter by remarking that we have devoted much time and patience to the effort to arrive at a proper conclusion with regard to this bill. In matters of this character whenever a leak occurs it is apt to grow into a stream, and I do think that while this debate is proceeding this matter of $18,000 can easily be accounted for and that it should be explained. If it is legitimately expended, I have not a word to say.

How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has thirty-nine minutes.

Mr COX. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY].

Mr. HENRY of Texas Mr. Chairman, the chosen instruments of the greatest trust on the face of the earth have at last proclaimed for eternally fixing the gold standard upon the American people. Mr. McKinley and Secretary Gage, his mouthpiece, as the representatives of the men who own the $600,000,000 of the gold of this country, for the first time now propose to make the gold standard the financial policy of our nation. The money changers are at the helm and they propose to take advantage of their position and forever foist upon us the British monetary standard that no party ever dared before to advocate as an American policy. The masses and producers are now to be governed by the money cormorants and shylocks who for twenty-five years have been secretly trying to permanently fasten themselves upon the resources, bone and sinew of the country. Their willing and pliant instruments are now evidently the Chief Executive and his Secretary of the Treasury.

No more implacable and dangerous foe to the people's interests could have been found anywhere than this Secretary. He surely is the bean ideal of the gold-standard ring, for his utterances recently mark him as the rankest and most intolerant advocate of that standard that the world has yet produced. Until a few years ago you could not read of any party in this country that favored the gold standard as an American policy and opposed bimetallism, nor could you find an avowed advocate of such a policy anywhere in this nation. Now it is sadly different. The Republican party has been swept into power, and during its first year's history it is evident that it will go down as a party of broken promises and pledges and the friend of the most infamous currency law ever devised. The great money barons of the gigantic trust located in Lombard and Wall streets sit in their high places and coerce the Government of the United States into obeying their behests.

We might as well face the fact that the officials of the United States are executing the plans of this ring and are in strict accord with them. They now come with flying banners, headed by their general, the Secretary of the Treasury, and propose what no American party ever advocated. They have torn off the mask, thrown aside their duplicity, and now say that the gold standard should be an exclusive American policy.

THE GAGE BILL.

On December 16, 1897, Mr. Gage appeared before the Banking and Currency Committee to explain his bill, which had been on the same day introduced by Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts in the House.

He boldly and unblushingly stated:

The objects I have in mind in the series of provisions offered by me are four in number:

1. To commit the country more thoroughly to the gold standard; remove, so far as possible, doubts and fears on that point, and thus strengthen the credit of the United States both at home and abroad.

If this is the true policy of the Republican party now, their declarations in their last platform were hypocritical and their past history deceitful and designing. Their professions of friendship for bimetallism were false and only made to ensnare. No sensible and honest man will now doubt that Mr. Gage voices the sentiments of his party and Administration. The lines of battle may now be clearly drawn between those who will fight on the side of the gold trust and cormorants, and those who will defend the rights of the producers, toilers, and builders of the Republic. Certainly with this declaration of the Secretary of the Treasury no Republican will have the audacity to say anywhere that there is a spark of friendship left in the Administration for bimetallism. Its friends must come from some other party. In 1888 the Republican party declared in their platform:

The Republican party is in favor of the use of gold and silver as money, and condemns the policy of the Democratic Administration in its efforts to demonetize silver.

If the Republicans were sincere in 1888, they are not sincere now. If Mr. Gage's promises are true now, the party's pledges in 1888 were false. No human mind can reconcile the two positions. It is said that Mr. McKinley wrote this plank of 1888. In 1892 this same party said in its platform that it was friendly to silver—bimetallism. Can you believe they spoke sincerely, if Mr. Gage represents them now? No man is simple enough to think so. He can only conclude that the platform was a false promise and pretense. Here is the platform:

The American people from tradition and interest favor bimetallism, and the Republican party demands the use of both gold and silver as standard money, such restrictions to be determined by contemplation of values of the two metals, so that the purchasing and debt-paying power of the dollar, whether of silver, gold, or paper, shall be equal at all times.

The interests of the producers of the country, its farmers and its workingmen, demand that every dollar, paper or gold, issued by the Government shall be as good as any other. We commend the wise and patriotic steps already taken by our Government to secure an international parity of value between gold and silver for use as money throughout the world.

The truth is that after these seductive and sweet promises the gold ring have gotten their chief friend at the head of the Treasury, who demonstrates to the world that his party deluded the American people by duplicitous declarations in order to get into power and destroy bimetallism and usher in the reign of British gold-standardism. Who can truly say that this party was ever honest in a single declaration for silver if the present Secretary continues in power?

Then in 1896, at St. Louis, this same party said: "We are therefore opposed to free coinage of silver except by international agreement with the leading commercial nations of the world, which we pledge ourselves to promote; and until such an agreement can be obtained the existing gold standard must be preserved." If the Secretary speaks with authority, and no one doubts that he does, the Republican party does not favor international bimetallism, and its platform pledge is a false and fraudulent promise that helped the party into power. If Mr. Gage succeeds in "committing the country more thoroughly to the gold standard and removing all doubts and fears on that point," no one who aids him in doing this can consistently and decently claim to be a friend to any sort of bimetallism.

These solemn record declarations can not be harmonized. If his party assist him in this nefarious scheme, all honesty and decency will estop them from ever pretending a friendly feeling for bimetallism. When the "committing" is done and the "doubts and fears" removed, where is the man who aided in doing it that would travel one inch in the direction of bimetallism by the international or any other route? It is absurd to contemplate it. Is it possible to commit the country more thoroughly to the gold standard by ushering in international bimetallism? The interrogatory answers itself. Therefore we must assume it as settled that the Secretary and his party are the arch enemies of silver.

If the Secretary speaks truly, Mr. McKinley should not have used the $100,000 to destroy the gold standard with international bimetallism. If he speaks truly for his party, Mr. McKinley did not when he promised in his letter of acceptance to keep in circulation as good as gold all the silver and paper money of the country, because this bill says the greenbacks must be retired. If the Secretary voices the true sentiments of his party now, they did not deal fairly with the people in 1893 in contributing to the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman Act, when they said in that act:

And it is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to continue the use of both gold and silver as standard money, and to coin both gold and silver into money of equal intrinsic value and exchangeable value, such equality to be secured through international agreement, or by such safeguards of legislation as will insure the maintenance of the parity in value of the coins of the two metals, and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the markets and in the payment of debts. And it is hereby further declared that the efforts of the Government should be steadily directed to the establishment of such a safe system of bimetallism as will maintain at all times the equal power of every dollar coined or issued by the United States, in the markets and in the payment of debts.

Then it is plain that the fight is on between gold monometallism and bimetallism. The former is backed by the Republican party of false pledges, the instruments of the gold barons and colossal trusts. The latter is defended by the toilers, the producers, the common people, who love their country and worship around freedom's altars. Call on the conflict. Let it be a battle royal. Let it be "war to the knife and the knife to the hilt," until we know who rules in this country—the money power or the people. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is the same old contest over in which Jackson overthrew and crushed out the banks and moneyed oligarchy. The issue is identical, and the verdict of the masses will again demonstrate that this is a government of the people's will and not one of sordid wealth. I take up the contest in behalf of the masses and now proclaim eternal political enmity to the money power that would seek to rule the destinies of this great Republic by preying upon the toiling millions. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The very first step toward erecting the gold standard may be described in the language of the Secretary. He proposes to fasten an enormous bonded indebtedness upon the country as an initial move. This is his language:

As to the first proposition—to commit the country more thoroughly to the gold standard, remove as far as possible doubts and fears on that point, and thus strengthen the United States both at home and abroad—the proposition to refund the bonded debt of the United States, now payable in coin, into bonds having a lower rate of interest and payable, principal and interest, in gold, is a measure directed to that end. It will cost the Government nothing whatever, so far as the refunding of the debt is concerned, except the expenditure necessary to print the bonds and do the clerical work. It will take ambiguity out of the relations of the Government to its creditors; it will give, I believe, a strength and security and power to the whole commercial and industrial system of the United States, and the measure as it is prepared will, in my opinion, accomplish that object.

In section 3 the bill proposes to fund the $100,000,000 of 1904 bonds and the $559,640,000 of 1907 bonds. The Secretary computes that there would be in the aggregate $659,000,000 of the bonds to be funded. He proposes to "issue $90,000,000 more of bonds than are outstanding to refund these bonds."

He would absolutely give away $90,000,000 of the people's money to the money ring. He confesses before the committee that the $90,000,000 is a gift, pure and simple. Here is the statement:

Mr. COX. First, the difference on the face of the bond. It provides that it is payable, principal and interest, in gold. My point is—it is a mere matter of calculation, but I desire it to appear in the record—how much for a dollar of bond, say of 1907, would he receive in the new bonds?

Secretary GAGE. Perhaps I can answer your question comprehensively by saying it will take about $90,000,000 more of bonds than are now outstanding to refund these bonds. Those bonds will draw 2½ per cent interest instead of 4 per cent, and the total amount of money to be paid out by the Government at the end of ten years would be the same in the one case as in the other.

Mr. JOHNSON. That section is not expected to make any saving to the Government as an interest investment?

Secretary GAGE. No, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON. The idea is the one you have explained, of putting the national finances on a sound basis?

Secretary GAGE. Yes, sir; and it has the advantage or disadvantage—whichever you may call it—of saving an annual disbursement of about $10,000,000.

Mr. BROSIUS. Thus increasing the credit, but in the end increasing the debt?

Secretary GAGE. Yes, sir.

Highway robbery is as justifiable as this proposition.

Such a scheme as this will bring the undertaker to the door of the Republican party in less than twelve months. [Laughter and applause.] It is outrageous and criminal to thus give away the $90,000,000 of the Government's bonds and tax the people with the enormous interest charges in this funding scheme. This is solely for the purpose of plundering the Treasury and perpetuating the national banks.

The Secretary proposes to retire the $346,000,000 of greenbacks and the Sherman notes in order to make the way clearer for the national banks. The banks have declared that more bonds must be issued, and this bill is the decree of the banks. The Secretary says:

There would be in existence, if my bill were carried out and became a law, about $1,120,000,000 of bonds of the United States. If the banks could get all of those bonds, they could issue $1,120,000,000 of circulating notes by depositing those bonds with the Government. They could then issue 25 per cent of that amount in this free circulation, as we may call it, which would be 25 per cent more, substantially $300,000,000.

And he calmly says that he would make the national-bank notes based on these bonds redeemable in gold. Oh, what an "endless chain!"

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is only a step toward the issue of national-bank notes without the deposit of any bonds or security with the Government. After the banks get this new lease, that will be their next demand. I am opposed bitterly to this step. I am opposed to the banks issuing the currency of the country and assuming the functions of the Government. No such measure shall ever receive my vote. Considering the avowed objects of the bill, as stated by its author, I am unalterably opposed to it. There are many reasons in detail that I could assign for my opposition, but I would fight it to the uttermost for two alone.

Its two central ideas are to irrevocably commit the country to the gold standard and to turn over the function of issuing the currency to banking corporations. Banks should not have this power for many reasons. No language can better describe the dangers of giving this power than that of Mr. Benton in one of his masterly speeches against the Bank of the United States. He said:

The Government ought not to delegate this power if it could. It was too great a power to be trusted to any banking company whatever, or to any authority but to the highest and most responsible which was known to our form of government. The Government itself ceases to be independent, it ceases to be safe, when then the national currency is at the will of a company. The Government can undertake no great enterprise, neither of war nor peace, without the consent and cooperation of that company: it can not count its revenues for six months ahead without referring to the action of that company, its friendship or its enmity, its concurrence or its opposition, and see how far that company will permit money to be scarce or to be plentiful, how far it will let the money system go on regularly or throw it into disorder, how far it will suit the interest or polity of that company to create a tempest or suffer a calm in the moneyed ocean. The people are not safe when such a company has such a power. The temptation is too great, the opportunity too easy to put up and put down prices, to make and to break fortunes, to bring the whole community upon its knees to the Neptunes who preside over the flux and reflux of paper. All property is at their mercy.

This Gage bill is the culmination of the conspiracy formed twenty-five years ago by the money power to destroy silver as primary money, set up the gold standard, and permit the banks to issue all the paper money. These conspirators have never slept, but have constantly kept their faces toward this scheme. This bill is the apotheosis of their fondest dreams. The time has now come when the people must decide whether the banks shall issue all the paper money, or whether the Government shall resume its proper functions and issue such money. As for myself, I find no difficulty in irrevocably aligning myself on the side of the Government and against the banks. [Applause.]

I do not criticise the men engaged in the banking business, but the system. Banks should never be invested with the power of issuing currency. Their only legitimate sphere is to receive deposits, lend money, buy and sell exchange, and discount paper. This was Jefferson's idea. But now the banks propose to step aside from their legitimate field of action and to go into the money issuing business. Shall we now destroy these institutions or fix them upon the body politic for all time to come? The issue must be faced and determined. The Gage bill would curse this country for a century to come. It would be the most disastrous blow that ever befell the American people, not excepting the wars, famines, and floods. When the late civil war ended the banks began a bitter and relentless warfare against the Treasury notes. Congress passed an act on April 12, 1866, to retire the Treasury notes and take them out of circulation permanently.

But the people at once in their wrath forced Congress to repeal that act, and on the 4th of February, 1868, the Treasury note by Congressional action was placed back in circulation. Again, on January 14, 1875, the banks procured Congress to pass another act destroying the Treasury note and taking it out of circulation. The outraged indignation of the people again compelled Congress to retrace its steps, and on May 31, 1878, a Democratic Congress repealed the act of January 14, 1875, by restoring the Treasury notes to circulation. The banking hosts again met with an ignominious defeat. Now, Mr. Gage, as the instrument of the national banks, comes with his proposition to destroy and retire the greenbacks and Treasury notes, amounting to $498,646,283, by funding them in his bonds to form a permanent pedestal for the national-bank notes to stand upon. A quarter of a century in defeat has not baffled or subdued them. Jefferson and Jackson proclaimed that the power to issue money should be taken from the banks. It is genuine Democratic doctrine to strip these institutions of such powers. Such authority belongs alone to the Government.

The dangers arising from the delegation of such authorities to national banking corporations can not be better stated than by using the language employed by a distinguished United States Senator from Texas, the lamented Richard Coke, who possessed a giant brain and a heart of the purest patriotism. He said in a speech in the United States Senate on June 22, 1882, opposing the measure permitting national banking corporations to extend their existence:

We have some experience which ought to warn us of the tremendous power existing in this bank combination and its danger to our people and institutions. That combination aspires to the absolute control of all the circulating medium of this country, and is determined to possess it. It means that gold and national-bank notes—the volume to be contracted or expanded at its own sweet will and pleasure—shall be the only medium of exchange, and that all the products of industry in this great country shall be subjected in value to its manipulation.

In a word, it means to take to itself the profit of supplying this country with money and the advantages consequent upon this vast power. That this power has been and will be utilized for the enrichment of these corporations we need no stronger evidence than the facts shown in official reports that in twelve years, from 1869 to 1881, the national banks divided among their stockholders in dividends $517,825,392, besides laying aside $127,238,304 of surplus, and all done on a capital of $459,000,000.

The combination is bold, grasping, and avaricious. It labors unceasingly and always for power and gain. In 1869, being the heaviest bondholders in the country, it was chiefly through the influence of the banks exerted upon Congress that the public debt, then payable in lawful money or currency, was converted into obligations to pay coin. Through the same influence silver was demonetized in 1873 and coin made to mean gold.

By these processes the burden of the public debt, and in the same ratio the profits of the holders of bonds, were enormously increased. Twice when bills providing for the free coinage of silver have passed the House, bearing down all opposition by immense majorities, under the impulse of a great popular demand, the banks have been able to defeat the measure in the Senate, and were able to cause an Executive veto on the present law remonetizing silver, after ingrafting upon it the stigma of inferiority.

Although the bill was passed over the veto of the President, and silver is a legal tender, the law is successfully defied by the banks, in their refusal to recognize it in their clearance houses, or to issue general certificates of deposit for it, and silver, through their agency, is a degraded coin, in violation of law and the repeatedly expressed will of the American people; nor are the banks yet content, for they are still at work as vigorously as ever for the destruction of silver money. We have in circulation $346,681,016 of legal-tender notes issued by the Government, redeemable on demand in gold and silver. They represent that amount of the public debt. They bear no interest. If retired or destroyed, the Government would be compelled to issue the same amount of bonds, on which the annual interest would, in round numbers, be $12,000,000; so these notes save to the people that amount of interest, while furnishing a safe, solvent circulation. The national banks are, and have for years been, clamoring for the retirement and cancellation of these notes, and are working might and main for the accomplishment of that purpose. These and silver out of the way, would leave them a clear field and a rich harvest and a great people with all their wealth for subjects.

The President and Secretary of the Treasury, as did their predecessors, urgently recommend a suspension of silver coinage, a stoppage of issuance of silver certificates, and a retirement of the legal-tender notes, exactly as the banks desire. Just one year ago, when we passed a bill refunding the public debt at a reduced rate of interest, by which $15,500,000 annually would have been saved to the people, the power of the banks was again felt in a merciless compulsion upon the President, who, because they threatened to contract the circulation and create a panic, vetoed the bill. Is further evidence of their power needed? It is found in the passage of this bill through the House, against the will of the American people, as it will pass through this Senate, and be approved by the President, and become a law.

When we look back and see what these banks have accomplished in the past seventeen years in national legislation through their political influence, and know as we do what their purposes are, boldly avowed and openly labored for, who can expect that with the passage of this bill, which gives them twenty years for growth and expansion and strengthening and fattening, they will ever permit the public debt paid and themselves put out of existence? No, sir; they will never permit it. They mean to live and prosper and grow richer day after day and year after year for all future time, and to keep under their feet as a pedestal the public debt, and under that will be the working people of this country, bearing the burden of the whole. Why, sir, it is already openly avowed in both Houses of Congress and in the public prints that the bonds should not be paid, but funded for banking purposes. The business interests of the country are said to require it. How will it be twenty years from now, when the banks have doubled or trebled in number and in capital, and have thoroughly permeated the country and become intertwined with all its interests, control its currency, and give law to its commerce and system of exchange?

These utterances were prophetic. Again he says:

The national banks are united in an association, with a president and secretary and treasurer and other officers. Representatives of all the banks meet at Saratoga every summer, when they consult as to their mutual interests, with a view to unity of purpose and harmony of action. By means of the telegraph, in one night, every national bank in the United States can be brought into conference and a line of policy agreed on. Money may be made scarce or abundant. The volume can be contracted or expanded as the private interests of the bankers may dictate. What would be said of a grant of the power to issue all the paper money we use to one individual or corporation? Under the control of one will it is easy to see how money could be locked up in vaults, the country distressed for the want of it, and property reduced to a fraction of its intrinsic value and then be bought up. By liberating the money, throwing it out into circulation, property would rise in value and the money monopolists could sell out at great profit.

Thomas Jefferson, the founder of the imperishable creed of Democracy, said:

And I sincerely believe, with you, that banking establishments are more dangerous than standing armies; and that the principle of spending money to be paid by posterity, under the name of funding, is but swindling futurity on a large scale. (Volume 6, pages 605-606.)

No earthly consideration could induce my consent to contract such a debt as England has by her wars for commerce, to reduce our citizens by taxes to such wretchedness as that, laboring sixteen of the twenty-four hours, they are still unable to afford themselves bread, or barely to earn as much oatmeal or potatoes as will keep soul and body together. (Volume 7, page 7.)

I have ever been the enemy of banks, not of those discounting for cash, but of those foisting their own paper into circulation, and thus banishing our cash. My zeal against those institutions was so warm and open at the establishment of the Bank of the United States that I was derided as a maniac by the tribe of bank-mongers who were seeking to filch from the public their swindling and barren gains.—Letter to President Adams, January 2d, 1814, volume 6, page 305.

From a passage in the letter of the president [of the United States Bank] I observe an idea of establishing a branch Bank of the United States in New Orleans. This institution is one of the most deadly hostility existing, against the principles and form of our Constitution. The nation is at this time so strong and united in its sentiments that it can not be shaken at this moment. But suppose a series of untoward events should occur, sufficient to bring into doubt the competency of a republican government to meet a crisis of great danger or to unhinge the confidence of the people in the public functionaries, an institution like this, penetrating by its branches every part of the Union, acting by command and in phalanx, may in a critical moment upset the Government.—Letter to Mr. Gallatin, December 13, 1803, volume 4, page 519.

Like a dropsical man calling out for water, water, our deluded citizens are clamoring for more banks, more banks. The American mind is now in the state of fever which the world has so often seen in the history of other nations. We are under the bank bubble, as England was under the South Sea bubble, France under the Mississippi bubble, and as every nation is liable to be under whatever bubble, design, or delusion may puff up in moments when off their guard. We are now taught to believe that legerdemain tricks upon paper can produce as solid wealth as hard labor in the earth. It is vain for common sense to urge that nothing can produce nothing; that it is an idle dream to believe in a philosopher's stone which is to turn everything into gold, and to redeem man from the original sentence of his Maker, "In the sweat of his brow shall he eat his bread."—Letter to Colonel Yancey, January 6, 1816, volume 6, page 515.

Interdict forever, to both the State and National Governments, the power of establishing any paper bank, for without this interdiction we shall have the same ebbs and flows of medium and the same revolutions of property to go through every twenty or thirty years.—Letter to Mr. Rives, November 28, 1819, volume 7, page 147.

The bank mania is one of the most threatening of these imitations. It is raising up a moneyed aristocracy in our country which has already set the Government at defiance, and although forced at length to yield a little on this first essay of their strength, their principles are unyielded and unyielding. These have taken deep root in the hearts of that class from which our legislators are drawn, and the sop to Cerberus from fable has become history. Their principles lay hold of the good, their pelf of the bad, and thus those whom the Constitution had placed as guards to its portals are sophisticated or suborned from their duties. That paper money has some advantages is admitted. But that its abuses also are inevitable, and by breaking up the measure of value makes a lottery of all private property can not be denied. Shall we ever be able to put a constitutional veto upon it?—Letter to Dr. Josephus B. Stuart, May 10, 1817, volume 7, page 64.

This irrepressible conflict with the banking oligarchy has been going on since the early morn of our history. But never before have they so boldly proclaimed their defiant schemes.

In the United States Senate, in 1840, Robert J. Walker gave utterance in clear and unanswerable logic to his views upon these subjects. He said:

* * * * * * *

For myself, I am opposed to investing in banks the power of manufacturing a paper currency. This power of creating a currency for a nation is one of the highest and most important attributes of a sovereign power, and more deeply affects all the diversified interests of society than the exercise of any other power whatever. It is more important than coining money, for that must be preceded by the purchase of the bullion, but here is a power to manufacture paper money at pleasure, to constitute the currency of a State or nation, a power intrusted to the irresponsible directory of a bank, acting in secret, and whose chief interest is to abuse their power. In proportion as a bank increases in currency are its dividends and profits augmented, and hence the stimulus to overissues is irresistible, and especially is this the case where, as we have seen by the evidence before quoted, the very directors which manufacture the paper loan out, as a general rule, more than one-fourth of it to themselves. The power, then, of issuing their paper as money is truly fearful, and when united with the power of loaning at pleasure, in secret conclave, and to whom and for what purpose the bank directory may think proper, and of recalling it at pleasure, and of contracting and expanding as suits their caprice, is a power which few European despots would dare to exercise, and is utterly incompatible with the fundamental principles of a free government.

Hear Mr. Buchanan in 1837. He sounded the depths of the dangers now in our pathway:

The evils of a redundant paper circulation are now manifest to every eye. It alternately raises and sinks the value of every man's property. It makes a beggar of the man to-morrow who is indulging in dreams of wealth to-day. It converts the business of society into a mere lottery, whilst those who distribute the prizes are wholly irresponsible to the people. When the collapse comes, as come it must, it casts laborers out of employment, crushes manufacturers and merchants, and ruins thousands of honest and industrious citizens. Shall we, then, by our policy, any longer contribute to such fatal results? That is the question.

To pass the Gage bill means the perpetuation of the national debt, because the bank notes are based upon this debt. I believe the national indebtedness should be paid off speedily. Its passage puts it in the power of the banks and moneyed few to form themselves into a colossal trust and to combine, concentrate, and strengthen the powers of this class. This class is already so closely combined that in a second an electric message can cause them to think and act simultaneously. They should not have the opportunity to thus toy with the currency of the country.

This measure is a mortgage for all futurity, binding and chaining the toiling masses and struggling producers to the mightiest, most avaricious, and cruel cormorants and compassionless corporations that ever demanded the surrender of a great republic. It puts it in their power to pile up their mountains of wealth upon the remnants of the people's rights. By legislation it takes from the masses and fattens the dollars of the classes. It dishonestly builds up fortunes for the rich with the legislative arm. What is the Democratic theory? Jefferson announced it in our early history. His precepts have been tenaciously adhered to by the Democratic party. In 1836, no platform being adopted by the national Democracy, the New York Democrats declared:

We declare unqualified hostility to bank notes and paper money as a circulating medium, because gold and silver is the only safe and constitutional currency; hostility to any and all monopolies by legislation, because they are violations of equal rights of the people; hostility to the dangerous and unconstitutional creation of vested rights or prerogatives by legislation, because they are usurpations of the people's sovereign rights.

True Democrats have never deviated from this platform.

In 1880 the national convention of the Democracy said:

Honest money, * * * consisting of gold and silver, and paper convertible into coin on demand.

In 1884 we declared:

We believe in honest money, the gold and silver coinage of the Constitution, and a circulating medium convertible into such money without loss.

In 1896, at Chicago, the Democracy proclaimed:

Congress alone has the power to coin and issue money, and President Jackson declared that this power could not be delegated to corporations and individuals. We therefore demand that the power to circulate as money be taken from the national banks, and that all paper money shall be issued directly by the Treasury Department, be redeemable in coin and receivable for all debts, public and private.

DEMOCRACY THE ONLY SAFEGUARD OF OUR LIBERTIES.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is evident that the Democratic party has never been willing to turn over the issuance of our paper money to the banks. We have ever insisted that Congress alone had the power to coin and issue money, both metallic and paper. We have never believed that Congress could or should surrender this great function to any power. Therefore I am opposed to the Secretary's bill. I believe that Congress alone has the right to coin metal into money and to issue paper money redeemable in coined money. I believe the Democratic platforms and principles embodied therein are right inherently. Hence I favor as an independent policy by this Government that we coin gold and silver into standard money, free of all charges, and without limit and at the present legal ratio of 16 to 1. That all paper money issued by the Government should be redeemed in these coins, the constitutional money of this nation.

I believe in independent bimetallism. It is right and the only honorable and defensible position for the American people to take. All past Democratic utterances and the principles embodied in bimetallism precisely harmonize and perfectly coincide.

I am not opposed to men honestly accumulating fortunes. I have no objections to the rich. I am as loyal to their just rights as I am to those of the poor, but I am opposed to a monetary unit of value made in the interest of the rich to discriminate against the rights of the poor. I am contending that the money power has our Government by the throat and is running the affairs of the nation. It is the money of the world trying to perpetuate itself in power.

No class should handle the reins of the Government in its own interest against the interest of others. This applies to the poor as well as the rich. The rich now have the Government and are trying to make themselves richer.

The issue is at hand. Shall the people resume their sovereignty and rule or shall we submit to the ruinous government of corporations, trusts, and gold? The Democracy of Jefferson and Jackson alone can save the nation and perpetuate our liberties. [Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

During the delivery of the foregoing remarks, the time of Mr. HENRY of Texas having expired, Mr. COX yielded to him ten minutes more time.

Mr. COX. I desire to know if there is anyone on the other side who desires to speak?

Mr. HULL. The eulogies begin at 2 o'clock.

Mr. COX. Some gentlemen on this side desire to talk, but they wish to hear from the other side of the House.

Mr. TERRY. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] yield?

Mr. TERRY. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] still has the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is entitled to the floor.

Mr. COX. I yield for the purpose of allowing a question to be asked.

Mr. TERRY. I see on page 23 of the bill the following item:

For firing the morning and evening gun at military posts prescribed by General Orders, No. 70, Headquarters of the Army, dated July 23, 1867, and at National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and its several Branches, including material for cartridges, bags, etc., $15,000. And when, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, it is necessary to purchase material abroad for the manufacture of sacks for artillery cartridges, it shall be admitted free of duty.

I was not here when the bill was taken up, but I desire to ask the chairman if it is considered that that will be a saving to the Government?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, that was discussed and explained when the bill was first taken up. We make no material of the desired kind in this country.

Mr. TERRY. I have always understood from gentlemen on that side that the foreigner paid the tax.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Arkansas has simply misunderstood our position entirely, I think. There is no such contention ever made, that the foreigner pays the tax when the article is not manufactured in the United States. It would be purely a revenue tax. When an article competing with one made here comes in, the foreign manufacturer pays for our market.

Mr. TERRY. I understood them to claim that when the article was manufactured in this country, that the foreigner paid the tax and that the benefit of the duty went to the manufacturer. So the only difference——

Mr. HULL. That has nothing to do with this bill, and it is not the case in reference to this matter. There is none of this material made in the United States.

Mr. TERRY. Well, can it be possible that after a hundred years of protection we have not yet got to the point in the United States where we can make "gunny" sacks for our artillery?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, this is all in the time of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COX. I will hollo "enough," when I think it is consuming my time needlessly.

Mr. HULL. This is not a great military nation, and this material is used by nations having great armies in time of war.

Mr. TERRY. I think we ought to consider a little about that. We are practically proposing that if we have a war we will have to rely upon the foreigner, notwithstanding a hundred years of protection. What have we been doing in the United States?

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman wants to stimulate the manufacture of this material for artillery bags he should get up a first-class war, and have four or five hundred thousand men continually in service; that might stimulate the manufacture.

Mr. TERRY. It seems it has not been done; but on a suggestion of my friend from Tennessee that you are taking away his time I will desist. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to my colleague [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman, I shall consume the few minutes that I have at my disposal in calling to the attention of the House some of the facts upon which is based the claim of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, as it is commonly called, inasmuch as it may again in a few days be considered by this body as unfinished business. The technical name is the "Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South." It is a corporation chartered in 1856 by the laws of Tennessee. It is purely eleemosynary. It is not one of profit. The profits, if any, are used in caring for superannuated preachers and their families. There is "no stock or shareholders, or any personal or individual interest whatever" in the concern.

The claimant's petition says:

The house is strictly a charity for the dissemination of literary, scientific, and religious knowledge among the millions that come within its influence, of all classes and races, particularly the young and illiterate.

The property in question has always been located in Nashville, Tenn., my home. Briefly described, the claim is one of eminent domain, which, when exercised, we all know, calls for "just compensation" promptly made, either before or after the invasion, always one or the other, when it is justly and lawfully exercised. In cases where it is exercised by military forces in time of war or by sovereign powers, the compensation generally follows the injury done. The actual injury complained of in this case began in 1864 and continued until 1865, and until after the close of the war, nearly, if not quite, two years.

I say it is a plain case of eminent domain, because the facts are briefly these: The plaintiff's property was much needed by the Federal forces at Nashville, and because needed they took it, and not because they wanted to confiscate it. It was never confiscated. It was taken charge of, the claimant entirely dispossessed, except of its title. The property was used, greatly damaged, and some of it entirely consumed by the military forces of the United States then stationed in the city of Nashville. Described in legal terms, Mr. Chairman, the plaintiff's property, which was nonconfiscable, was "taken, applied, damaged," and in part entirely consumed by the military authorities representing the Government of the United States.

Portions of the property were entirely destroyed, not simply consumed as the stock of goods within the buildings, but destroyed—that is to say, one of the new buildings was pulled down that the remaining buildings might be more conveniently used and turned into, as they were, a military manufactory for the military forces of the Government. The large and valuable machinery was nearly all destroyed by rough and excessive use. It is set forth in the claimant's original petition, a copy of which appears in the RECORD of to-day, and is couched in the following words and figures:

Rent of real estate, two years, $15,000 per annum, the property being valued at $150,000, 10 per cent per annum	$30,000
Rent of machinery, presses, etc., 25 per cent per annum on the valuation, $312,000, two years, $78,000 per annum	156,000
Use of three iron lathes, $17 per week, one hundred weeks	5,100
Injury and consumption of machinery, presses, type, etc., 50 per cent on valuation	156,000
Front store torn down, to more conveniently use the remaining buildings	5,000
Stereotype materials, etc., consumed	4,550
Job office, etc., carried to the front, and stock with it	5,500
Belting worn out	750
Merchandise in front stores used and destroyed	90,000
Injury by alterations of buildings internally	5,500
	458,400

The claimant agrees to take the compromize amount, $288,000 in full of its claim, rather than wait longer.

The report says:

This, is the sum $288,000 that remains after reducing the price for the rent of the machinery, etc., below the estimates of the witnesses from 25 per cent to 20 per cent of its cost, which is the lowest sum named in the testimony by any of the experts, and reducing the amount claimed for injury done to the property from 50 per cent to 20 per cent, which is less than half the amount named by any of the experts, and by reducing the charge for merchandise used, etc., from 50 to 25 per cent.

The evidence reveals the damages ($458,000) the claimant states. The claimant was not only "deprived" of its property, save and except the technical title, possession entirely being taken and for several years, but its business was entirely broken up. In addition to all this, portions of these handsome buildings were torn down, but, as stated, not to confiscate them—not at all—but to more conveniently fix, change, and use the remaining buildings as a military manufactory. The remaining buildings were changed in many ways, and so hurriedly as that they were damaged and battered in attempting to make them conform to the military necessities and exigencies then existing. The property was then (1864) valued at about $700,000, $400,000 being cash, having been put into the business at the beginning, in addition to other handsome contributions from outside sources. When returned to claimant it was valued at about $200,000.

On the capital invested claimant's petition says:

The capital with which said house commenced business was mainly the share which fell to this church of several funds belonging to the Methodist Episcopal Church on the division of said church in 1844, awarded pro rata by the Supreme Court of the United States, and which funds amounted to something over $400,000. To this was added large private donations in money and other property, by bequest and otherwise; and also two smaller publishing establishments of said church at Richmond, Va., and Louisville, Ky. Thus set agoing, the house continued to do a respectable and increasing business.

As to the kind of buildings, claimant's petition, I know, Mr. Chairman, correctly states the facts as follows:

It might be well for us to state that our buildings were of stone and brick, among the best, and one of the best sites in the city, from four to seven stories high, fronting 80 feet by 212 deep, with a wing fronting 120 feet on another street, and about 50 feet deep.

This property, located at my home, Nashville, is well known to me. It fronts on the public square in that city, and extends back to the Cumberland River, which, of course, makes it very valuable property. In addition to these valuable buildings the machinery therein was heavy and costly, used for printing and other purposes, and proved invaluable to the military authorities in supplying them with immense quantities of much needed printing. Claimant's petition thus describes this machinery:

In addition to the ordinary implements and machinery of the printing and publishing manufactory, the remoteness of Nashville from the Northern cities caused the managers of this institution to possess themselves of large iron lathes and other implements constituting a machine shop for turning and handling heavy iron for manufacture or repair of presses and other machinery of the establishment.

Beyond question this was extremely valuable property, the finest printing establishment short of Washington or New York, and the testimony of Federal officials filed with this claim states and proves the fact.

You can readily see that turning this great printing establishment, being used in a civil, business-like way by the claimant, into a military manufactory, for which it was never intended, within a few days' time necessarily damaged it very much. It was used day and night, and excessively. The machinery was run twenty-five revolutions per minute faster than intended, and by green printers and workmen, whereby it was broken, some destroyed entirely, while all of it was worn out and rendered practically useless. These facts are sworn to by the most reputable citizens of Nashville, belonging to both parties, Republicans and Democrats, Union men and non-Union men, and, I may add, by men who worked for the claimant before and after the war, while some of them were employed by the military forces to run this machinery while in use by the Federal forces.

The witnesses I refer to here were salesmen W. R. Warren, John W. Hunter, and master-workmen Spillers, Dashiell, Carroll, and Kelsea, who are experts and practical men in their respective departments. The veracity and ability of these men, as well as the claimant's other witnesses, is vouched for, as the official records of this House show, and as I personally know, by the following leading citizens, Union men, Republicans, and now ex-officials. First, I see the certificate of Mr. Harrison as to the engineer in charge of this machinery. He says:

OFFICE OF U. S. LOCAL INSPECTOR OF STEAM VESSELS,
Nashville, October 1, 1872.

This is to certify that I am personally acquainted with William G. Dashiell, the present chief engineer of the Nashville waterworks, and I know him to be a gentleman and a first-class engineer, and would give credit to any statement he might make.

SAM. M. HARRISON,
U. S. Local Inspector Boilers, Nashville, Tenn.

Next appears that of Mr. Carels as to Mr. Kelsea, the superintendent and manager of the stereotyping department, a professional printer and workman. He says:

I am personally acquainted with William Kelsea, and have known him for a number of years. He is a man of integrity and perfectly reliable in any statement he may make.

JOS. S. CARELS,
Chief Clerk Nashville Post-Office.

NASHVILLE, TENN., November 9, 1872.

I know Mr. Carels personally. He is now librarian at the Watkins Institute in Nashville. He is and has always been a Republican.

Next we notice the certificate of the clerk of the United States circuit court, Mr. Campbell, whose untimely and tragic death cast a gloom over our entire community. He says:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Middle District of Tennessee:

I, E. R. Campbell, clerk of the circuit court of the United States for the district aforesaid, do hereby certify that I am well acquainted with the standing and reputation of Rev. A. L. P. Green, Thomas D. Fite, Rev. Thomas O. Summers, Hugh Carroll, Rev. W. R. Warren, J. W. Hunter, Wm. F. Bang, A. H. Redford, and Rev. Richard Abbey, and from my knowledge of the men, and also from their general reputation, would say that they are entitled to full faith and credit in any deposition or otherwise. In fact, they rank among the best and most substantial men of Nashville, and implicit faith would be given them before the courts.

[SEAL.]

E. R. CAMPBELL,
Clerk United States Circuit.

NASHVILLE, TENN., September 30, 1872.

And finally, Mr. Chairman, comes the sworn statement of Judge East, well known, I know, to a number of distinguished Republicans, Union soldiers, now members of this House. Judge East is one of the most distinguished lawyers in the South, a Republican, but rather independent now in politics; a Union man, who was private secretary to Andrew Johnson when he was military governor of Tennessee, and was in 1872 chancellor at Nashville. Judge East says:

I have known A. L. P. Green, Thomas D. Fite, Thomas O. Summers, Hugh Carroll, W. R. Warren, J. W. Hunter, William H. Bang, A. H. Redford, Richard Abbey, and Robert T. Spillers for many years, none of them for less than five years and many of them for more than twenty years. They are personally among the best class; no better citizens can be found in this or any other community. They are gentlemen of intelligence (some of them in a high degree), of the most conscientious regard for truth, and entitled to full faith and credit under all circumstances.

I am, respectfully,

EDWARD H. EAST,
Chancellor of the Seventh District of Tennessee.

SEPTEMBER 30, 1872.

Then, I see the strong statement of Dr. W. H. Morgan, who for many years before the war, and since, lived in Nashville—a leading dentist and professor, one of our best citizens, a strong Republican, who says he voted for Benjamin Harrison for President, who was in Nashville during the war, who knew all the facts of this case, and who states the claim is just, correct, and should be paid.

Again, there is Judge Whitworth, who was presiding judge in the sixties, still living in Nashville, a man of distinguished ability, one of our best citizens, I believe a Union man, who was judge of and regularly held the county court of Davidson County during the entire war and for many years thereafter, and who is now a capitalist and banker.

He says this claim is just, due, and should be paid. With Dr. Morgan and other leading citizens he went with Mayor Cheatham to see General Buell, in February, 1862, and asked him to take charge of the city of Nashville and protect her citizens and property from military and domestic violence. This General Buell agreed to and issued a proclamation to that effect, and in so many words said:

NASHVILLE, TENN., February 26, 1862.

If the necessities of the public service should require the use of private property to public uses, compensation is to be allowed. No such appropriation of private property is to be made except by the authority of the highest commander present, and any other officer or soldier who shall presume to exercise such privilege shall be brought to trial.

Soldiers are forbidden to enter the residences or grounds of citizens upon any plea without authority.

In addition to this high testimony as to the justness and the amount of this claim, I will here state, and later on show, that the bishops of the Northern Methodist Church, including the bishops of the African Methodist Church, have repeatedly urged Congress to pay this claim, stating that the claim is just, while many of them state they personally know that it is just.

I give the names of some: Bishops Morris, Janes, Simpson, Ames, Bowman, Merrill, Peck, Haven, Hurst, McCabe, Cranston, Ninde, Walden, Goodsel, Vincent, Foster, and the following bishops of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, to wit: Turner, Gaines, Arnett, Hanna, Grant, Lee, Salters, and Handy. While recently, Mr. Chairman, a joint commission, representing 5,000,000 Methodists, recommend the payment of this claim. The names of the commissioners are as follows:

Bishop John F. Hurst, D. D., LL. D., Washington, D. C.; Bishop W. X. Ninde, D. D., LL. D., Detroit, Mich.; Bishop S. M. Merrill, D. D., LL. D., Chicago, Ill.; Bishop John C. Granberry, D. D., LL. D., Ashland, Va.; Bishop R. K. Hargrove, D. D., LL. D., Nashville, Tenn.; Bishop W. W. Duncan, D. D., LL. D., Spartanburg, S. C.; Rev. E. E. Hoss, D. D., LL. D., Nashville, Tenn.; Rev. R. J. Cooke, D. D., Chattanooga, Tenn.; Rev. H. G. Jackson, D. D., Chicago, Ill.; Rev. L. B. Wilson, D. D., Washington, D. C.; Rev. G. G. N. MacDonell, D. D., Waycross, Ga.; Rev. John H. Dye, Helena, Ark.; Judge T. B. Sweet, Topeka, Kans.; Judge T. H. Murray, Clearfield, Pa.; Judge Walter Clark, Raleigh, N. C.; Col. Asa Holt, Abilene, Tex.; Prof. W. E. Jones, LL. D., University of Mississippi; R. T. Miller, esq., Covington, Ky.

Mr. Chairman, the contents of this building were very valuable, consisting of paper, books, printing material, and everything that would stock a first-class printing establishment. This was taken and consumed by the military forces in charge. The claimant's petition on this point says:

In 1862 the Army needed these lathes, etc., and, with the consent of the agent, took and used them until the close of the war; and early in 1863 the Army found it necessary to have a job office at the front for printing, which was ordered from our house, and to which was added various other lots of printing material at different times. These supplies were furnished as required by the general in command. Toward the close of 1863 the necessities of the Army for printing and binding, etc., having increased very much beyond all expectation, and in the then condition of the country it being impracticable to procure suitable supplies from the North, Major-General Thomas, then commanding, took possession of our entire establishment, with all its buildings, machinery, paper, types, ink, stationery, books, etc., and property of every kind.

Now, listen to this especially:

At the end of two years what was left of the property unconsumed was returned to us very much broken and damaged. The reason why the machinery was worn, broken, and used up beyond ordinary wear is explained by the testimony of the engineers as being caused by the necessity of the Army, the machinery being pushed far beyond its capacity, and subjected to kinds of work for which it was not intended. The buildings themselves were also considerably modified and changed to meet the necessities of the Government. One entire store was torn down and removed, and considerable other changes made in the interior of the buildings for the use of the Army.

Mr. Spillers, a practical printer, who was entirely familiar with the machinery and the value thereof in these buildings, says that when the Army took charge of it it was worth $312,000.

Dr. Abbey, the agent in charge at the time, and Mr. Hudson, say: "The merchandise in front stores was valued at $180,000," while Dr. Abbey further says: "The machinery, type, presses, bindery, etc., were valued at $312,000."

In effect, the other testimony of men who actually knew both the buildings and the contents thereof corroborates these witnesses.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when we remember that this machinery was worn out and that all this stationery and printing paraphernalia were consumed, and that the value of the two was $312,000, and that the claimant is willing to take the compromise figure of $288,000; and when we further remember that in addition to the property actually consumed one of the buildings was torn down, valued at $5,000; that great damage was done to the remaining buildings; that the claimant was deprived of possession, the rent, and use of its buildings; that its business was broken up for several years; and that the total amount of its claim, which has been closely and conscientiously audited, amounts to $458,500; that this damage occurred over thirty years ago; that the claimant has been asking Congress to pay even this compromise amount since 1872, it is child's play, it is unjust, it is un-American, it is a painful example of "man's inhumanity to man," to longer delay the payment of this claim.

The petition of the claimant states and shows that it was necessary for the preservation of the Army at Nashville for this property to be taken and used. The petition states on that point:

The actual possession was taken with but three hours' notice, so that there was no possible opportunity to take even the most cursory inventory of the property. So great was the stress of the Army for shelter in bad winter weather that our large stores and warehouses, filled with costly books and stationery, had to be emptied in a day to make room for large quantities of leather, saddlery, and medical stores. It was at the time impracticable for the Army to find shelter in the city for all Government stores, so that the taking of the establishment was solely the result of the necessities of the Army, the same as many similar instances in the city. We were informed, and believe, it was not the intention to interfere with these buildings and their contents, if it could be avoided, and they were suffered to remain till a very late period; but the necessity came with the arrival of large, valuable army supplies; and though the agent in charge believes the Army officers took all reasonable measures to prevent loss of property, it was impossible to do so.

Absolute possession, Dr. Abbey says, was exacted and given. He states:

It will be observed that our entire property passed immediately and absolutely into the possession of the Government.

TESTIMONY AS TO ESTIMATED VALUE.

Dr. Abbey, the agent in charge at the time the invasion took place, Mr. Fite, Dr. Green, and possibly others estimate the value of the grounds and buildings alone at $150,000. Dr. Abbey, Mr. Warren, a salesman employed by the claimant at the time, and Hugh Carroll, the bookkeeper of the claimant, estimate the value of the "merchandise in the front stores alone at $180,000." Dr. Abbey, Mr. Carroll, and Mr. Spillers, an expert printer and superintendent of this concern, estimate the value of the machinery, type, presses, and bindery, etc., at $312,000.

Mr. Kelsea says that the plates, metal, and material "used" in the foundry department were valued at $4,550.70, as near as he could approximate. Dr. Abbey says the printing-office outfit was taken entirely away and never returned, valued at $5,500. The new building, he says, pulled down, was valued at $5,000, and that the alteration made in the interior would cost $5,000 to be restored.

Mr. Dashiell, Mr. Spillers, Mr. Hudson, and other practical men who had worked before, during, and after possession was taken by the Army, said that the machinery was overworked, and therefore repeatedly broken, and ultimately worn out and made practically useless. Mr. Bang, Mr. Carter, Mr. Spillers, Dr. Abbey, and others testify as to the "value" of the "use" of this property, in substance, as set forth in the itemized claim to which I have already alluded.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with this brief and hurried review of the claim, I dare say, and as seriously as I know how, that if the Government were to undertake to controvert this testimony it would be an utter failure—a failure because we have given the facts as they are. The truth is stated in the record of this claim, and incontrovertibly. It simply remains now as to whether or not Congress, in the face of the Constitution, the proclamations of President Lincoln, the military orders of General Thomas, General Donelson, and General Buell, the war policy of this and all civilized countries, and the civil-war statutes as construed by the Supreme Court of the United States, shall exercise the right of might and continue to refuse to pay a just claim and to a charitable institution, when that claim is based upon an actual taking of property used and enjoyed, and to the great detriment of the claimant.

To longer deprive this claimant of just compensation when many less meritorious claims so happily alluded to by General GROSVENOR, amounting to thousands of dollars, have long since been paid is an unjust visitation. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] says the claim is just and that it should be paid; that he favors the bill, not the one that favors a direct appropriation, but the first bill, which seeks to refer the claim to the Court of Claims for adjudication. Now, what does this mean, Mr. Chairman? Is the gentleman a real friend to the claimant?

Does he not know the Court of Claims is four or five years behind in its business? This fact has been made known to me by a leading Republican, who investigated the matter after the bill referring this claim to that court was introduced. Hence it was the second measure was introduced, which we ask to be substituted for the first. Then the effect of referring this bill, the justness of which is admitted by even its real enemies, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania is in effect, is but to at least defer the adjudication of this claim for five years more, and then a further begging of twenty-five years more of Congress to pay it.

To refer this bill to the Court of Claims is to practically abandon it. It would be a wrong that does and must shock the conscience of any man who wants to be fair with the claimant. Already the Senate has reported this bill favorably five or six times and the House committees as many more. They have repeatedly investigated it, and having the constitutional right as this House, adjudicated and held that it is a legal obligation against the Government; that it is just and should be paid.

GREAT SAVING TO THE GOVERNMENT.

The order of General Thomas of December 28, 1863, directing this property to be seized under the mistaken idea that it was confiscable property, says that "the Government would save from $25,000 to $30,000 per year" by using it for "printing blanks and orders," without counting "loss of time in getting work beyond the Ohio."

The Quartermaster-General's official report for the year ending June 30, 1865, shows the immense output of this establishment and the great saving it was to the Government. It says:

> The average saving to the Government, taking Cincinnati, Chicago, Pittsburg, and Nashville prices, as shown by monthly reports heretofore sent, is 82½ per cent, though it is believed the actual saving is 100.

The report then compliments the management of this institution as a military manufactory, in this language:

> The concern merits my warmest praise, and I recommend it to your favorable notice and consideration. At this writing (1865) it is being turned over to the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands, as no longer needed for the public service.

The report had previously stated the immense amount of work done and the saving to the Government, in the following language:

> The operations of the establishment up to June 30, 1864, were given in my last annual report. During the year ending June 30, 1865, over 5,300,000 impressions were made; 4,352 forms printed; 101,000 quires of paper used; 223,000 quires of blanks furnished, at a total cost to the United States, including pay, commutation, etc., of enlisted men, of $29,261.40; actual cost to the Quartermaster's Department, $25,456.45. (These figures are shown by the monthly reports of the officer in immediate charge of the printing house, heretofore forwarded to your office.) The details of the establishment have been under the direction of Bvt. Maj. A. W. Wills, A. Q. M., who deserves great credit for its economical management.

This clearly shows an immense saving in printing alone, excluding that saved from freight and the higher printing, had it been done farther north. There must have been, we are forced to believe, a great saving in the other work done at this institution, judging from this immense saving in printing alone.

NOT CONFISCABLE PROPERTY.

This institution, being a corporation, the law of confiscation did not apply to it. The Supreme Court of the United States held in the Planters' Bank Case that such was the law as to corporations. The court said:

> No authority was given to a military commandant, as such, to effect any confiscation, and under neither act was the property of a banking institution made confiscable. Both of them (acts of August 6, 1861, and July 17, 1862) had in view the property of natural persons (not corporations) who were public enemies, or persons who gave aid and comfort to the rebellion, and who held office under the Confederate government or under one of the States composing it.

Now listen to this specially:

> In no one of the six classes of persons whose property was by the act of 1862 declared subject to confiscation was an artificial being, i. e., corporation, included.

Of course a printing corporation and a banking corporation would stand on the same footing.

The libel of information filed against this property on the 24th of May, 1862, by the Government, through the district attorney of the United States at Nashville, was subsequently dismissed by the Government on November 13, 1865, being an action in rem. This is a conclusive admission against the Government that it ever had the right to condemn this property, which judgment not only binds the Government but precludes Congress contending it could or should have been condemned. This judgment binds the court, which in turn binds Congress in its action.

The report of the House on this subject, found on pages 12 and 13, is conclusive on this point, to which I can add nothing. But aside from the law on this point, which I must here dismiss for want of more time, we ask, what was the fact? Dr. Abbey, the agent in charge, states that not one cent of the money belonging to the claimant was used in the aid of the rebellion. I quote from his affidavit:

> No moneys of said publishing house were ever used, paid, or in any way appropriated for the use, benefit, or advantage of said Confederacy, either in the purchase of Confederate bonds or otherwise, so far as he knows or believes. He was the financial secretary of said publishing house for eight years, during the entire period of the late war, and he has no recollection of ever seeing a Confederate bond.

The Rev. Dr. McFerrin, one of the purest and best men I ever knew, and who was the general agent of the claimant up probably to 1862, says no part of the building, or in short any of its property, was "permitted to be used by or for the benefit of the Confederate army, so called." He does state, as does Dr. Abbey, and as did the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], that the Confederate forces, while in possession of Nashville, being short of funds, forced the claimant to print certain matter, Hardee's Military Tactics, and possibly other like productions, but that the claimant was forced to do this, and that the editorial department and the columns of the paper were not open to the publication of any disloyal matter. This is about the substance of their affidavits, found on pages 40–41 of the House reports.

In addition to this, some of the members and officers of the Methodist Church South, to demonstrate the fact that not all even of the members of that Church took sides with the South, and to further witness the fact that this corporation had not and should not take sides in this great struggle or any other political matter, held a meeting in Louisville, in 1864, and proclaimed in a formal and substantial way the fact that this corporation was nonpolitical, was not disloyal, had not and would not take sides in the late civil war. This all appears in the record of this case in the affidavit of Dr. Finney, and possibly others.

Subsequently, I believe in 1866, at New Orleans, the General Conference ratified the action of this meeting at Louisville just described, and directed, I believe, the payment of the incidental expenses attending the Louisville meeting. Here, then, is a witness—a conference—unchallenged, as the others are, to the fact that not all of the members, official and otherwise, of this Church coincided with the South, and that during the war some of its officers proclaimed the fact that this claimant was loyal and nonpartisan, which declaration and act was thereafter reaffirmed, ratified, and indorsed deliberately by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

But, Mr. Chairman, leaving this point, I again reassert that this property was not seized with reference to its usefulness in any practical or strategic sense for the Army. It was seized to save money, and did save money by the thousands in printing and in other ways for the Army and as a convenience for the civil department of the Government. The law of military necessity did not apply. A publishing house is in no respect a part of army equipment.

When this property was seized the courts were open at Nashville; this Judge Whitworth states. The supreme court of Tennessee was open. We have about five State supreme court reports known with us as the War Opinions. I was then an infant in my mother's arms, and can not state as of my personal knowledge; but I have read the court records, and such was the fact. The Federal courts were in session regularly.

Judge Catron, of the Supreme Bench of the United States, held court there; Judge East was chancellor; the law of the land was being administered, and Tennessee was not in a state of rebellion at that time, as witnessd by the fact that President Lincoln, in his emancipation proclamation of January 1, 1862, did not designate therein Tennessee as one of the rebellious States. But even if Tennessee was, which had been the case, in a state of rebellion, private citizens who were loyal had the right to the protection of the law for themselves and their property, and they had the right to just compensation when the public welfare of the Union necessitated the taking of their property. This, the Supreme Court of the United States has repeatedly held, was the law.

And now, Mr. Chairman, as I conclude this branch of my speech, let me say that this is not a case of charity. Far from it. It brings grief to the heart of every Southern man that by mistake in the heat of debate it should have been so classed. It is an existing right, the protection of which is guaranteed to us by the Constitution, which says that no man's property shall be "taken" from him; that he shall not be "deprived" of it without "just compensation." This, Mr. Chairman, was a law before the Constitution was written—a law that governed even the original American, the Indian. It is the law of right and justice, the law which regulated the acts of the Jew and Gentile, the Greek and barbarian alike.

It is not a charity we ask. It is a right which the proclamation of President Lincoln protected; which the orders of General

Thomas and General Buell said would be protected and, if taken or damaged, would be paid for. But I want to say here as a Democrat and as a young man reared since the war that, if this claim is paid, or, if not this, like claims from the South are paid, by this Republican Congress, it will prove to our people that you want to deal fairly with us.

The effect of paying this claim will radiate throughout the South that stands here insisting upon its payment because it is just. That section will feel, Mr. Chairman, that the Constitution in its letter and spirit is being upheld by the Republican party and enforced as it should be and as it was in the palmy days of the Republic. Think of it! This claim is thirty years old, and for twenty-six long years, with every means honorable, the claimant has been knocking at the door of Congress for just compensation guaranteed to it by every law of this land, and yet there are those here, professing friendship for this claim, who want to defer payment.

And now, turning for a few moments from this particular subject, let me say that I am reminded by the speech of my distinguished young friend from Texas [Mr. HENRY] of something—an evil that is paralyzing the financial welfare, if not deadening the spiritual welfare of the churches, not only in the South, but throughout the Union and the civilized world, and that evil is the gold standard. You try now to make it appear that the falling prices of to-day, if not the failing patriotism in this country, have not been superinduced by the gold standard.

But you Republicans say you did not say this. You did not then say that hard times and falling prices would be superinduced by lack of confidence, but you said then—which you now deny—that the gold standard would cause "a decrease in the price of articles measured by the gold standard." I will now prove that you did say this.

I read from an official mint report of the United States:

> The gradual adoption of the gold standard, and consequent demonetization of silver, will, of course, be followed by an increase in the value of gold, or, what is the same thing, a decrease in the price of articles measured by it.

Mr. Chairman, to prove that the gold standard would do so the report proceeds to state what had actually occurred under the gold standard in Europe. I quote again:

> Indeed, it is quite certain that this effect is already perceptible in some portions of Europe.

You stated and at the same time proved your proposition, which you now deny. Is there any difference in the gold standard of 1873 and the gold standard of 1893 or 1897? We have had the gold standard in this country since the coinage act of February 12, 1873, took effect April 1, 1873, and hence we have had a fall in prices, as this official report said would be the case under the gold standard.

Now, you do not want me to tell you from what official authority I am reading, do you? I will give you the benefit of this as information. I am reading from Dr. Linderman's mint report filed November, 1873. Who was Dr. Linderman? He was a leading Republican and high official, a Mint Director of the United States, who, in the face of the deadening effect of the gold standard, aided in the demonetization of silver in 1873 and helped to fasten that odious British policy on us. Here is a Republican official deliberately fixing on his people a financial policy he said would decrease prices, and which other Republican speakers have since said brought to our people more distress, more want, more penury than all our wars and ravages of diseases have ever done. I want you Republicans to note the fact that this comment on the effect of the gold standard was made at a time when it did not seem to him that it was necessary to whitewash and color up its paralyzing effects on the business and the welfare of the people of this country.

But that is not all. Let me read to you from another official report of Dr. Linderman's of 1875:

> The principal money markets of the world have been occasionally disturbed during the last three years—

That is, the years 1874, 1873, and 1872—

> In seeking for the causes of these disturbances it would appear, at first glance, that the supply of gold is unequal to the legitimate demands of a rapidly increasing commerce of the world. A careful examination of the subject, however, would show that the monetary troubles have not been caused by insufficient supplies of gold, but by its having been withheld in large sums from circulation and—

What else now cause the money troubles? This report answers and says:

> The diminished use of silver as money.

It was not a "lack of confidence," as you Republicans and gold men now say our trouble is; it was not only the locking up of gold, says this report, but it was "the diminished use of silver as money," coined under free coinage into unlimited tender, from which alone standard money can come.

And yet, Mr. Chairman, the distinguished Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Gage, the manly mouthpiece, I must admit, of the gold-standard fraternity and of the monopolists who furnished but few votes, but by their powerful influence much money for the recent campaign whereby President McKinley's election was secured, declares that it is his purpose, and, therefore, the purpose of President McKinley, to more firmly rivet and fasten upon this patient, debt-ridden, distressed, and impoverished millions of people the gold standard. President McKinley must stand as indorsing it, because he does not disclaim it. Mr. Gage, it is said, offered to resign because of his gold-standard views; but, nay, verily, if the press reports be true, President McKinley asked him not to, and as a matter of fact we know he has not, and we further easily conclude he will not, resign.

Pardon me for alluding to one other bit of history. There was a prophecy made in 1868, at a time when the introduction of the gold standard in Paris was being discussed. This prophecy is contained in a thesis written by the distinguished bimetallists, Count Wolowski and Mr. Seyd.

What did they say? After making five prophecies, in which they stated in substance that all of our present financial distress and penury, our want and friction in business and social intercourse, would be superinduced by the adoption of the gold standard, they made a sixth prophecy, which is peculiarly applicable to the present condition of things and the varying position of President McKinley and his party. The gold men try to make it appear that our condition was not brought about by the gold standard, but by lack of confidence. The sixth prophecy is as follows:

> One of the principal difficulties in this period of general depression will be that people will look for its causes in all possible directions. The advocates of the gold standard will offer all possible groundless and fantastic excuses or reasons of a secondary nature only, and the real cause, the demonetization of silver, will be overlooked until the perspicuity of the phenomena and dire necessity shall force thinking men to point it out.

For the delectation of the gentlemen on the other side of the Hall I shall avail myself of the privilege of inserting this wonderful prophecy in my remarks.

> The demonetization of silver by any great civilized nation must produce the following results:
> 1. The international trade of the world will instantly show signs of decline, to the special injury of countries having the largest international trade.
> 2. The spirit of public enterprise, in railroads and other useful undertakings, will be immediately checked, and consequently the general progress of civilization will suffer.
> 3. The decline in prices will compel countries internationally indebted to depart more and more from the principles of free trade toward a policy of protection.
> 4. The nations of the world will be divided into two groups—the one trading in gold, the other in silver—and this condition will render commerce between them unsafe and precarious.
> 5. Throughout the world a decline in prices will follow, injurious alike to owners of real property and the laboring classes, and advantageous only—and unjustly so—to the holders of State bonds and similar securities.
> 6. One of the principal difficulties in this period of general depression will be that people will look for its causes in all possible directions. The advocates of the gold standard will offer all possible groundless and fantastic excuses or reasons of a secondary nature only, and the real cause, the demonetization of silver, will be overlooked until the perspicuity of the phenomena and dire necessity shall force thinking men to point it out.

That is a remarkable and wonderful prophecy, and how true!

And now, Mr. Chairman, just a word or two more. I would like to know exactly how the Chief Executive of this great country now stands on this subject. I had occasion the last session of this Congress to make the same allusion to the President. It is this: We find him last April appointing what? A monetary commission to go to Europe. To do what? To discontinue the gold standard, not continue it. We find this same President, in the same year of our Lord, in the same year of the same Congress that he appointed the first commission, sending in, an hour and a half before the extra session of this Congress adjourned, a most importunate and urgent message, to do what? To pass a law giving him power to appoint another commission, to do what? Continue, not discontinue, the gold standard. Now, for what does he stand? Where is the President?

Mr. HULL. This being the hour set apart for the eulogies upon the late Hon. SETH L. MILLIKEN, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HEPBURN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6546) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal of papers, as follows:

To Mr. GRIFFITH, leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of William T. Romingo.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DAVIDSON of Wisconsin, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BROUSSARD, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. VEHSLAGE, for five days, on account of important business.

EULOGIES ON HON. SETH L. MILLIKEN.

Mr. BURLEIGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. SETH L. MILLIKEN, late a Representative from the State of Maine.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a distinguished public servant the House, at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The question being taken, the resolutions were unanimously adopted.

Mr. BURLEIGH. Mr. Speaker, in attempting to give some expression to the affectionate regard entertained for our late friend by the people of the district he so long and so ably represented in this House, I am fully conscious of the inadequacy of mere words, in times of deep bereavement, to voice the sentiments of the heart and speak the language of sorrow.

One who for nearly fifteen years was a familiar figure in this Capitol, whose potent and eloquent voice was often heard within these walls, and whose warm sympathies and generous social qualities endeared him to his associates, irrespective of political affiliations, has passed out through the dark shadows of evening, and entered

> That undiscover'd country, from whose bourn
> No traveler returns.

It is eminently fitting that these memorial services of national character should be held in his honor, for though ever loyal to his district and his State, Mr. MILLIKEN long ago outgrew their confines. His mind was broad enough to consider what he believed to be the welfare of the whole country, and his sphere of usefulness was not confined to the service of any special interest or section, but embraced, in its comprehensive scope, all interests and all sections.

The career of SETH L. MILLIKEN vividly and forcibly illustrates the possibilities of American citizenship. The honored position he attained in the councils of the nation was due in no degree to the accident of birth or fortuitous circumstances. From the early age of 14 years, when he left his country home to secure an education, with $3 which his grandmother had given him from her Revolutionary war pension, the only contribution for this purpose he ever had, and walked 40 miles to save stage fare, he was wholly the architect of his own fortunes.

To a youth of less resolute mold and tenacity of purpose the obstacles in his way would have seemed insurmountable; but though his financial resources were meager, he was not without capital. He had inherited a vigorous constitution, and hard work in the open air, amid the rugged hills of his native town, had given him the buoyancy of good health, and taught him habits of industry that he retained through life. When scarcely emerged from childhood he took up the burdens of life without experience in worldly affairs, and with no resources save his own untiring industry. He had his own way to make in the world, and the detailed story of his struggles and his triumphs might well serve as a source of inspiration to the youth of America.

In 1856 Mr. MILLIKEN graduated from Union College, in New York, after having taken a three years' course at what is now Colby University, in his own State. Six weeks later he was elected to the Maine house of representatives, and was returned the following year. Thus in early life he acquired a knowledge of legislative procedure which proved of great assistance and value to him in later years.

In 1858 Mr. MILLIKEN was elected clerk of the supreme judicial court for his native county. While serving in this capacity he pursued the study of law with Hon. Nehemiah Abbott and Judge Dickerson, of Belfast, two of the most eminent lawyers of Maine, and was admitted to the bar in 1871. He early acquired a wide reputation as a ready and effective political speaker, and his services were in great demand in times of political emergency, both in and out of his own State. Prior to his election to Congress he had traveled nearly 30,000 miles in presenting the principles of his party to popular audiences. The intimate acquaintance he thus secured with public men and measures furnished an excellent equipment for his subsequent duties as a member of this House.

During his long and distinguished service here he was a painstaking and conscientious Representative, thoroughly devoted to the interests of his constituents; and that they fully appreciated his labors in their behalf is evidenced by eight consecutive elections with constantly increasing majorities.

Mr. MILLIKEN came of good stock. On the paternal side he was of Scotch descent; his maternal ancestors were the Counts of Perrigaux, who were prominently identified with the early history of France. He thus inherited the best characteristics of two strong races—from his father, a strong will, tenacity of purpose, and marked power of analysis; from his mother, a poetical temperament, innate courtesy, and a ready wit. It is to the combination of these qualities that we may trace his notable success as a public speaker and his happy faculty of making and retaining strong friendships.

During the later years of his life my relations with him were close and intimate, and I had opportunity to know and appreciate those indefinable attributes, that attractive charm of personality, which make up the subtle quality we call magnetism.

He was a gifted and pleasing speaker. With a fine presence he combined a strong, well-modulated voice and grace of diction. He had an extensive vocabulary and spoke with fluency and ease. He possessed the power of clear and cogent statement, and carried his arguments home to his hearers with trenchant force. While he clothed his thoughts, for the most part, in plain, strong words of Anglo-Saxon origin, his broad culture enabled him upon occasion to embellish them with the beauties of classical literature and the graces of poetry.

His manner at all times was courteous and affable, and he was never placed at a disadvantage in public discussion by irritability of temper. He had a keen sense of humor and an apparently inexhaustible fund of anecdote, upon which he could always draw to illustrate his points with happy effect in gaining the good will and holding the attention of his audience. He was quick in repartee and yet one—

> Whose wit in the combat, as gentle as bright,
> Ne'er carried a heart-stain away on its blade.

Mr. MILLIKEN was a natural scholar. He was impatient, it is true, of the more laborious processes of intellectual acquisition. He apparently had the power of absorbing knowledge. His mind was enriched with stores of information gleaned from a wide and varied reading, especially in lines of historical research, for which he had a strong liking. He had a faculty of mentally classifying the facts he assimilated in their relations to other facts. He was a close observer of events, and his wonderfully retentive memory rendered constantly available for any emergency his stores of information.

All who knew SETH L. MILLIKEN can bear truthful testimony that he was a man of catholic spirit. His sympathies were broad. He loved the society of his fellow-men and was tolerant in all things. There was in his nature no trace of snobbery or affectation. He was always accessible, genial, and loyal. While he was all his life a strong partisan, with a firm belief in the necessity of party organization and discipline as a factor in republican government, he was singularly free from political rancor and never permitted the intensity of his political convictions to affect the amenities of his social relations with men of opposing views. While strongly tenacious of his own opinions and ever ready to champion them upon all proper occasions, he was never lacking in respect for the honest convictions of those who differed with him on questions of public policy.

Few men in public life have ever possessed a finer tact in dealing with others or a more thorough mastery of the art of conciliation. It was not in his nature to treasure resentments. Intensely American in all his views, he blended prudence with patriotism. Accustomed always to look upon the bright side of life, he had an abiding love for his country and profound faith in its future.

He died, as he had lived, in the harness. In the meridian of his powers, and in the unimpaired possession of all his faculties, he was called suddenly from the activities of a busy life, from its duties, its hopes, its aspirations, to

> The lone couch of his everlasting sleep.

The sorrow at his untimely death was shared by all classes. The pulpit and the press have united in giving expression to the popular sense of bereavement and in paying eloquent tribute to his memory. I was present at his funeral and followed his body to its last resting place in the beautiful city by the sea, where he lived during so many of the best years of his life, and which had a deep and abiding place in his affections. It was a sad and solemn occasion, the memory of which will always remain with me. The whole city was in mourning. All classes of its people, the rich, the poor, the old, the young, were moved with a common grief. To one and all the death of their distinguished and warm-hearted friend and fellow-citizen had come with the force of a personal loss. Amid such sincere and loyal tributes to the qualities that enshrine men in the hearts of their fellows his mortal remains were laid to rest.

The death change comes.
Death is another life. We bow our heads
At going out, we think, and enter straight
Another golden chamber of the King's Larger than this we leave, and lovelier.
And then in shadowy glimpses, disconnect,
The story, flower-like, closes thus its leaves.
The will of God is all in all. He makes,
Destroys, remakes, for His own pleasure all.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague [Mr. BURLEIGH] who now represents on this floor the district so long represented by Mr. MILLIKEN has so fully sketched the life, character, and public career of our deceased friend that but little remains to be added by myself.

My acquaintance with Mr. MILLIKEN dated from his admission to college, more than forty years ago, and this acquaintance ripened into friendship in the years which followed, and into a warm personal attachment during the fourteen years in which we served together in this Hall as Representatives from the State of Maine.

Mr. MILLIKEN came unusually early into public life, having been elected as a representative to the State legislature soon after he reached his majority; for even at that early period in his life he developed remarkable facility as a public speaker.

He was eminently social in his instincts, warm-hearted and manly. Possessed of talents of a high order, and of industry and courage, united with a rare felicity of expression and fertility of imagination which made him a ready and even eloquent speaker, he easily made his mark as a debater in the House of Representatives, where there are always to be found men of great ability, culture, strength, and eloquence, drawn from the best material furnished by seventy-odd millions of people.

It is certainly a misfortune that the size and arrangement of the Hall in which we meet should be such as to discourage real debate of public questions with the view of shaping decisions of the members of the House who find it impossible to hear much that is said, and thus to encourage only formal speeches to be printed in the RECORD for distribution to constituents.

Few members have ever appeared in this Hall who were more affectionately regarded by associates than Mr. MILLIKEN. His unfailing courtesy in debate, his kindliness of personal intercourse, and his eminently social qualities endeared him to all. And when the intelligence of his sudden death reached us, there was a universal and sincere feeling of sympathy and regret.

On this occasion, when we have gathered in the Hall where he was so long associated with us to pay tributes to his memory, I esteem it a privilege to add a spray to the wreath which kindly regard and affection will weave in loving remembrance of our departed friend and brother.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, what has been so fittingly said by my distinguished colleagues leaves nothing for me but the sad duty of offering my tribute of personal regard and friendship for a colleague with whom my service in the national councils has been intimate for nearly fifteen years. The death of Mr. MILLIKEN was the first break in the delegation from Maine, caused by death, within my memory, and it came with a sense of sudden and severe shock not only to the people of my State, but especially to the remaining three of the four members whose public life in this body had been so closely associated during almost the entire period of the service of each.

Mr. MILLIKEN was a man of pronounced individuality and force in the public affairs of his people for a long time before he came to the Congress of the United States. He had served with conspicuous ability in the legislature of his State, and had long been recognized as one of the prominent and influential men in our public life. His advent here in this new forum of public effort was quickly marked by a recognition of the peculiar qualities, capabilities, and attractions which endeared him to so many of his associates and rendered his public service so fortunate for his constituents and so marked in the appreciation of his fellows. It may be easily affirmed that even in this body, distinguished as it has been through all its history for men of rare eloquence and power, there have been few who more fully possessed the facility of expression, the power of moving his auditors—that rare combination of qualities which enables the orator not only to enchain the attention of his hearers, but to carry conviction to their minds. For many years Mr. MILLIKEN was recognized in many of the principal States of the Union as one of the popular orators whom the people delighted to hear, and nowhere, I may say, were his abilities on the platform more fully recognized than in his own State and among his own people.

So great have been the changes which have taken place in this body since Mr. MILLIKEN and I came here together in the Forty-eighth Congress, so closely following my distinguished colleague, Governor DINGLEY, and but a few terms later than the present Speaker of the House, that I can not draw upon the recollection of the present members as to Mr. MILLIKEN as it would seem natural for me to do, in view of the familiarity of the scene and the associations of the place, for I presume there is no public body in which the changes are so swift and so numerous in the personality of membership as in this House. I doubt if there are more than a dozen members here to-day who were in Congress when Mr. MILLIKEN and I were sworn in at the Speaker's desk. But those who formed his acquaintance for the first time during the last Congress, equally with those who had met him here through all the years that had preceded, recognized the peculiar charm of his personality, the genial kindness of his bearing, the manly traits that characterized him. It may be truly said that few men have served here who possessed a greater degree of popularity among members, without distinction of political affiliation.

Mr. MILLIKEN'S services to his constituency have long been fully known and appreciated by them. Untiring in his zeal in their behalf, unremitting in his efforts to promote all the great lines of public interest in his community and State, and especially solicitous in his devotion to the old soldiers of the Union and their dependent wives and families, his name will be held in pleasant and grateful memory for many years to come. His devotion to his people was generously recognized whenever they had an opportunity to testify their gratitude at the polls, and when the hand of Death deprived them of his services, they paid the best possible tribute to his memory by sending here as his successor one of the ablest and most highly esteemed of the former governors of our State.

It fell to my lot to accompany the delegation from this House and the Senate to the city of his residence on the last sad journey from the capital of the nation to his final sepulture, and my associates upon that journey from the different sections of the country were uniformly and powerfully impressed by the quiet reverence, the universal marks of esteem and sorrow which pervaded the communities through which we traversed on that mournful route. I recall distinctly the occasion of the funeral services in the town where he had lived so long, where his name was a household word among the people, and his presence and voice familiar to all as the membership of their own families.

But I was especially impressed by the beauty and felicity of the tribute paid to his life and public services by the youthful officiating clergyman, who, blending the affection of Mr. MILLIKEN'S own generation with the esteem in which he was held by the younger portion of the community, gave feeling expression to the grief which would follow their deceased Representative to his grave.

We saw the last sad rites performed above the remains of our departed colleague and sadly retraced our steps, as is the law of life, toward the duties of the present and of the future, feeling that we had experienced another solemn reminder of the mutability of human life and the incompleteness of human ambition, that should determine each one of us to devote himself more earnestly, more unselfishly, more worthily to the duties we owe to our God, our country, and our fellow-men.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker, perhaps the most pleasing feature of a life in this body is the associations which are afforded to its members. The gentlemen who come here are chosen from every section of our great Union. We are brought into close touch, and our community of labor gives opportunity for affinity to exercise its influence, and our selection of associates and our friendships are made without reference to party affiliation. Friendships are formed here which will be a source of comfort and satisfaction to the end of our lives. I value these relations and these friendships very greatly.

The House of Representatives, so numerous in membership, brings together men of different characteristics. They are representative men, and are far above the average of ability in the country, whatever may be said by those who would criticise us. Some seem cold and indifferent, and have no desire to bring themselves into close relations with their fellow-members. Others yet again are too busy in the discharge of public duties to spare any portion of their time for social relationships and pleasures. Now and then, Mr. Speaker, there is one who seems to win the hearts of all, to whom all look with affectionate regard and hold in common respect and affection. SETH MILLIKEN was one of this class.

I have thought there was not a man in the House who did not have a feeling of high regard, if not of affection, for him. While he was a rough-and-ready, robust New Englander, with none of the blandishments of affected decorum, he was always kindly, frank, generous, and manly, obliging to all, ever ready to lend a hand or to give assistance when it was within his power to do so, having a due regard for loyalty to his convictions, to which he adhered strenuously.

Mr. Speaker, I would rather be loved than feared. I value more respect and confidence than I do the applause of the world. I would rather possess the friendship, the true friendly sympathy of one friend than the admiration of hundreds of indifferent persons. The kindest heart, the noblest mind, the deepest and most generous love of humanity are not characteristics, as a rule, of the most ambitious spirits. That man who is driven on by the fever of ambition, who bends his energies toward making himself a distinguished factor in public affairs, to write his name in a conspicuous place in the great roll of distinguished men is, unfortunately, almost invariably and inevitably tainted with some selfishness, some jealousy of those who are thrown against him.

It has seemed to me, sir, that Mr. MILLIKEN had no ambition except to be true and loyal to his convictions and to the people whom he served. It has appeared to me that he was indifferent to the applause of men. Their love and confidence he possessed without effort on his part to acquire, and I always, when I met him, felt my own heart warm by the approach of a man of kindly sympathies and manners.

As a member of this body he was capable of the fullest discharge of his duties. He was a worthy opponent of any man in debate, strong and vigorous. Without any mincing of words he drove straight at the point, yet was withal courteous and considerate toward those who opposed him, and never was malevolent, never descended to any of those little stinging and unworthy expressions that so often rankle in the hearts of men so long as intercourse exists between them. I never knew him to stoop to that. Under all circumstances he commanded the respect of those opposed to him, as well as of those who were associated with him in his own views.

I was honored by the Speaker of the House in the selection to be one of the company that went with him to lay him away in his native home. Late on one gray, murky afternoon, the funeral train came to his little city of Belfast, and there we found the whole population of that city turned out to give him a solemn greeting. No one could have witnessed the scene there without being profoundly affected. There were the more prosperous people, comfortably and elegantly dressed, some in their carriages; there were the tradesmen of the town, and the fishermen; the company embraced all. And that which always touches me more than anything else is to see the common poor of a community giving evidence of affectionate memory of the man who has been their public servant and has deserved their confidence and esteem.

The whole city turned out its population, and they lined the streets, as with bowed and uncovered heads they stood while the remains of SETH MILLIKEN were taken to the church where they should rest until the morrow, then to be finally laid away. There the people were again assembled, and one of the most touching and beautiful tributes that I have ever heard fall from the lips of any man upon a funeral occasion came from those of the young clergyman in charge of the obsequies on that day in the presence of the assembled people. Everything spoke of affection and love. Stern old fishermen who had spent their lives upon that coast said to me with tremulous voice, "Did you know SETH?" eager for every word that might be spoken of him. Everybody called him SETH. It was not "Mr. MILLIKEN." They spoke of him in the terms of affection and intimate relationship. "Did you know SETH?" all called him SETH. "He served his people long, and we feel that he can never be replaced to us."

This, Mr. Speaker, is one of the most beautiful things in life, that when a man has lived out his days and years amongst a people, he holds their affection and confidence. If SETH MILLIKEN had his faults, they were generous faults. He had virtues which made him beloved and will always make him respected. Making no pretense of greatness, in a simple, straightforward way he performed duty and left his page in the country's history. No stately column will lift aloft its haughty head bearing inscription of his achievements, but his name is enshrined in the hearts of his people, and those hearts will be the lamps wherein the flame of love shall burn while life endures. And who shall say that when those lamps grow cold in death that the flame shall flicker and die also? Who dare say that it will not burn on into eternity, into the other world, where men may meet in reunited fellowship? We laid him away in the soil of his own native State, his New England home. He peacefully sleeps on that "stern and rock-bound coast" where loving hands have laid him, and the sad soughing of the sea will sing unceasing requiems for his soul.

[Mr. SKINNER addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, eulogies, no matter how full of praise, can not add one jot or tittle to the fame of him whose death we mourn to-day. For eight terms he was elected by the people of his Congressional district as a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Maine, a Commonwealth rich in statesmen. Almost sixteen years a member of Congress and assured as many more, could he have lived, is a most impressive and eloquent tribute to his life. My acquaintance with Mr. MILLIKEN began in the Fifty-third Congress, when I was assigned to a place upon the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of which he was an honored and influential member, but of his life and duties before then I know not, save as I gather the same from history.

I will refer to him in the main as I knew him through personal acquaintance. He was a man of brains and energy, and this was patent to all who came in contact with him. He was gentle in disposition, yet if occasion so required, he could play the part of gladiator, full of fight to all challengers. He was not given to lengthy speeches, but delighted in repartee, and his tongue mixed in cross-fire debates oftener than fell to the lot of any other member. With ten words he would often do more harm to the argument of an adversary than many members could do in an hour's time by set speech. He was a hard worker in the committee room and at the Departments, and he was patriotic and full of devotion to his State. As a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds during his entire service in Congress, and as chairman of the committee in the Fifty-first and Fifty-fourth Congresses, he made it possible for the State of Maine to lead all other States in the number of her public buildings.

His constituents realized the importance of continuing in office its member, for in no other assembly does length of service count so much as here; and because of this custom in Maine, that New England State has more influence in legislation than any other Commonwealth in the Union. Our honored Speaker began his Congressional career in the Forty-fifth Congress and has served continuously ever since, a period of over twenty-one years. The illustrious chairman of the Ways and Means Committee has been a Representative in this body since the Forty-seventh Congress, a continuous service of nearly eighteen years; while the invincible chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs began his Congressional career in the Forty-eighth Congress, and has been here almost sixteen years; and had Mr. MILLIKEN served out the term for which he was last elected, his length of service also would have been sixteen years.

During the Fifty-first Congress Mr. MILLIKEN served as chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and was instrumental in securing the passage of a large number of bills authorizing the erection of Government buildings in different parts of the country, exceeding in this respect the work of any other one Congress, and forcing upon the chairman a mountain of labor. In addition to all this, his committee laid the groundwork for and took the first steps toward the erection of the handsome Library building across the way, as well as the large post-office building now nearing completion on Pennsylvania avenue.

Mr. MILLIKEN was a great admirer of the city of Washington and has contributed in no little measure toward making it the handsomest city in America. He entertained one plan which should be fostered and encouraged to-day, and that was to convert the land south of Pennsylvania avenue lying between the Capitol and Treasury buildings to governmental purposes. That great avenue and this beautiful city will never be complete until his dream in this respect is fulfilled. I join in his ideal view, and wish that between the two buildings referred to and upon the south side of Pennsylvania avenue there existed continuous parking 200 feet wide and fronting magnificent Government buildings, set in harmonious distances from each other. Thus would beauty be enhanced and business centralized, while an hundred real-estate speculators would not interfere with the work of Congress every time a new building is projected.

Mr. MILLIKEN took a practical view of life and did all things well. He was a very plain man, without frills or hypocrisy, and he never assumed to be that which he was not. He was a man of the people, and therein lay his strength, and it no doubt accounts for much of the wonderful popularity he enjoyed among the people of Maine.

Our world may be full of frauds and they may often thrive rankest in public life, and too many people may try to fool each other and while so doing fool themselves, but Mr. MILLIKEN never belonged to such a class—he was always plain "SETH MILLIKEN." We mourn his loss, Mr. Speaker, but take comfort in the fact that he contributed more than his share toward the upbuilding of his State and country.

Mr. HILBORN. Mr. Speaker, several years ago Hon. SETH L. MILLIKEN visited California, and it was there that I first met him. His successful career in Congress had already given him a national reputation, and his intimate association with Hon. James G. Blaine, whose popularity in that State was almost unbounded, made Mr. MILLIKEN a most welcome visitor.

The people of San Francisco who had formerly resided in Maine tendered to him a reception and banquet. It was, indeed, a notable occasion, and one which he keenly enjoyed. The banqueting hall was tastefully and elaborately adorned with choice flowers. Around the table were assembled men who had assisted to build up that wonderful State—men who had been its governors, and men who had filled other official positions in which they had helped to mold its policies. He seemed for the first time to realize how potent the influence of the sons of his own State had been in shaping the affairs of that Western empire, and his State pride was aroused.

The beautiful floral decorations of exquisite design which were around him excited his wonder and admiration.

The marvelous effects which can be produced in floral embellishment with an unlimited command of perfect flowers of every hue was a revelation to him. His cultivated taste and keen appreciation of the beautiful found here something to revel in.

I shall never forget his address on that occasion.

Naturally an orator, the surroundings inspired him to an eloquence of expression which I have seldom heard equaled. He never forgot that occasion, and in after years often spoke of it.

When I came to Congress, I became a member of the committee of which he was chairman. He was a model presiding officer.

Dignified, courteous to his associates, methodical in the arrangement of the work, and wonderful in the facility with which he dispatched business, no one in that committee questioned his right to leadership.

His form was fashioned in a faultless mold, and the structure of his mind was alike symmetrical. His mind was quick and alert and worked evenly. His mind was also polished by a liberal education. While in college he must have been a faithful student of the classics, and in after life he did not forget them.

His knowledge of history was extensive and accurate and always at his command. His familiarity with the best authors of English poetry and prose was remarkable. He seldom addressed the House, but when he did, he always commanded attention. He was fluent, forcible, and often eloquent.

The Speaker assigned to me the melancholy duty of accompanying the remains to his home. It was evident that he was dear to the hearts of the people among whom he had lived. They mourned him sincerely as one of themselves, gifted beyond themselves, but full of generous impulses and in full sympathy with the great body of his fellow-men who labor for their daily bread. There, in the beautiful city of his home, we laid to rest one who will long be remembered by his associates in this House as one of its brightest and most useful members.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I can hardly expect to do justice to the memory of SETH L. MILLIKEN. He was one of the most active and earnest men of this active and earnest body of men. There was no public question that required or demanded attention but it seemed to me that he at once became interested in finding, first, the side that was right, and when he had secured to his own mind the satisfaction as to which was right, he was zealous in promoting it to the end. In so far as ambition was concerned, it seemed to me that Mr. MILLIKEN had no ambition other than to faithfully serve first his own district, second the State, and third the great nation of which he was proud to be a representative. He was proud of his people, proud of his State, and proud of this great nation.

He noted the coming and going of those whose only thought was the gratification of an ambition for place and power, with but little concern, except to wonder why men who had sworn to legislate for this great people could act with indifference and unconcern on the public questions here discussed and disposed of. Early and late in his committee room he could be found, always at his post and always at his work. He was no idler, and in him his people found a painstaking and most faithful public servant. His cultivation of a just and conscientious discharge of his public duties gave him a keen scent for the right, and intense hatred and contempt for the wrong.

In his plain, straightforward way he would enter the arena of debate thrice-armed because of the justice of his cause. We can yet in our mind see him with his earnest and impressive manner, with firmness of voice, brightness of eye, gestures of eloquence, and words of burning, present in pleasing phrases his side of the cause; and with equal force, in most sarcastic yet gentlemanly tones, pierce the weakness of the opposition. His oratory is not what would be termed eloquence, such as the oratory of Webster, Clay, or Everett, but his was the oratory of earnestness, such as that of Lincoln, Thaddeus Stevens, and Blaine. Convinced, as he had to be, of his being in the right, his advocacy never failed to secure close attention and admiration. He was always attractive to new members, so willing to aid, so kind in counsel, so untiring in attention and labor. He never failed to earn both the esteem and love of those with whom he came in contact.

We of his Committee of Public Buildings and Grounds knew him best. For a period of almost four years his daily greetings were like sweet music. The lack of funds in the Treasury with which to erect public buildings to attract and impress the people all over this nation with our country's dignity and greatness was to him a source of keen regret. He used to say, next to the church and the schoolhouse he would like to see a public building in every city and town of importance in the country, as nothing would teach the people greater respect for their Government, love for its institutions, and patriotism more than beautiful public buildings with our national emblem daily floating over them. A general bill covering this thought was many times his theme of earnest discussion and consideration. He hailed with conscientious satisfaction the return of the country to the doctrine of protection, so that the Treasury might again be treated to a surplus under which these improvements could again go forward.

In this he was not partisan, but firm in his belief that only by protection could prosperity be attained for our people and success for our nation. He loved to converse of the future of the country, and believed that ours was a country whose mission was peace, and through us all the nations of the earth would eventually be "governments of the people." Christianity and a republican form of government for all the people was to him the attainment of the millennium, and our mission was to aid by peaceful methods this desirable consummation.

Mr. Speaker, it was not strange that such a character and such a man was beloved by his people; for eight successive times did they elect him as their Representative, and when the sad cortége conveying his remains from this city reached his home, old and young, rich and poor, with saddened countenances and tear-bedimmed eyes, joined with the family of our deceased friend in mourning his death. From all parts of his district and State the people gathered to do honor to faithfulness and integrity of one of their most conscientious public servants. Says one of his neighbors of him in an article in the Boston Globe:

> Magnetic and whole-souled SETH L. MILLIKEN, for fourteen years Representative for the Third district in the Maine delegation, was laid at rest in the last sleep to-day in his beloved city of Belfast.
> While his funeral was being held in the white, square-towered Unitarian Church, a Sabbath's calm rested over this rugged little city by Penobscot's blue bay. Flags snapped at half mast at all the staffs in town and from the spars of shipping in the harbor; stores were closed as a mark of respect to the city's distinguished son, now no more; groups of people gathered on the street corners and recalled stories of jolly, quick-witted "SETH"—they loved his given name—while in the dim interior of the modest house of God a young minister pronounced the words of promise, "I am the resurrection and the life," "Let not thy heart be troubled," "Death is swallowed up in victory."

This gives a truthful statement of the sentiment of his home community, and on the day of the funeral it was generally remarked: "It was the saddest day ever seen in Belfast."

We knew his friendship for the veterans who risked life and limb for their country, and as the old and tottering heroes of the war passed by his bier, score upon score of them dropped the silent tear as they took the last look upon him who had for so many years been their champion and friend in this forum and elsewhere, and wherever the honor and courage of the defenders of our flag were questioned or attacked. The record of the various Departments in this our capital city will attest the patience as well as the abundance and success of his work.

Said the Grand Army post of his city in its tribute to his memory:

> We believe the portals of heaven stand wide open to receive him for his fidelity and faithful performance of what he conceived to be his duty to all his constituents throughout his Congressional district. Our city, county, State, and nation mourn his demise and feel that the Grand Army of the Republic have lost their champion and best friend. "While yet in love with life and raptured with the world he passed to silence and pathetic dust." His memory will be revered by our people and by the Grand Army of the Republic with loved and cherished recollection.

Of his charity, benevolence, and public spirit I shall not speak, except to say his hand was ever open, extending cheerful and willing aid to the friendless and needy. Scores in this city miss his generous hand and mourn his absence by reason of his kindly heart and generous care.

He was a person who is missed. His vacant place attracts the attention of this his generation in this busy place, where life must be vigorous; where wide-awake and earnest men must confer with each other; where the interest of 70,000,000 of the most active people on the earth are considered; where men come and go only to be supplanted by others fully as vigorous and resting under the same care and responsibility. It is proper we should pause for a day and point to this man of integrity, this honest servant of the people, who after over fourteen years in this the highest council of the nation was called suddenly from our midst, and left a record for honesty and integrity against which not even a whisper can be uttered. It is proper to place in the archives of the nation a fitting tribute to such worth and such life—a life of service, a life of honor, a life of work well done. Sympathy has little place here. Vacancies are soon filled. Let us, however, trust that none but such as he shall tarry long within these walls, consecrated to liberty, loyalty, equality, and exact justice. Place here should be the reward of merit, patriotic devotion to country, and not the purchase of gold and the result of selfish greed and ambition. Said our friend's pastor of him, in his beautiful and touching sermon:

> We have learned long ere this period of our lives that there is a divinity that shapes our ends; that God and nature are impartial and kind, and that the silent messenger with the inverted torch is no respecter of persons.

> Eulogy must come from the nation for which he spent the best years of his life; from his confrères, with whom he was so long associated; from the old soldier whom he loved and who has in so large measure profited by his spirited addresses and intercession; from the State who claimed him as a son; from this the home of his adoption and early struggles and triumphs; from the friends all over this great land who knew him and his work; from these his fellow-townsmen, for whose interests he seemed ever jealous and painstaking, who knew him as a scholar and speaker, marvelously versed in the classics, and as their good friend. Future days will emphasize in silent panegyrics the good he did and the strong purpose he had which bound him heart and soul in his labors for you and me, and all who in any wise needed his services.

An authoress whom Mr. MILLIKEN had always treated with great kindness, as was his custom, in speaking of him in this city, said:

He was a man of fine feeling and a most considerate gentleman, always gracious, always considerate. He was kind hearted and generous, a self-made man, who sympathized with others whom circumstances compelled to an unequal struggle in life.

Death for our friend had no terrors—there was no need of dissembling, nor sudden call; he met this last friend as one might view and welcome the dawning of the morning. His life's work was faithfully done, and in its close he could calmly enter where each shall take his place in the halls of death, possessing an unfaltering trust in the sure "reward of duty done," like one who draws the drapery of a couch around him and welcomes restful sleep. His life was an inspiration. He loved the world, but feared not to leave it. His companionship was ennobling. He was one of nature's noblemen, a sincere and earnest man.

A high-born soul—one who loved his fellow-men—has passed to its royal heritage.

Softly his breath went as the sigh
Of south winds from some isle of rest;
Calmly he died, as stars that die
Behind the gray hills of the West.
Like some great ship through life he bore,
Conveying love and human weal,
While every bark along the shore
Felt the wide impulse of his keel.
Brave heart, high mind, and noble soul,
Farewell! until we come to thee!
Rich was thy journey to the goal,
And great thy bliss and state shall be.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, sad as it may be on this occasion to those who knew and honored the faithful servant of the people whose memory we commemorate to-day, yet it is pleasant to reflect upon his happy disposition, his genial nature, and innumerable qualities of heart and head that always made it pleasant to be associated in business with him, either personally or in his official capacity. When I entered the Fifty-third Congress, I was assigned to duty on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of which the Hon. SETH L. MILLIKEN, whose life and character we extol to-day, was chairman, which position he held also during the Fifty-fourth Congress. Speaking as a Democratic member of that committee, I can bear testimony, and do so gladly, not only to his fairness and impartiality, but to his constant courtesy and uniform kindness to all who were associated with him in the committee's work.

Mr. Speaker, it has been well said that the best portion of a man's life is made up of his little, nameless, unremembered acts of kindness and of love. Measured by this severe test, the name of our departed friend and colleague will be enrolled along with the good and the blessed in the eternal land of peace.

Mr. Speaker, to those of us who believe in the immortality of the soul, in the eternal and felicitous existence of the good, and in the boundless mercies of a merciful Redeemer, our friend is not dead. He only sleeps, awaiting the just and liberal reward of a forgiving and loving Jesus.

Immortality o'ersweeps
All pains, all tears, all time, all fears—and peals
Like the eternal thunders of the deep
Into my ears this truth—Thou liv'st forever!

The SPEAKER. In obedience to the resolutions and in accordance with the direction of the House, as a further mark of respect, I declare the House to be adjourned until Monday at 12 o'clock noon.

Accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

SENATOR FROM OHIO.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the legislature of Ohio has selected M. A. Hanna to be a Senator from the State of Ohio for the term ending March 3, 1899. I present his credentials, and ask that he may be sworn and qualified.

The credentials of Marcus Alonzo Hanna, chosen by the legislature of the State of Ohio a Senator from that State for the remaining portion of the term ending March 3, 1899, were read and ordered to be filed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator-elect will take his place at the Vice-President's desk and receive the oath of office.

Mr. Hanna was escorted to the Vice-President's desk by Mr. FORAKER, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior of the 13th instant submitting an urgent deficiency estimate of appropriation for printing and binding, including lithographing, for the Civil Service Commission, for the fiscal year, $8,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The communication and accompanying papers will be printed and referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, if there be no objection.

Mr. ALLEN. To what committee is the communication to be referred?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair stated the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment. It is suggested at the desk that it ought to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. Does the Senator suggest a committee?

Mr. ALLEN. I had the suggestion to make that it ought to go to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, which is now investigating the several branches of the civil service.

Mr. ALLISON. As it relates to a deficiency appropriation, I think it should go, as such communications ordinarily do go, to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLEN. I will agree with the Senator from Iowa that under ordinary circumstances it ought to go direct to the Committee on Appropriations, but I submit that there is now pending in the Senate an investigation as to whether this branch of the service should be continued or not, and we ought to have the benefit of the wisdom and knowledge of the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment on the subject. I think the communication ought to go there. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no special wish about it. It will reach the Committee on Appropriations in the end, I am satisfied.

Mr. ALLEN. I could not hear a word the Senator from Iowa said.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the communication be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

PRODUCTION OF PRECIOUS METALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 13th instant, a letter from the Director of the Geological Survey, inclosing a report as to the desirability of more definite statistics in regard to the production of gold and silver in the United States, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, and ordered to be printed.

CONSTRUCTION OF MILITARY BUILDINGS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with the provisions of the act of Congress making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1897, a letter of Maj. Gen. Nelson A. Miles, commanding the Army, of May 4, 1894, submitting his views on the expenditure of money for the construction of United States buildings connected with the new fortifications, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

HALL OF RECORDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with the provisions of an act of Congress approved June 11, 1896, certain information relative to a public building to be used for a hall of records in the city of Washington, suitable for the storage of papers, documents, etc., and inclosing two tentative sketches for the proposed building; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

BANDS OF SIOUX INDIANS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report concerning the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians, in conformity with the requirements of the Indian appropriation act of June 7, 1897; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report concerning the Santee Sioux of Nebraska and Flandreau Sioux of South Dakota, formerly known as a confederacy of the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians, in pursuance of the requirements of the Indian appropriation act of June 7, 1897; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, adverting to letters of even date from his Department, transmitting separate reports concerning the Sisseton and Wahpeton and the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians, stating that it seems to be essential that the attention of Congress should in a more formal manner than is set out in the reports in question be specifically called to some of the matters concerning the transaction with the Indians in question, as disclosed by the reports; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PETTIGREW subsequently said: This morning reports were received from the Secretary of the Interior in relation to the Medawakanton, Wahpakoota, Sisseton, and Wahpeton bands of Indians. Maps accompanied the reports and they were ordered to be printed. I wish to have the order changed so that the reports will be printed and not the maps, and that the maps, with the reports, be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. To print the maps would require a month's time, and I wish to have the reports printed before that time elapses; nor do I think it necessary to print the maps.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota to change the order made this morning—not to print the maps, but the reports only, as they came from the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. ALLISON. I see no objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota, but at a later stage of the session it may be necessary to have the maps printed.

Mr. PETTIGREW. If it shall become necessary, that order can be made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The order will be made as suggested by the Senator from South Dakota.

REPORT OF BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

The reports heretofore of Senate Committees on Immigration set forth fully and in detail our reasons and argument for the passage of such bills as have been presented by those committees. Our objections, in brief, are to the illiterate, pauper, and criminal classes of immigrants coming mainly from eastern and southern Europe, which have increased to an alarming extent during the last decade, as distinguished from the intelligent, industrious, and law-abiding classes coming principally from northern Europe—Anglo-Saxon, German, and Scandinavian. The train of evils resulting from the present lax immigration laws affect injuriously the entire country and its every interest; lowering wages, debasing our population, both socially and morally, and adding nothing to the welfare of the country or nation, while only the steamship companies and the employers of cheap imported labor are benefited."

Mr. LODGE. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 82) providing for the printing of the report of the governor of Alaska, 1897, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That there be printed 10,000 copies of the report of the governor of the District of Alaska to the Secretary of the Interior, 1897; 3,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 5,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for the use of the Department of the Interior.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts why the message of this particular Territorial governor is to be printed and not the others?

Mr. LODGE. Because there is very great demand for all information relating to Alaska. The regular number of the reports of governors of Territories printed is only 1,000 copies. For this report this year there is for obvious reasons a great demand, and the committee were requested by a number of Senators who have been pressed for this document to have an additional number printed. The cost will be only a little over $500, and I think the document is really needed.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF ALCOHOLIC LIQUORS IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to submit a report, accompanying a resolution, which I send to the desk.

The resolution of the Senate of June 2, 1897, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to consider and report, by bill or otherwise, what legislation, if any, is necessary to give full effect to the purpose of the statute approved August 8, 1890, entitled "An act to limit the effect of the regulations of commerce between the several States and with foreign countries in certain cases."

Mr. GORMAN. Let the resolution be read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts desire the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Maryland will allow me to make a brief statement before it is read, I will state that it is a resolution by which the Judiciary Committee were directed at the last session to report what further legislation was necessary to enable the States to enforce their liquor laws in substance—to enforce the act of Congress of 1890 which authorized the State legislation to take effect for its police purposes without regard to the fact that the liquors were imported from other States or from other countries. Since the resolution was passed directing the Committee on the Judiciary to deal with the subject the Senate have passed unanimously a bill, which has gone to the House. The committee merely reports that that bill contains all the necessary legislation, and that in the opinion of the committee it should become a law. It binds the Senate to nothing, and simply discharges the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the committee is discharged from the further consideration of the resolution.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask that the report of the committee may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That will be the order, in the absence of objection.

The report this day submitted by Mr. HOAR is as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, who were directed by Senate resolution No. 119 to consider and report, by bill or otherwise, what legislation, if any, is necessary to give full effect to the purpose of the statute approved August 8, 1890, entitled "An act to limit the effect of the regulations of commerce between the several States and with foreign countries in certain cases," respectfully report:

That all the legislation that is now necessary and expedient to give full effect to said statute is contained in Senate bill No. 224, which was passed by the Senate, without division, on July 15, 1897, and is now pending in the House of Representatives, and which, in the judgment of this committee, should become a law.

QUARANTINE STATION AT SHIP ISLAND, MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. WALTHALL December 13, 1897, reported adversely thereon; and it was indefinitely postponed, as follows:

Whereas under and by virtue of an act entitled "An act to authorize the removal of the quarantine station from Ship Island, Mississippi," approved March 5, 1888, said quarantine station was removed to Chandeleur Island, in the Gulf of Mexico, such removal having been recommended by the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service on account of the proximity of that island to the mainland; and

Whereas said quarantine station was afterwards, to wit, in the year 1893, transferred back to Ship Island without any authority of law previously obtained; and

Whereas many eminent physicians and other persons interested in the subject have expressed their belief that the appearance of yellow fever on the Gulf coast of Mississippi in the summer of 1897 was due to the proximity of said quarantine station on Ship Island to the mainland: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine be, and they are hereby, directed to investigate and report whether it is not advisable that said quarantine station be again removed from Ship Island to some more remote point in the Gulf, and if so, what further legislation is necessary for the accomplishment of that purpose; and said committee may report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine, reported the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine is hereby directed to investigate and report whether it is advisable that the quarantine station be removed from Ship Island to some other point in the Gulf of Mexico, and if so, what further legislation is necessary for the accomplishment of that purpose; and said committee may report by bill or otherwise.

That said committee shall have power to prosecute its inquiries through a subcommittee, which may sit during the sessions of the Senate at such times and places as may be thought necessary, with power to send for persons and papers, and to employ a stenographer, the expenses of said committee to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Whereas in the subsequent report for the year 1881 the item referred to of "Balance of accrued interest due the United States on interest account," as well as the total amount of interest, which includes the amount above referred to, was omitted and has not since been included in the statements of the amount due the Government by the Pacific railway companies: Therefore,

I am informed that a rule of some kind has been promulgated by which hereafter claims for increase of pension will not be considered within twelve months from the last action of allowance or rejection. I should like to know whether there is any statute authorizing the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Pensions to promulgate a rule of that kind.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the resolution go over. I should like to make some inquiry in regard to it.

Mr. ALLEN. In view of the fact that it is an instruction to the Committee on Pensions, I think it ought to pass and go to that committee now.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be referred to the committee without the instructions.

And, also, to furnish a statement of the general nature, subject-matters, and amounts of all claims of individuals or corporations, citizens of the United States, upon the Government of Venezuela which may have been presented to their Government, or to its legation at Caracas, since the 1st day of August, 1868, the date specified in Article II of the convention of December 5, 1885, for a reopening of the claims of citizens of the United States against Venezuela under the treaty of April 25, 1866, and which have not been settled by the Government of Venezuela.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, in the statement which I am glad to make respecting certain phases of the work of the recent bimetallic commission, I must speak, of course, entirely unofficially and as not committing my associates in the slightest degree either to my opinions or deductions. Later in the session we are certain to have ample discussion on the subject of silver, and it will probably be acrid and bitter enough. In my remarks to-day, however, I mean to avoid, as far as possible, anything which may give rise to controversy, and while the account of our negotiations must necessarily seem bare and colorless, the subject of them is one of surpassing interest and importance to every member of the Senate and to every citizen of our country.

When Congress met a year ago, soon after the national election, there was a universal expression by the Republican membership in the Senate that the pledge of the party in its St. Louis platform to promote international bimetallism by every means in its power was an undertaking to be faithfully carried out without evasion or delay.

As a result of this sentiment, and growing out of the action of the Republican members of the Senate, I spent the months of January and February last in London and Paris, with a day or two at Berlin, inquiring unofficially as to the apparent prospects of securing bimetallism by international agreement. During my absence the act of March 3, 1897, was passed, almost without dissent in both Houses of Congress, and became a law at the close of the last Administration.

Chiefly because of my having already undertaken to ascertain foreign sentiment respecting bimetallism, and through no special fitness of mine, the President was pleased to appoint me as one of the special envoys or commissioners under the provisions of the act.

There were three of us appointed. We were all bimetallists; our views were known to the President before our appointment; there was no one of us who did not and does not believe that the financial question overshadows all others, and that continued adhesion to the single gold standard means only disaster to our agricultural and commercial interests.

We spent six months abroad, visiting only Paris and London, returning in November last. Whatever measure of success or failure has been meted out to us, we have been hampered by no lack of authority or sanction or administrative support.

The language of the law itself has been our guide and has marked the extent and limitations of our powers. The President was authorized to call a conference with a view of securing by international agreement a fixity of relative value between gold and silver as money; by means of a common ratio between the metals, with free mintage at such ratio. Or if in the judgment of the President the purpose specified in the first section of the act, that is, if the securing by international agreement a fixity of relative value between the metals by means of a common ratio with free mintage at such ratio, could be better attained by the appointment of one or more commissioners or envoys who should seek by diplomatic negotiations such international agreement, he was authorized to appoint them.

By virtue of our appointment we were authorized to negotiate an international agreement. It seems elemental and unnecessary to say that any agreement negotiated by us could have no binding authority except as Congress enacted it into law. Not only were the authority and sanction and powers with which we were intrusted specifically set forth in the law under which we were appointed, but there were never at any time instructions given us that sought in the slightest degree to change or hamper or limit the full powers conferred upon us by law.

We have been of one mind and in entire agreement during all of our negotiations, and our efforts have been loyally furthered by our representatives abroad, who were fortified by strenuous instructions. In England especially the able and intelligent and cordial cooperation of our ambassador was of great advantage in our deliberations.

We have had, then, a law broad and full in its powers; we have been free to act under its provisions; our views have been identical and earnestly favoring an international agreement, and we have had the hearty support of our ambassador at the Court of St. James. Further than this, from the day of our first entering upon the fulfillment of our duties until now the President of the United States has extended to the mission his unswerving support in all its efforts to bring about an international agreement. There has been no moment that we have not known that back of our efforts was the earnest desire of the Chief Executive to carry out in its integrity the provisions of the platform of the Republican party pledging it to every effort to bring about an international bimetallic agreement.

Since the demonetization of silver by the United States in 1873 there have been three international conferences held in the endeavor to secure the restoration of bimetallism. All of these conferences have been failures. There are eighteen nations of Europe, each emitting coinage of its own, and all of them basing their circulation upon the standard of gold alone. Two of them, Russia and Austria, have since the last conference lowered by law the gold value of the silver in their current silver coins and the value of the paper based on silver; one of the countries has closed the mints in India, its chief colony, the largest absorbent of silver in the world; and, outside of Europe, the Empire of Japan has inaugurated a new ratio between gold and silver of 32½ to 1.

All of these important and independent changes in coinage laws, added to our experience drawn from former attempts, made it evident to us that if a fresh conference were called without a prior understanding first having been reached between some, at least, of the leading commercial nations of the world, another failure would be inevitably recorded. In reaching a conclusion as to what countries should first be asked to join in the endeavor to secure a preliminary understanding, events of the preceding year much simplified our course. Three European countries, France, Germany, and Great Britain, had within a few months of each other, in language nearly identical, made legislative record of their desire to bring about by international agreement a fixed parity of exchange between gold and silver. It seemed wisest to us, therefore, to ascertain preliminarily whether among these countries some understanding might be reached.

We turned first, naturally, to France. Our sister Republic had for nearly half a century practically alone maintained for the world the parity between the metals. Her interests were largely agricultural. Her people were accustomed to the use of silver as money. Prosperity had attended her financial policy. And, above all, there was at the head of her ministry a far-seeing and courageous statesman who had never faltered in the expression of his belief in bimetallism as the only policy which could stop the steady appreciation of the value of gold and the necessarily equally steady decline in all other values, and the only policy which could overcome the paralysis of agricultural interests, the products of which were compelled to compete with those of the silver-using countries.

It is necessary to remember that in the French Republic, as in our own, the sanction of Parliament was necessary to the consummation of any agreement; and any preliminary understanding could only embody the views of the ministry. France, also, was bound by certain obligations toward her associates in the Latin Union, obligations which she was careful to observe.

The question of bimetallism was viewed in France as essentially an international one. We had before us the resolutions passed by the English House of Commons. We had also the distinct and unequivocal utterances of the 17th of March, 1896, made by Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Mr. Balfour, First Lord of the Treasury, stating the minimum of the contributions England would make toward an international solution of the question, and conveying the intimation that more would be done if possible, but coupled always with the assertion that England would under no circumstances change her existing gold standard. And it was felt that before any definitive action should be sought among the other countries of Europe the exact attitude of England should first be ascertained.

It was agreed, therefore, that France and the United States would together present the question to the English ministry, and would together inquire as to the character and extent of the contributions England would make toward international bimetallism. The position of the French Government upon the whole question was fully and clearly stated in the instructions which the French Government gave Baron de Courcel, the French Ambassador in London. Copies of these instructions were read to us and were sent by cable to the French Ambassador in Washington and by him read to the Secretary of State. These instructions embodied the preliminary understanding already arrived at by France and the United States, and stated unequivocally the desire of France to secure the restoration of bimetallism by international agreement at a ratio of 15½ of silver to 1 of gold.

The importance of this preliminary understanding with France must not be underestimated. While France represents less than 11 per cent of the total population of Europe, in the volume of her currency she stands first, and furnishes more than 23 per cent of the gold, silver, and paper circulating as money in Europe, her proportion being upward of 25 per cent of the gold, 40 per cent of the silver, and 6½ per cent of the uncovered paper. The volume of a nation's currency is not determined by its population, its wealth, and its commerce alone; custom and the habits of its people are powerful factors. Other European countries, comparatively small in area and in the number of their people, furnish large percentages of the money in use, and I think I may say with positiveness that had England even adhered to her assurances of the 17th of March, countries representing more than half of the total money of Europe and the United States would have agreed, prior to a conference, that upon terms to be settled at such conference they would reopen their mints to the unlimited coinage of both gold and silver.

When we reached London and came to consider, jointly with the French Ambassador, the situation in England, there seemed at first but few difficulties in the way. Not only had the House of Commons declared unanimously by resolution on the 17th day of March, 1896, as follows:

> That this House is of opinion that the instability of the relative value of gold and silver since the action of the Latin Union in 1873 has proved injurious to the best interests of this country, and urges upon the Government the advisability of doing all in their power to secure by international agreement a stable monetary par of exchange between gold and silver—but on the same day both Mr. Balfour and Sir Michael Hicks-Beach clearly and unequivocally stated the position of the English ministry; the same ministry through whom we were to negotiate.

Mr. Balfour said:

> The whole trend of civilized opinion is in the direction of a double standard.

> It appears to me that under this system we are pledged, and the House is pledged, after the speech of the chancellor of the exchequer, to do as much or more for the bimetallic system, and for the rehabilitation of silver, as it is in the power of any foreign country to do. With this resolution we go to foreign nations and tell them that, though you can hardly ask us to make this great change in our habits, we will do for you as much as you can do for yourselves; we will make this great contribution to a bimetallic system; we will go back upon the deliberately arranged method of providing a currency for India; we will reopen the Indian mints; we will engage that they shall be kept open, and we shall, therefore, provide for a free coinage of silver within the limits of the British Empire, for a population greater in number than the populations of Germany, France, and America put together. [Cheers.]

> I am glad, then, to think that the resolution will be carried by a large majority [cheers], and I hope it will be understood abroad—in Germany, in France, and in America—that this country is perfectly prepared to bear its fair share in any system which may, once and for all, put the international currency of the world upon a basis just both to the debtor and to the creditor, and a basis far less liable to change than either a monometallic gold basis or a monometallic silver basis can possibly be expected to be. [Cheers.]

Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, himself a gold monometallist, said in terms:

> I therefore do believe that in the matters which I have alluded to there are, as this motion states, evils affecting this country and our Indian Empire in the present low value of silver, and we are perfectly ready, as we have always been, to join with foreign countries in conference as to the best way in which those evils may be alleviated.

> What is the policy which, as a Government, we intend to pursue? As I have said, we are willing, we are anxious, seeing that there are evils in the present low value of silver and in the fluctuations in the value of the two metals, to enter into a conference, or into negotiations, which certainly I believe at the present stage would be much better than a conference, with other countries upon this subject, but we are not prepared to abandon the gold standard in the United Kingdom.
> We can not, therefore, alter the gold standard of the United Kingdom; but, with that reservation, we are prepared, in the words of the resolution, to do all in our power to secure, by international agreement, a stable monetary par of exchange between gold and silver.

> If it be possible for other nations to join in a bimetallic agreement which seemed good to themselves, I have little doubt but that the Indian Government would be prepared to assist by reopening the Indian mints to the free coinage of silver, and that we might endeavor, by other minor means, to promote the increase of silver in coinage and thus aid in an international agreement on this great question.

Not only so, but our own ambassador, in May, but a few weeks before our arrival, and while we were already in Paris negotiating with the French ministry, had, in an interview with Lord Salisbury, been told that the English Government still adhered to the policy outlined in the speeches of its ministers in the House of Commons.

We were not, therefore, intruders. We could present ourselves with the certainty of that reception which must follow direct and open invitation. And the welcome we had the right to expect we received. From the day we reached England until we left it finally in October, our official treatment was everything that could be desired. The English ministry, in terms, asked the French Ambassador and ourselves to suggest wherein, in our opinion,

England could materially contribute to a solution of the question, and at the same time retain for her own people the gold standard, and what are termed the "proposals" were not volunteered, and were made only by way of suggestion at the explicit request of the English ministry. When they were received they were treated with full consideration, as were the representatives of the two Governments conducting the negotiations.

It is not surprising that another view should have prevailed in this country, a view based on the intemperate and hostile and somewhat brutal utterances of the London press respecting the proposals of the French and American representatives. The newspapers of London, like the newspapers of many of the capitals of the world, are dominated by and allied with the banking element, and reflect their views and often their expressions. The business of money loaning is an engrossing pursuit, not always tending to the cultivation of the amenities of life, and it is not to be wondered at that the London newspapers, voicing that industry, should, in their hostility to a policy of which they disapproved, forget for the moment that courtesy which is due to the stranger within the gates, especially when he comes upon invitation, and that they should be led to characterize proposals as "impertinent" which were made only upon request of their own Government.

In response, then, to the request of the English ministry, a number of suggestions were offered as indicating channels through which England might aid in a favorable international solution of the money question. It was natural enough that in England any change of economic policy would meet with great opposition. In the other leading commercial nations of the world, merchants not past middle age could recall the time when bimetallism prevailed, and grains of silver were as much a standard of value as grains of gold.

In England the business men of to-day, and their fathers and grandfathers before them, have known only gold monometallism, and when we approached England we realized perfectly that in furtherance of any settlement of the question English mints would not be opened to the unlimited coinage of silver for use in England as money. Short of this, however, England could be a most important factor in bringing about the result we desired. The vital point in all our negotiations with Great Britain was, of course, India. Everything else was of comparatively slight importance; but if certain countries were to open their mints to the unlimited coinage of silver, England, by enlarging her use of that metal, might divert at first silver which would otherwise be offered for coinage at the open mints, and her action in this regard might tend to establish public confidence in the proposed financial policy.

Mr. President, it may be of some nterest if I explain briefly some of these proposals. One of them, which was not perhaps generally understood here, was the proposal that there should be some contribution based on the Huskisson plan, or something similar. The plan takes its name from a communication of William Huskisson, one of the ablest financiers that the world has known, who in 1826, after England had gone to the gold standard, suggested that, all other countries but England being upon the silver standard, it was essential for the prosperity of England that she should have silver included in her money, but he did not want it to interfere with her token silver coinage, which was a legal tender for 40 shillings only. He therefore made the suggestion that the mint should be made a bank for the reception of bullion, and that silver bullion should be received there and certificate given to the person presenting it, stating its weight and fineness and its value at a blank ratio; but further on in his recommendation he said there was but one ratio to adopt, and that was the ratio adopted by France of 15½ to 1, and then providing that these certificates should be redeemable only in silver of that weight and fineness, but should pass current in all transactions.

In his suggestion, in order to overcome its possible interference with token silver, among other reasons, he provided that the amount of silver to be deposited should be not less than 200 ounces and the certificates to be issued should never be less than £50. This was followed soon afterwards by the Duke of Wellington's proposition of a similar character, suggesting instead of a minimum deposit of £50 that it be raised to £200.

The next suggestion was a proposal that the Government should enter upon the coinage in England of rupees and standard silver dollars, and make the latter legal tender to whatever amount silver might be made a legal tender within Great Britain. The principal value of any such suggestion could be sentimental only. The mints would never be used unless they were needed, and if needed, there was every reason why they should be used.

England had already, in December, 1894, entered into an agreement with two banks in the Straits Settlements, the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank, and the Bank of India, Australia, and China, whereby she agreed to coin for the Straits Settlements all the British dollars which might be requested, which should be of the same weight and fineness as Mexican dollars, at a seigniorage of 1 per cent, but the amount to be coined in any year to be not less than $5,000,000. Since that time she has coined some 16,000,000 British dollars, and the suggestion was made that they be made tender in Great Britain to the amount to which silver should be made a legal tender, and at the nominal value of 4 shillings. With a coinage value of 4 shillings 4 pence, if the parity was maintained, they would never be presented, and the value of this concession would be sentimental, but go far to establish confidence in the coin in the Straits Settlements, where they would circulate.

These two suggestions, the Huskisson plan and the one I have just stated, were made at the solicitation and request of certain gentlemen on the other side of the water who believed these contributions to the plan to be valuable. The other contributions of which we have heard so much were by no means new. The suggestion of the holding of one-fifth of the reserve in the issue department of the Bank of England in silver was passed upon favorably long ago. As everybody knows, the permission to so apportion it was included in the charter of 1844, and as far back as the conference of 1881, when there seemed some prospect of our reaching an international agreement, our minister to London, then Mr. Lowell, inquired of the English Government whether or not, as a contribution to an international bimetallic agreement, England would consent to put one-fifth of her reserve in the coin and bullion department of the bank in silver, and Lord Granville wrote to the authorities of the Bank of England and received an affirmative answer—that they would make this contribution.

As Mr. Lowell had not made the inquiry at the request of our Government, a report was not made upon it, but later on the ambassador of Italy in London renewed the request of the English Government and received the formal answer which is published in the proceedings of the conference of 1881, expressing the willingness of the Bank of England to make this contribution toward an international settlement of the question. All the gold members, every one of them, of the gold and silver commission of 1886, which made its report in 1888, reported that this concession ought to be made and could be made, and in December, 1891, Mr. Goschen, a member of the present cabinet and then chancellor of the exchequer, in a speech before the Chamber of Commerce of London, declared that the policy of keeping one-fifth of the reserve of the issue department of the Bank of England in silver ought to be carried out.

The other contribution, Mr. President, the calling in of the 10-shilling gold pieces and issuing silver in their place, would have provided for some £23,000,000 worth of silver, a material contribution to the further and enlarged use of silver.

The other suggestion was as to the 20-shilling notes. Both of those suggestions were recommended in terms in 1888 in the report of the gold and silver commission of 1886 as a concession which should be made if any attempt were made internationally to settle the silver question by the inauguration of a bimetallic system, and the 20-shilling notes were specifically recommended by Mr. Goschen.

Thus, Mr. President, speaking very briefly and very hastily, I have covered the other suggestions that were made to the English Government when we were requested to indicate what contributions England could make. All other proposals, however, were of infinitely small importance compared with that respecting the reopening of the mints of India to the unlimited coinage of silver and the repeal of the order permitting gold to be paid for Government dues and to be exchanged for Government rupees.

This great dependency has a population of 290,000,000 people for centuries accustomed to measure all other values by silver.

Since the days of the Mogul dynasties, I think, she has known no other standard but silver. Again and again attempts have been made to put gold into India. The mohur, the exact weight of the rupee, but a gold coin, and worth fifteen times as much, has been made legal tender and been authorized by law to be received in payment of Government dues, but it never passed into circulation. Another gold coin, known as the pagoda, worth about $1.75, but differing in value in the different provinces of India, has been sought to be introduced, but was invariably refused general circulation. Up to 1835 each separate province in India issued its own silver rupees, of varying weight and fineness, and in 1835 a law was enacted providing that the Madras rupee, the present rupee, should be the standard and destroying the legal-tender quality of gold.

Later gold was, by order in council, made tender to the equivalent of 10 rupees, but nothing apparently was done about it. It was never acted upon. But silver was the invariable standard in India until June 26, 1893, when the mints of India were closed to the coinage of silver, in accordance with the recommendation of the commission known as Lord Herschell's commission.

There is estimated to be in India silver to the enormous amount of upward of seventeen hundred and fifty million ounces. Of this there is coined into rupees and in circulation as money about 570,000,000 ounces. There is coined into rupees and hoarded about 150,000,000 ounces. There is in bullion, hoarded, and in bangles and other ornaments, easily convertible into bullion, more than one thousand million ounces.

Contemporaneously with the closing of the India mints an order was made providing that sovereigns and half sovereigns of current weight should be received at all the treasuries of British India and its dependencies in payment of sums due to the Government and in exchange for Government rupees as the equivalent of 15 rupees and of 7 rupees and 8 annas, respectively. This announcement was accompanied by a public statement of the viceroy that it was intended to introduce a gold standard into India, but that gold would not be made a legal tender for the present.

The effect of this action, of course, was to limit the maximum value of the rupee, measured by gold, to 1 shilling and 4 pence, (1/4) and practically to attempt to declare the ratio between gold and silver in India to be 1 to 22 and a fraction; a ratio which was nearly, but not quite, maintained from the date of the closing of the India mints until last week, when India exchange was quoted at 16½ pence. I hope at a later time to be able to discuss in the Senate the effect of this action of India upon the possible future action of the United States, and also the remarkable action which the Chamber of Commerce of the Straits Settlements took last month in petitioning the English Government to give them an entirely different ratio; to put them upon a gold basis and give them gold pieces of one-tenth the value of the sovereign—50 cents—and make it the equivalent of the silver dollar. But to-day I do not care to go into that branch of the question.

There was both in England and in India bitter opposition to the closing of the India mints not only from bimetallists, but from merchants, bankers, and others having relations with that country. The measure was declared by some authorities to be temporary and grave doubts were expressed on every side as to the wisdom of the policy. There has ever since been a widespread impression that the India Government would be glad to retrace its steps. Many English gold monometallists of wide influence believe the policy to have been a mistaken one and would be glad to see the India mints reopened, if it could be done without stimulating the cause of bimetallism and as a separate and distinct action. There was a general opinion, not limited to England, that the India Government would be quick to avail itself of an opportunity to reopen its mints and would welcome any international attempt toward bimetallism that would raise the value of silver, and would be glad to cooperate in such an attempt.

This belief found expression in the speech of the chancellor of the exchequer of March 17, and I am sure that I violate no confidence when I say that the answer of the India Government protesting against reopening India mints was as much a surprise to the English ministry as it was a disappointment to us. While the protest was not final and while the English Government in London could have overruled the objections from India, yet such action would have been contrary to all precedent. As a matter of fact, the home Government, it is said, unanimously upheld the report.

Frequent statements in our papers assert that the answer of India was dictated from London. It may be that the blind and unreasoning fury of the city of London directed against any suggestion of contributions or concessions to an international settlement of the currency question which should recognize silver, and which threatened a panic and the overthrow of any ministry which attempted it, may have rendered the reply of the India Government not wholly unwelcome; but the policy outlined in the letter of September 16, signed by the viceroy and his associates, must stand as the deliberate and uninfluenced judgment of that Government.

To us the India situation is inexplicable. Millions of people, most of them extremely poor, have for years invested all their savings in silver. These accumulations a few years ago were worth a thousand millions of dollars and more. To-day they are worth less than half that sum. By the closing of the India mints and the artificial gold value given to silver, India is at a great disadvantage with the neighboring countries, the exports of which are stimulated by the higher premium on gold, and they are robbing India of much of her manufacturing and export trade. The present policy inflicts upon India as well the evils of an insufficient and steadily lessening currency, evils which the vicissitudes of that dependency during the last twelve months have served to emphasize.

The world has heard much of the famine in India and of the great funds subscribed for its victims. It has not been, however, so generally known that the famine was one of money rather than food; that the contributions were chiefly forwarded to India in the form of money and not grain, and that during the whole period of the famine rice was abundant where men were starving, and its price was but a trifle over a cent a pound, less than the price of wheat in England. For all these evils, the loss in the value of the savings of the people, the disadvantage of a different purchasing value for silver in India from that which prevailed in China, the evils of an insufficient volume of money, and the enormous injury which commerce suffers through violent fluctuations in the rate of exchange, we offered what we believed to be a remedy. Our offer was refused, and the refusal must be considered as final until the failure of the experiment upon which the India Government has entered shall be demonstrated.

The English ministers have published, of their own motion, the résumé of the interviews which were held in London, and with it the correspondence between the home and India Government. I shall ask to append a copy of this résumé to these remarks. The story of our English negotiations is not wholly told in this publication, but it covers them generally.

There was one oversight in communicating the so-called proposals to the India Government. It was distinctly understood at all our interviews to be a condition of the assent of any country to an agreement that it should be entirely satisfied that the plan proposed, because of the adhesion of a sufficient number of other nations, or otherwise, would secure the maintenance of the parity proposed. Had this been fully understood it is possible, though not probable, that a somewhat different answer would have been returned from India.

Any statement respecting our negotiations would be incomplete if it contained no reference to the unusual and largely unforeseen obstacles we encountered.

First among these came the remarkable drop in the price of silver, which fell between March and September from 64 cents per ounce to 51.7 cents, and fluctuated violently during a still longer period. Nothing could from the point of view of sentiment have so discredited our attempts to restore silver to its old pedestal as this extraordinary decline in its bullion value; and it was but little compensation to us to know that the fall came chiefly through the action of the smelters of the United States, who became apprehensive and, contrary to custom, sold not only their stock of bullion on hand, but sold also for thirty and sixty days delivery. It was wildly charged that there was a conspiracy to lower the price of silver, but a reasonably careful investigation puts the responsibility for the unusual decline at the door of our own smelters, aided perhaps by a small pool in New York which helped depress the price.

It was also unfortunate that coincident with our negotiations tariff legislation in the United States was necessary. We steadily declined to discuss bimetallism and tariff together, or to make one in the least degree dependent on the other. The French ministry did not attempt to make the one control the other, and every civilized nation recognizes that the question of tariffs is one to be determined exclusively by the country imposing the duty. Future negotiations, however, respecting bimetallism must to a certain extent take account of tariffs. Radical tariff changes the effect of which is to destroy the industries of a friendly nation breed hostility and ill feeling, and an alliance that would ordinarily be welcomed becomes unpopular and undesirable.

While we were in France, during the very period of our negotiations, such really unimportant but frictional enactments as those imposing a duty on works of art and limiting the free luggage of a passenger returning from Europe to $100 in value, both of which bear heavily and almost exclusively upon French artists and French merchants, were ingrafted upon our tariff laws, causing no end of complaint; and had legislative action in France been necessary in the line of our negotiations, it would have been made evident that certain of our tariff provisions had strained somewhat the traditional friendship between these two nations.

We were advised also that there was much ill feeling in Germany growing out of certain of our tariff changes. It is not the amount of duty imposed, but it is the sudden and radical changes in tariff laws which stir unfriendly feeling. In what I have said as to the effect of tariff changes upon the sentiments of foreign nations toward us I desire to exclude Great Britain. That is the one country where sentiment plays not the slightest part. Her adoption or rejection of a proposed international policy is always dependent on whether English interests, intelligently and selfishly considered, would be the gainer or the loser thereby. No other country has the right to find fault with this course, which seeks always the main chance, knows no traditions of friendship or of enmity, and looks only to England's gain, and it is worth something to any country dealing with her to be under no sense of obligation.

We were also somewhat embarrassed by the statements of representatives of New York bankers in England, who sought access to English officials and assured them that any sentiment which had formerly existed in the United States in favor of bimetallism was dead; that the mission was sent solely as a sop to a few far-Western Republicans; that the country generally favored the gold standard, and that the President of the United States shared this view. The statements were untrue, of course, but in support of them these people assumed to present interviews and statements of the Director of the Mint, a hold-over from the last Administration, the late Comptroller of the Currency, an equally precious legacy, now out of the public service and translated to a Chicago bank, and pretended statements in letters and interviews from the Secretary of the Treasury, to the effect that there was no chance for international or other bimetallism and favoring the permanent adoption of the gold standard.

Nobody in Europe cared a rap what the two minor prophets thought or said, as nobody in this country cares, but the alleged statements of the Secretary of the Treasury were a different matter. We insisted that the letters must be forgeries and the interviews fictitious, and I trust they were, for it was inconceivable that a member of the Cabinet would seek to undermine the efforts of a mission appointed by the President and whose efforts he was cordially and zealously seconding.

We were also attacked from time to time by statements from extremists in the other direction, insisting that our efforts were sham and pretended; that we had no hope or expectation of success; that the President was secretly opposing us; that it was a disgrace to our country that we were permitted to invite other countries to join us in open mints; that it was humiliating that we were even consulting any other country on the subject; that failure was inevitable, and the sooner we came home the better. It was a new and somewhat ludicrous view of the silver question that made it humiliating that this country should invite other countries like France to join us in open mints, or that made it unimportant to ascertain the attitude of India, with her thousand million ounces of silver in bullion and ornaments changing hands in the bazaars at bullion value, and her 570,000,000 ounces of silver in silver coins doing duty at the ratio of about 22 to 1.

This attitude was by no means universal, and I beg to make especial exception of the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], chairman of his party's national committee, who, from the first suggestion of an effort to secure an international agreement, while not believing it feasible, has ever lent the project all possible support, and sought only to strengthen the hands of the mission. It is unfortunately true, however, that the bitterness of the last campaign so blinded the vision of many men that the thing they believed to be impossible they came to hope would be impossible.

All of these occurrences, however, disturbing as they were, did not probably affect the outcome, so far as there has been up to this time an outcome of the negotiations.

Upon receipt of the formal answer from Great Britain we returned home, after having first proceeded to Paris, where we consulted at length with the French premier, M. Méline.

This, Mr. President, in brief, is the statement of our negotiations up to this point. The situation summarized is about this:

England finally and explicitly refuses to open English mints to silver or to alter her existing gold standard. She declines to open India mints to the coinage of silver, basing her refusal specifically, first, upon the lack of certainty that France and the United States could together maintain the parity between gold and silver at the ratio suggested, and, second, upon the proposed ratio of 15½ to 1. We are invited to make any further proposals which shall take into consideration these objections, but it is apparent that for the time being it is useless to count on any cooperation from Great Britain towards a bimetallic agreement.

France actively desires to see silver restored to its old position as a standard of value equally with gold. She insists, however, that the problem is one which demands international action and the cooperation to some adequate extent of other leading commercial nations of the world. Questions of possible future negotiations between France, the United States, and other countries and the question of change of ratio are for the moment held in abeyance. While we hope for continued joint action, France owes no further duty to us. She stood shoulder to shoulder with us in our attempt to secure from England even the concessions she voluntarily offered a few months ago.

In days when the influence of the money lender is potent in almost every capital of the world and dominates courts and national policies the ministry of France stood fearlessly by the interests of the whole people and counted the welfare of its hundreds of thousands of small holders of land dependent for their existence upon the fruits of the soil as paramount to that of the powerful class, which wants money dear and grain cheap. Whatever may be the final outcome of an effort through methods of diplomacy to secure some international action in favor of silver, the people of these United States will always remember gratefully the attitude of France upon this great question.

It is my sincere conviction that an international bimetallic agreement is still feasible, by the terms of which certain countries will join us and open their mints to the unlimited coinage of silver, and others will contribute to the plan an enlarged use of that metal as money; and I say this the more freely because I shall give way upon the commission to somebody more fitted for such negotiations and better able to give them his constant time. This result can not be brought about without the expenditure of both time and patience, and the persons intrusted with the duty of negotiation must have back of them the hearty support of the President and of Congress.

It may also be necessary, in my opinion, to make concessions in the ratio, bringing it somewhere in the neighborhood of 20 to 1, more nearly approximating the ratios recognized by Russia, Austria, and India. There are many countries unvisited where there is a strong bimetallic sentiment, and which would undoubtedly cooperate in some fair plan. The Right Hon. Leonard Courtney, in a recent speech, stated that it was reported that the German Emperor had said he was extremely sorry and disappointed to hear that the India Government would not reopen India mints. I trust this may be true, and, in any event, there are many promising fields as yet untrodden, and many avenues through which we may hope for success.

The cause of bimetallism is not dead in Europe. It is a living, vital, and growing force. Wherever the possession of land is accompanied by the possession of intelligence you find a bimetallist, and in countries where rank and ancient lineage are still associated with ancestral holdings, devotion to the principles of bimetallism is not yet discreditable, nor are its advocates classed as clods or cranks.

Here, Mr. President, I should naturally end this account of our negotiations, negotiations which are still pending and undetermined. The extraordinary statements, however, lately made by the Secretary of the Treasury, and which, unexplained, must seriously affect the future of any further attempts toward securing international action, require some reference at this time.

When Congress convened on the 6th of last month, the President, in his references to the subject of international bimetallism, spoke earnestly and anxiously of his desire to see an international bimetallic agreement consummated. His assurances gave renewed hope to bimetallists all over the country, and seemed final and conclusive answer to those who had claimed that the President was not in earnest in his efforts toward international bimetallism. For myself, I needed no such proof. I had again and again been made to know how genuine was the President's devotion to this settlement of the vexed question. Within a fortnight after this, with no event meanwhile which would change existing conditions, the Secretary of the Treasury, in support of a bill which he has prepared respecting the currency, said as follows to a committee of Congress:

> The objects I have in mind in the series of provisions offered by me are four in number:
> 1. To commit the country more thoroughly to the gold standard, remove, so far as possible, all doubts and fears on that point, and thus strengthen the credit of the United States both at home and abroad.

The two statements are utterly at variance and contradictory to each other. They can not be reconciled. This is not the proper occasion to analyze the bill of the Secretary. It will reach limbo long before it reaches the Senate. He proposes to capitalize the premium on our bonds sold recently and to make them, with others to be issued, a security definitely payable in gold.

The Secretary forgets that only a few months ago, when the country was in dire distress, we were compelled to pay nine millions of dollars for the privilege of keeping the word "gold" out of some of these very bonds. He ought not to forget, for the bank of which he was president, it was said, got some of the bonds and received some of the proceeds of that deplorable transaction. But I do not intend to discuss the bill, which the President's message specifically does not indorse, and it is premature to criticise the Secretary's Republicanism, for his advent into the party and the Cabinet were practically contemporaneous. We must accept the situation.

In my opinion, the great majority of the members of the Republican party are bimetallists, and the fact that they are misrepresented by a Cabinet officer is not pleasing, but it is endurable. The selection of the members of his official household is the President's own affair; and so long as he stands upon the question of bimetallism where he has ever stood, there is no serious ground for apprehension. But even in the inconceivable event that the Chief Magistrate of this people should in the exercise of his judgment determine to countenance the final fastening upon this country of the burdens of the gold standard, I trust we may still find warrant for faith and hope in the pledges of the party and the wisdom of its counsels.

We will cross our bridges when we come to them. The time when this country will submit to the final imposition of gold monometallism is far away. Whatever differences of opinion may exist as to the ability of this country to maintain alone the parity between silver and gold, there is no question that the concurrence of other nations would help and not hinder the cause of bimetallism in the United States, and efforts to secure it ought to receive the cordial support of every citizen who is opposed to gold monometallism.

International bimetallism is not a myth, a chimera. The people of Europe are, even as we are, struggling to keep their heads above water and seeking blindly for that which may make for prosperity and for progress. The evils of falling prices and dearer gold bring poverty and disaster to them as to us. It is said that the influence of money grows year after year. So also does the influence of those great masses who toil from dawn till dark upon soil which God made rich and the unwise laws of man make profitless.

With useless endeavor
Forever, forever,
Is Sisyphus rolling
His stone up the mountain!

And every year of added burdens and lessened prices swells the ranks of those who refuse longer to believe that overproduction, cheaper transportation, and labor-saving inventions, can account for the steady decline in values since the mints were closed, nearly a quarter of a century ago. Dollar wheat is dollar wheat the world over; but it does not tell the same story in France and Germany, where drought and flood have left only starvation in their wake, that it does here where the misfortunes of the Old World have brought prosperity to the New.

Much of the recent legislation in Europe looking to the increase of gold holdings, and the depreciation of silver, finds its origin in the exigencies of a situation where readiness for war is the paramount necessity. There is hardly a statesman in Europe who believes the last word has yet been said upon the question of the remonetization of silver, and hardly one who would not welcome an effort to settle the question internationally. Only a few days ago, just before Christmas, in a debate in the French Chamber, M. Méline again declared from the Tribune that the French Government was at one with the United States on the question of bimetallism!

In the face of such a declaration it is as cowardly to abandon hope as it is false to talk about failure. International bimetallism is to the gold monometallist a stumbling block, and to the silver monometallist foolishness, but it is nevertheless a splendid possibility. Its accomplishment would be the greatest blessing that could befall our people, and to achieve it we might well afford to sink for the time the hostilities of party and the bickerings of faction. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

APPENDIX.

CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING THE PROPOSALS ON CURRENCY MADE BY THE SPECIAL ENVOYS FROM THE UNITED STATES.

[Presented to both Houses of Parliament by command of Her Majesty, October, 1897.]

No. 1.—Foreign office to treasury.

FOREIGN OFFICE, July 27, 1897.

SIR: I am directed by the Marquess of Salisbury to inform you that a meeting took place at the foreign office on the 15th instant, which was attended by his lordship, Mr. Balfour, Sir M. Hicks Beach, Lord George Hamilton, the French ambassador, the French minister (M. Geoffray), the American ambassador, and Messrs. Wolcott, Paine, and Stevenson.

The following proposals were made by Senator Wolcott:

1. The opening of the Indian mints, and the repeal of the order making the sovereign legal tender in India.

2. The placing of one-fifth of the bullion in the issue department of the Bank of England in silver.

3. (a) The raising of the legal-tender limit of silver to, say, £10.

(b) The issue of 20-shilling notes based on silver which shall be legal tender.

(c) The retirement, gradual or otherwise, of the 10-shilling gold pieces, and substitution of paper based on silver.

4. An agreement to coin annually £—— of silver.

Present silver coinage average for five years about £1,000,000, less annual withdrawal of worn and defaced coin for recoinage about £350,000.

Alternative proposal.—4. Agreement to purchase each year £—— in silver at coinage value.

5. The opening of English mints to the coinage of rupees and of a British dollar, which shall be full tender in Straits Settlements and other silver-standard colonies, and tender in United Kingdom to the limit of silver legal tender.

6. Action by the colonies and coinage of silver in Egypt.

7. Something having the general scope of the Huskisson plan.

I am, etc.,

GEORGE N. CURZON.

No. 2.—Treasury to India office.

TREASURY CHAMBERS, August 2, 1897.

SIR: I am directed by the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's treasury to request you to lay before the Secretary of State for India in council the inclosed copy of a letter, dated the 27th ultimo,* which has been received from the foreign office, embodying the currency proposals which have been made to Her Majesty's Government by the special envoys from the United States, and which are supported by the ambassador of France.

It will be seen that among the proposals is one for reopening the Indian mints to the free coinage of silver and the repeal of the order making the sovereign legal tender in India. My Lords regard this as the most important of the proposals which they are invited to consider. The question which it raises involves serious issues in India, and before expressing any opinion on it themselves they will be glad to learn the views of the Secretary of State and of the Government of India.

I have, etc.,

E. W. HAMILTON.

No. 3.—Foreign office to treasury.

FOREIGN OFFICE, August 5, 1897.

SIR: With reference to the letter from this department of the 27th ultimo, I am directed by the Marquess of Salisbury to transmit herewith, to be laid before the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's treasury, copies of printed memoranda of the meetings held at the foreign office on the 12th and 15th July, at which the special envoys of the United States submitted the proposals of their Government with regard to currency.

Lord Salisbury would be glad to be favored with the views of the Lords Commissioners upon these proposals.

I am, etc.,

F. H. VILLIERS.

[Inclosure 1 in No. 3.]

Memorandum of a meeting held at the foreign office on Monday, July 12, 1897.

Present: The Marquess of Salisbury, Her Majesty's Prime Minister and Secretary of State for foreign affairs; the Right Hon. Lord George Hamilton, Secretary of State for India; the Right Hon. Arthur James Balfour, First Lord of the Treasury; the Right Hon. Sir Michael Hicks Beach, Chancellor of the Exchequer; his excellency the Hon. John Hay, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States; the Hon. Edward O. Wolcott, Gen. Charles J. Paine, the Hon. Adlai E. Stevenson, envoys of the United States on special mission.

Lord Salisbury invited a statement from the representatives of the United States as to the nature of their mission, whereupon Mr. Wolcott, on behalf of the special envoys, recited the essential provisions of the law under which he and his colleagues had been appointed, and explained the objects of their mission. He said, also, in substance, that the special envoys had determined that it was important to ascertain, as definitely as possible, in advance of an international bimetallic conference, if one should be called, the views of the governments which might participate therein, and the extent to which they would contribute to bring about a favorable result of such conference.

Mr. Wolcott explained that the special envoys had determined in the first instance to ascertain the views of the French, English, and German Governments on the question of reaching an international agreement respecting bimetallism. This determination was based upon the resolutions heretofore passed by the English House of Commons on the 17th of March, 1896, by the Prussian Landtag and Herrenhaus on the 16th and 21st of May, 1896, and upon the resolution proposed in the French Chamber of Deputies by M. Méline on the 17th of March, 1897, and signed by 347 of his colleagues, all of which resolutions Mr. Wolcott read.

Mr. Wolcott said that the special envoys had proceeded first to France, and that they had reached a complete and satisfactory preliminary understanding with the Government of that country; that in the negotiations to be carried on in England the special envoys believed they would have the full cooperation of the ambassador of the French Republic in London, His Excellency Baron de Courcel; that the French ambassador was, for the moment, absent from England, and that the special envoys of the United States would have asked a postponement of the meeting had it not been for the fact that the French ambassador had requested them to proceed with the meeting in his absence.

Mr. Wolcott then presented some reasons which, in the opinion of the special envoys, rendered it desirable that some international agreement for the restoration of bimetallism should be reached, and explained why, in their opinion, the success of this effort depended upon the attitude which England would take regarding the question. He then stated that the special envoys requested that England should agree to open English mints as its contribution to an attempt to restore bimetallism by international agreement, and dwelt upon the importance of the fact that France and the United States were together engaged in an attempt to bring about such an agreement, and were cooperating together to that end.

Lord Salisbury desired to know if the French Government would cooperate upon the basis of opening their mints to the free and unlimited coinage of silver. Mr. Wolcott answered in the affirmative. Lord Salisbury then asked at what ratio, and was informed by Mr. Wolcott that the French Government preferred the ratio of 15½ to 1, and that the United States were inclined to yield this point and accept this as a proper ratio. Considerable discussion on the question of the ratio and the method by which it should be settled then took place, the special envoys taking the ground that the countries which opened their mints should among themselves determine the ratio. The Chancellor of the Exchequer suggested that if Indian mints were to be opened, England might be held to be interested in the ratio, but the special envoys did not accede to this view, and called attention to the fact that by opening Indian mints the English Government did not thereby adopt bimetallism in any form.

It was then suggested that further proceedings should be deferred until the French ambassador might be also present.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer, in further conversation, said that if the suggestion of opening the English mints was to be made he thought an answer in the negative would undoubtedly be given. The First Lord of the Treasury asked whether, assuming this request for opening English mints to be refused, it was desired that the subject be discussed upon the basis of something different and less than the opening of English mints.

Upon a mutual understanding that in the absence of the French Ambassador anything said should be considered as said informally, a discussion then took place as to the concessions that England might make toward an international solution of the question, if it should refuse to open English mints.

Mr. Wolcott, for the special envoys, presented the following as a list of contributions which, among others, England might make toward bimetallism if an international agreement could be effected:

1. Opening of the Indian mints.
Repeal of the order making the sovereign legal tender in India.

2. Placing one-fifth of the bullion in the issue department of the Bank of England in silver.

3. (a) Raising the legal-tender limit of silver to, say, £10.

(b) Issuing the 20-shilling notes based on silver, which shall be legal tender.

(c) Retirement, gradual or otherwise, of the 10-shilling gold pieces, and substitution of paper based on silver.

4. Agreement to coin annually £—— of silver (present silver coinage average for five years about £1,000,000, less annual withdrawal of worn and defaced coin for recoinage, £350,000).

5. Opening of English mints to coinage of rupees, and for coinage of British dollar, which shall be full tender in Straits Settlements and other silver-standard colonies and tender in the United Kingdom to the limit of silver legal tender.

6. Colonial action, and coinage of silver in Egypt.

7. Something having the general scope of the Huskisson plan.

Some general conversation followed in regard to the preceding suggestions, and the interview terminated, to be resumed on the 15th July, 1897, when it was understood that the French ambassador would also be present.

Present: The Marquess of Salisbury, Her Majesty's Prime Minister and Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs; the Right Hon. Lord George Hamilton, Secretary of State for India; the Right Hon. Republic; M. L. Geoffray, French Minister Plenipotentiary; his excellency the Hon. John Hay, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States; the Hon. Edward O. Wolcott, Gen. Charles J. Paine, the Hon. Adlai E. Stevenson, envoys of the United States on special mission.

The French ambassador was invited to declare the position of the French Government upon the question under consideration, and said in substance the following:

"Senator Wolcott having asked me to state precisely the point of view of the French Government in the question which engages us, I shall attempt, despite my slight personal competence, to make clear the considerations which have led my Government to associate itself in the actual negotiation.

"I should first of all recall the fact that the French monetary system, as it was established at the end of the last century and at the beginning of the present century, is based upon the simultaneous employment of gold and silver, of which the legal ratio has been fixed at 15½. This ratio has not been arbitrarily conceived.

"The men of great scientific worth who recommended it to the adoption of the legislative power had made long and careful preliminary investigations, and they reached the conclusion that the figure of 15½ represented the average and in some degree normal and natural ratio of the value of the two precious metals, such as resulted from universal use from an early period; that is to say, almost since the epoch of the discovery of America and the great economic renaissance of the sixteenth century.

"The legal system established in France upon this basis has operated for a long time in a manner fully satisfactory to the French nation. But for about twenty years this system has been disturbed by different causes which I will not undertake to enumerate here, because I should be afraid of doing it in an incomplete or insufficiently exact manner.

"One of these causes is doubtless the superabundant production of silver. However that may be, a disturbance has been produced, the former normal ratio of the value of gold and silver has been put in question, and there has resulted therefrom an unrest almost universal. This unrest has been more or less profoundly felt by the different nations. Perhaps England is less sensitive thereto than we are in France; but I am persuaded that she does not escape it, at least if the position of the British Empire in its entirety is considered, with all its dependencies—notably that very considerable dependency, India.

"Even in England it is incontestable that the agricultural classes complain of the depreciation of silver, and that more and more numerous voices demand that a remedy be applied to a monetary situation actually inadequate.

"In France we have been led to fight the evil by the closing of our mints to the silver metal; that is to say, by the temporary suspension of the coinage of silver. But this measure is only a palliative, and it is itself the symptom of a disturbed situation. We cease, in fact, to coin a money of which we do not cease to have need, and which has preserved its entire legal value. This paradox naturally does harm. Our population, notably the agricultural population, finds that it has not at its disposition sufficient resources in currency, in metallic money. On the other hand, if the Government in the actual state of affairs reopens the mints to the free coinage of silver, we would be flooded by the abundance of this metal coming from all other countries of the world, and we could not resist the even greater evil of the inevitable depreciation of one of our precious metals; that is to say, of the effective destruction of the legal ratio upon which our monetary system is based.

"We are persuaded that the state of affairs which has caused among us this very disadvantageous perturbation is in itself a temporary remedial phenomenon, and that it is only a question of remedying it by temporary measures which will permit us, and which will permit the entire world with us, to attain the epoch of a reestablishment of a normal exchange. In other words, we think that the production of silver, more active in certain quarters of the globe in the last quarter of a century, is not of itself considerable enough to change in an enduring manner the normal ratio between gold and silver after these two metals will have been scattered over the entire surface of the world among all nations who are called upon to absorb them.

"There is, then, in our eyes, a need which is perhaps transitory, but which is actually common to all the commercial nations, of taking measures adequate for assuring, by a common understanding, the reestablishment of the normal ratio of 15½ between silver and gold.

"If measures of this kind should be adopted by all the commercial nations, we would be able to reopen our mints to the free coinage of silver without fear of being submerged by an excessive influx of this metal.

"The reopening of the mints of all the commercial countries to the free coinage of silver in the ratio of 15½ with gold would be the most natural and the most efficacious means of arriving at the result sought for. This is the desideratum which I am instructed to bring forward here, and which I am particularly to urge upon the English Government as a primordial condition of the success of the common understanding.

"If the Government of the Queen, even in consenting to reopen the mints in India, should refuse to adopt the same measure for England, at least would they not be able to take certain measures which would be, up to a certain point, equivalent, in order to maintain the full value of silver, and to prevent India from being the victim of a depreciation of this metal in consequence of an unlimited coinage? It is not within the province of representatives of France to search out or to formulate these equivalent measures which it is in the interest of England itself to take, and the choice of which should belong to it.

"But in default of measures of this kind, which should be really sufficient to contribute to the maintenance of the nominal value of silver, the French Government would not consider the reopening of the mints of India alone as a guarantee sufficient to permit them to reopen the French mints to the free coinage of silver.

"By way of suggestion, I would indicate, as one of the measures which the English Government might usefully adopt, the annual purchase of a certain quantity of silver metal, which might afterwards be disposed of as seemed best—either it might be preserved in ingots, or it might be used for regular consumption, or it might be sent to India.

"This quantity might be fixed approximately, at least for a number of years, at a sum of £10,000,000 in nominal value. This is, perhaps, only a palliative. It is, in any event, only one of the expedients which would be deemed necessary. But I am to urge strongly that the English Government determine to take measures of this kind or other equivalent measures if, as I believe, it recognizes with us the necessity of improving the monetary situation in a great part of its empire—I may say, in a great part of the entire world."

Lord Salisbury then asked whether the French Government would decline to open its mints unless England would also open her mints. The French ambassador replied that he preferred to discuss the subject upon the basis that France would go to open mints if England would consent to open her mints, but that he would not exclude from his view the question of contributions by England toward maintaining the value of silver, short of open mints. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, in response to this, stated definitely that the English Government would not agree to open English mints to the unlimited coinage of silver, and that, whatever views he and his colleagues might separately hold on the question of bimetallism, he thought he could say they were united upon this point.

The French Ambassador, upon being asked what contributions he suggested, replied that among other contributions he thought England should open her Indian mints, and should also agree to purchase annually, say, £10,000,000 of silver for a series of years.

The suggestions made by the special envoys at the interview on the 12th July were again read, and the special envoys accepted also as important and desirable the proposal that the English Government should purchase annually, say, £10,000,000 of silver, with proper safeguards and provisions as to the place and manner of its use.

The French Ambassador expressed his approval generally of the suggestions of the special envoys as being serviceable in the consideration of the question. It was then understood that the proposals submitted by the French Ambassador and by the special envoys of the United States should be considered and due notice given when a reply could be made.

Lord Salisbury requested Mr. Wolcott to prepare a résumé of the proceedings of this and the preceding meeting.

No. 4.—India office to government of India.

INDIA OFFICE, August 5, 1897.

MY LORD: Your excellency is aware that special envoys from the United States and the Ambassador of France have had interviews with members of Her Majesty's Government in order to discuss the subject of currency reform, in which the Governments of both those countries are at present much interested.

2. The result of those discussions is that Her Majesty's Government have been asked whether, on certain conditions, the question of reopening the Indian mints, which have been closed since 1893, would be taken into consideration.

3. Her Majesty's Government understand that the Governments of France and of the United States desire to open their mints to the free coining of silver, as well as of gold, such silver to be made legal tender to an unlimited amount at a ratio of 15½ of silver to 1 of gold, provided that they are satisfied they would receive such assistance from other powers in increasing the demand for silver as would, in their opinion, justify them in such a policy. They propose to summon an international conference to deal with the matter, if they are led to believe, by the preliminary inquiry which they are now undertaking, that such a conference would arrive at any satisfactory result; and they ask whether, if their mints were opened as suggested, your excellency's Government would undertake to reopen concurrently the Indian mints to the free coinage of silver, and to repeal the order which made the sovereign legal tender in India.

It would in this case be clearly understood that no action shall be taken by you until you are satisfied that the intentions and undertakings of the two Governments will undoubtedly be carried into effect.

4. Her Majesty's Government have replied that they will consult your excellency's Government upon these proposals, and I invite you accordingly to give them your most careful consideration.

5. It is argued that, on the one hand, very great advantages would be gained for India under an arrangement which could not fail to have the effect of raising materially the gold value of silver, and consequently of the rupee, and which, if it were maintained, would give a good prospect of a more stable ratio, when once the first disturbance was over, than has been known for many years. In that case the heavy loss which is now sustained both by your Government and by all individuals who depend upon a silver currency for the payment of liabilities contracted in gold would, in all likelihood, disappear; and holders of rupee values would benefit greatly by the increased command of sterling values which such a change would necessarily give them.

6. The present system, however great may be the benefits which it has conferred, may appear to be one of artificial and arbitrary restriction, which is thought by some to have an injurious effect on the course of trade, and the fact of its removal would have the advantage of leaving the expansion and contraction of the currency to the natural forces of the market. I believe, morever, that your excellency will agree with me in thinking that the maintenance of the exchange value of the rupee at a point considerably above the intrinsic value of the silver which it contains is not without inconvenience, and that a policy which, without lowering exchange, would restore the rupee to a value practically unmodified by mint regulations has much to recommend it.

7. On the other hand, there are certain objections which will readily occur to your excellency, such as the disturbance and dislocation of trade which might perhaps follow a great alteration in the rate of exchange, and the possibility, however remote, that the value of the rupee, as measured in commodities in India, would be so far enhanced as to cause discontent by increasing seriously the amount payable as taxation.

8. A more serious question, in my opinion, is whether the combination of only two governments, even though the countries which they represent are as important financially as France and the United States, is sufficient to give such a reasonable promise of stability and permanence to an arrangement of this nature as would justify India in facing the undeniable risks and inconveniences attaching to such a change in her system of currency. No doubt, however, the conclusions to be formed on this aspect of the question must in part depend on the terms of the arrangement made between the governments concerned.

9. In conclusion, I will remind your excellency that in 1892 the policy of closing the mints was only recommended by your excellency's predecessor in council on the ground that an international arrangement, similar to that which is now contemplated, was not then obtainable. This is clearly stated in the letters of Lord Lansdowne's Government, dated the 23d March and 21st June, 1892, and I shall be glad to learn whether your excellency sees any reason to modify the views therein expressed, and if so, on what grounds.

10. The question involves issues of such magnitude that I can not ask your excellency to reply to this dispatch without taking such time as you may require for full deliberation and confidential discussion. As, however, it is important that Her Majesty's Government should, as soon as possible, be in a position to give an answer to the French and American representatives, I trust you will at once undertake the consideration of the matter, and that you will let me know your views without any unnecessary delay.

I have, etc.,

GEORGE HAMILTON.

No. 5.—India office to treasury.

INDIA OFFICE, October 13, 1897.

SIR: I am directed by the Secretary of State for India in council to forward, for the information of the Lords Commissioners of the treasury, the inclosed copies of a correspondence which has taken place between his Lordship and the Government of India on the subject of the currency proposals of France and the United States.

2. It will be observed that on the 5th August, Lord George Hamilton invited the Government of India to give their most careful consideration to these proposals, which were to the effect that the Governments of the United States and of France should open their mints to the free coinage of silver, as well as of gold, such silver to be made legal tender to an unlimited amount at the ratio of 15½ of silver to 1 of gold, provided that those Governments were satisfied they would receive such assistance from other powers in increasing the demand for silver as would in their opinion justify them in such a policy.

They proposed to summon an international conference to deal with the matter if they were led to believe, by the preliminary inquiry which they were undertaking, that such a conference would arrive at any satisfactory result, and they asked whether, if their mints were opened as suggested, the Government of India would undertake to reopen concurrently the Indian mints to the free coinage of silver and to repeal the order which made the sovereign legal tender in India.

3. To this dispatch the Government of India have replied in a letter, dated the 16th September, in which, as will be seen, they recommend the rejection of these proposals for reasons which they state at considerable length.*

4. The Government of India have, in consideration of this question, the advantage which local knowledge and daily experience of the working of the present currency system can not fail to give. It is upon them, moreover, that the duty of carrying out the proposed change would necessarily fall; and they would have an interest in its success or failure with which that of no other Government or public body can for a moment be compared. In these circumstances, the Secretary of State in council feels that, apart from all other considerations, he could not act in opposition to the strongly expressed views of the Government of India unless he were convinced that the proposed scheme is intrinsically sound, and that it would confer real and lasting advantages upon the Government and people of India.

5. After most careful consideration Lord George Hamilton has arrived at the conclusion that the scheme does not fulfill those conditions, and that the criticisms of the Government of India upon it are in the main well founded. Those criticisms are so clearly and fully stated in the inclosed letter that he does not feel it necessary to recapitulate or enlarge upon them; there are, however, one or two of their arguments in which he desires more especially to express his concurrence.

6. The first of these relates to the question of the ratio between gold and silver to be adopted in the proposed international agreement. The difference in the market value of the two metals is in the proportion of about 35 to 1, whereas the ratio proposed is 15½ to 1; and his lordship can not avoid the conclusion that the adoption of a ratio differing so widely from that which actually obtains between the two metals at the present time constitutes in itself a most serious, if not insuperable, objection to the proposals under consideration.

7. Lord George Hamilton is also in agreement with the Government of India as to the grave results which any failure of the suggested arrangement would entail upon India. He believes that, owing to the special circumstances of that country and the peculiar nature of the obligations of its Government, those results would be far more disastrous than any which would, in the event of such a failure, be incurred by France and the United States, and he would therefore be unable to consent on the part of India to the proposed experiment unless he were thoroughly convinced that its effects would be not only advantageous but durable.

8. On this point, he regrets to say, he can not profess to be satisfied. Without discussing in detail the reasons which have led the Government of India to conclude that the proposed system could not be regarded as secure, he considers that, taken together, they show that it contains elements of uncertainty and danger which he does not think that the Government of India should be called upon to face in disregard of their own strong conviction as to the peril of the course they are asked to pursue.

9. It has not been suggested, nor is it part of the proposed agreement, that France and the United States should, if the arrangement failed to maintain the desired ratio between gold and silver, become monometallic silver-using countries, nor is it easy to see, even if such an undertaking were offered, how it would be made effective under certain conceivable contingencies. Yet, in the absence of any such safeguard, India has strong reasons for declining to adopt a policy which might end in placing her in the position of a country having a monometallic currency heavily depreciated, and yet unassisted, or at best only slightly assisted, by the currency requirements of the countries upon whose invitation she had taken such action.

10. Lord George Hamilton desires me to say that he is fully conscious of the fact that these proposals, if they were adopted, might have an effect extending far beyond the boundaries of Her Majesty's Indian dominions, with which he is principally concerned. But he does not think it necessary to discuss the subject from that point of view, or to consider whether or upon what conditions it would now be desirable to substitute an international agreement such as was contemplated by the Government of India in 1892 for the policy which was adopted in 1893.

He can only deal with the particular proposals now before him, and, as regards these proposals, he has been unable to avoid the conclusion that they do not satisfy the conditions necessary to justify such a change of policy as has been suggested to him.

11. The Secretary of State in council must therefore record his concurrence in the request of the government of India that Her Majesty's Government will not assent to the undertaking desired by France and the United States.

I have, etc.,

ARTHUR GODLEY.

SIMLA, September 16, 1897.

MY LORD: We have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your Lordship's dispatch of the 5th of August last, asking for our opinion whether the Indian mints may be reopened to silver as part of a contemplated arrangement under which France and the United States of America will open their mints to silver as well as gold.

The present currency systems of the three countries may be thus described: France and the United States both have a gold standard; their mints are open to gold and closed to silver; but gold and silver coins are alike legal tender to an unlimited amount in both countries, at a ratio of 15½ to 1 in the former and of 16 to 1 in the latter. The currency system of India is in a transition state: the government of India in 1893 decided to establish a gold standard, and the first step toward that object was the closing of the mints to silver by Act VIII of 1893. The silver rupee is still the sole legal-tender coin, though the government has by executive orders undertaken to receive gold and sovereigns under certain restrictions set forth in notifications Nos. 2662 and 2663 of the 26th of June, 1893, the rate of exchange adopted being 16 pence the rupee or 15 rupees=1 pound sterling.

The measures to be taken when the transition period has passed have not been laid down, but it is probable that the Indian mints will be opened to gold, and gold coins will be made legal tender to an unlimited amount; silver rupees would also continue to be legal tender to an unlimited amount, and the ratio between the rupee and the gold coins as legal tender would at the same time be finally settled. The system toward which India is moving is thus a gold standard of the same kind as that which now exists in France and the United States, but with a different ratio for legal tender; but for the present the mints are closed both to gold and silver. The transition period has lasted for more than four years, but there is ground for hope that it is now drawing to a close.

The changes which are involved in the arrangements proposed to Her Majesty's Government are the following: France and the United States are to open their mints to the free coinage of silver, continuing the free coinage of gold and the unlimited legal tender of coins of both metals, the ratio remaining unchanged in France and being altered to the French ratio of 15½ to 1 in the United States. India is to open her mints to silver, to keep them closed to gold, and to undertake not to make gold legal tender. France and the United States would thus be bimetallic; India would be monometallic (silver); while most of the other important countries of the world would be monometallic (gold).

The object which the proposers have in view is the establishment of a stable relation between the values of gold and of silver. This would include the establishment of a stable exchange between the rupee and sterling currency, which was the object of the government of India in the proposals made in our financial dispatch of the 21st of June, 1892, which proposals ultimately resulted in the adoption, in view to the attainment of that object, of the policy of a gold standard and in the closing of the mints to the free coinage of silver.

If, then, it were certain that the suggested measures would result in the establishment of a stable ratio, the Government of India might well consider whether their adoption would not be preferable to the policy to which they committed themselves in 1893 in the hope of attaining the same result by isolated action on the part of India alone. The principal questions, therefore, for us to consider are, whether the measures are more likely to succeed than the policy of 1893, and what consequences to India may be apprehended if the measures should fail of success after being brought into operation. From this point of view we propose to discuss the effect on trade and industry, and on our own revenues, of the changes when made, and of the failure of the arrangement, if it should fail, the chances of success and the risks of failure.

The first result of the suggested measures, if they even temporarily succeed in their object, would be an intense disturbance of Indian trade and industry by the sudden rise in the rate of exchange, which, if the ratio adopted were 15½ to 1, would be a rise from about 16 pence to about 23 pence the rupee. Such a rise is enough to kill our export trade, for the time at least. If the public were not convinced that the arrangement would have the effect intended, or believed that it would not be permanent, the paralysis of trade and industry would be prolonged and accompanied by acute individual suffering, none of the advantages expected would be attained, and the country would pass through a critical period which would retard its progress for years.

How long the crisis would last before normal or stable conditions were restored it is not possible to conjecture. It would be long even if the mercantile and banking community saw that silver was being steadily maintained at the prescribed ratio, while any indication of unsteadiness would greatly prolong the period by giving foundation for doubt. If the doubt should happen to be justified by the results, the position would be disastrous alike to the State, to individuals, and to trade generally. The exchange value of the rupee having risen suddenly, without any intermediate steps, from 16 pence to some higher figure, it would fall quite as suddenly to a point far lower than its present level, probably to 9 pence, or even lower. Such a fall would, apart from other disastrous results, necessitate the imposition of additional taxation to the extent of many crores.

We may here remind your Lordship that such an agreement as is proposed is an infinitely more serious question for India than for either of the other two countries, for it seems clear that practically the whole risk of disaster from failure would fall on India alone. What would happen in each of the three countries if the agreement broke down and came to an end? France possesses a large stock of gold, and the United States are at present in much the same situation as France, though the stock of that metal is not so large.

It may be admitted that if no precautions were taken these gold reserves might disappear under the operation of the agreement, and in that case, if the experiment ultimately failed, the two countries concerned would suffer great loss. But it is inconceivable that precautions would not be taken, at all events so soon as the danger of the depletion of the gold reserves manifested itself, and therefore it is probable that no particular change would take place in the monetary system of France or the United States, the only effect of the agreement being a coinage of silver which would terminate with the termination of the agreement. Thus the whole cost of the failure, if the experiment should fail, would be borne by India.

Here the rupee would rise with great swiftness; it would keep steady for a time, and then, when the collapse came, it would fall headlong. What course could we then adopt to prevent the fluctuation of the exchange value of our standard of value with the fluctuations in the price of silver? We do not think that any remedy would be open to us, for if the Indian mints were reopened to silver now it would, in our opinion, be practically impossible for the Government of India ever to close them again, and even if they were closed it would only be after very large additions had been made to the amount of silver in circulation.

There is another important consideration in which India is affected in a manner different from France and the United States. The effect of the scheme will probably be an increase in gold prices (that is, in the prices current in France and in the United States) and a fall in silver prices (that is, in the prices current in India). This is not the place in which to discuss the economic effects of a rise or a fall in prices, a matter in respect of which there may be difference of opinion. But we presume that France and the United States contemplate with equanimity the possible effects of the change of prices upon their trade and production generally, while it is manifestly impossible for us, affected as we are in the opposite direction, to take the same view

Moreover, it seems to us somewhat unfair to expect that India should, after its struggles and difficulties of the last decade, consider itself on the same plane in the discussion of these projects as France and the United States. India has, since 1893, passed through a period of serious tension and embarrassment alike to trade and to the Government. We are satisfied that, great as have been the troubles which have attended this period of transition, the attainment in the end of the paramount object of stability in exchange is worth more than all the sacrifices made. We believe that our difficulties are now nearly over, and that we shall, in the near future, succeed in establishing a stable exchange at 16 pence the rupee by continuing the policy initiated in 1893.

The United States are possibly, in part at least, inspired in making these proposals by the idea that they may have before them some of the difficulties and dangers which we have experienced. We need not say that if our way was clear before us, the consideration that another and a friendly nation would derive benefit from the course adopted by us would present itself to our minds as a good reason for the adoption of a course of action which would have that result. But the case is quite different when, on the eve of emerging with success, by our own unaided efforts, from the monetary disturbances of the last twenty years, we are asked, in view of the benefit to other nations, to throw away the advantages we have gained and plunge into a new period of struggle and change. Only the most absolute certainty of early and permanent success would warrant our acceptance of such a position.

We can not help seeing that if the policy of 1893 is now abandoned and if the triple union now proposed as a substitute should fail in its operation or should terminate, and in its failure subject Indian trade to the violent shocks we have described, the government of India could not, as a responsible government, call upon the commercial public to face another prolonged period of doubt, suspense, agitation, and difficulties. For it must be clearly and fully recognized that if India joins in the proposed measures we shall be left dependent, as the sole means of attaining stability in exchange, on the success of those measures, and that, if they should fail, India must be content to remain permanently under the silver standard with all its admitted disadvantages.

If, then, there is any reasonable doubt of the success of the suggested measures, we are of opinion that we ought to refuse to cooperate, and should maintain our freedom to watch the course of events and take such action from time to time as these may render expedient. A possibility, or even a probability, that the efforts of France and the United States might meet with success would not be enough to justify us in parting with our freedom or doing anything to further an experiment which, if it fails, will entail consequences to the trade and finances of India which must be described, without any exaggeration, as disastrous.

We have given very careful consideration to the question whether France and the United States are likely, with the help of India, to be able to maintain the relative value of gold and silver permanently at the ratio they intend to adopt, and have come to the conclusion that while we admit a possibility of the arrangements proposed resulting in the permanent maintenance of the value of gold and silver at the ratio of 15½ to 1, the probability is that they will fail to secure that result, and that it is quite impossible to hold that there is anything approaching a practical certainty of their doing so.

One reason for this conclusion is that the arrangement would rest on too narrow a basis. A union consisting of two countries, with a third lending assistance, is a very different thing from the general international union of all or most of the important countries of the world which was advocated by the government of India in the dispatches of March and June, 1892, and of February and September, 1886.

To afford a hope that a monetary union will succeed in establishing stability in the relative value of gold and silver, it is essential that the nations adhering to it should be of such number and importance that the metallic currency of the whole body shall be of sufficient extent to allow of the exercise of adequate influence on the value of the two metals.

We doubt whether any two, or even three, nations in the world, unless, indeed, one of them was Great Britain, could comply with this condition, and we have no hesitation in saying that France and the United States and India certainly could not. The intended ratio assigns to coined silver a much higher value than the present market value of silver, and the market value could only be raised by transferring the demand for coinage from gold to silver. But France, the United States, and India all possess a very large stock of silver coin, and it is doubtful whether there is much room in them for a large increase in the silver coinage except by the displacement in France and the United States of the existing gold coins.

It is quite possible that the whole of the gold coinage of both France and the United States might disappear and be replaced by silver coins before the market value of silver was raised to the intended ratio with gold. Whether the Governments of those countries will allow a total displacement of their gold by silver coins and the possible export from the country of the entire stock of gold is, as we explain in paragraphs 6 and 16 of this dispatch, open to more than doubt; and in so far as either enforces measures to prevent gold from being exported, the power of the union, and possibly also its desire, to effect its object will be diminished.

A further doubt occurs to us in the possibility that either France or the United States may, for reasons which will suggest themselves to your lordship, be reduced for a time to a paper currency. In that case, the agreement would cease to operate for an indefinite period under the stress of circumstances. This possibility, though of no importance in the case of a union comprising all the important countries of the world, can not be disregarded when two or three countries only form the union.

Another important source of doubt lies in the consideration that a three-sided agreement is open to much greater risk of termination by the action of one or two of the parties than a many-sided agreement such as the Government of India advocated before 1893. In the latter all the commercial countries would be in the union, and all would be in an equal position; there would be no ground for supposing that the operation of the agreement benefited one country at the expense of another.

There would, therefore, be no substantial inducement for withdrawal from the régime adopted by common consent; the union might, for practical purposes, continue to subsist and to produce its effect even after the dissenting country had withdrawn. On the other hand, in a three-sided agreement such as is now proposed, either France or the United States might any day find some reason for thinking that some other nation was obtaining some advantage at their expense in consequence of the great difference in the standard of value, and thereupon discussions might ensue as to the expediency of terminating the agreement, which would have only a less serious effect than its actual termination.

Another reason for anticipating that the proposed agreement is not likely to succeed will be found in the considerations mentioned in paragraph 6 regarding the improbability of France and the United States allowing their gold reserve to disappear. We attach great importance to these considerations, because we are convinced that they vitally affect the prospects of any agreement being successfully carried out. With the precautions to which we have referred the experiment might be continued, for the risk to the two nations would be very small. But without these precautions, or if they proved to be inadequate for their purpose, i. e., the retention of a sufficient stock of gold, we believe the inducement to abandon the experiment would be very strong, and even if one country adopted that course, it would be impossible to prevent the whole agreement breaking down.

For these reasons alone, without taking into consideration the objections based on the particular ratio proposed, which we shall separately discuss, we have no hesitation in recommending your Lordship to refuse to give the undertaking desired by the Governments of France and the United States. We are quite clearly of opinion that the interests of India demand that her mints shall not be opened as part of an arrangement to which two or three countries only are parties and which does not include Great Britain.

We note that the proposals of the Governments of France and the United States are subject to the proviso that they are satisfied that they will receive assistance from other powers in increasing the demand for silver. We believe that a limited increase of the quantity of silver used as currency will exercise a very trifling influence, if any, in raising the gold price of silver, and that the only assistance from other powers which can be of any real value would be the addition of other countries to the bimetallic union of France and the United States. If, however, assurances of really substantial cooperation should be secured from other countries, we shall be glad to learn the exact nature of the assurances, and we shall then consider whether the promised cooperation changes the conditions of the problem or adds materially to the chances of success.

We believe, however, that whatever inducements are held out to us by other nations, our best policy in monetary matters is to link our system with that of Great Britain. Our commercial connections with that country are far more important than those with all the rest of the world put together, and more than a sixth part of our expenditure is incurred in that country and measured in its currency. The advantages which in this respect we gain by following the lead of Great Britain are not obtained, or not fully obtained, if we become members of a monetary union in which Great Britain takes no part. And, indeed, as we have already explained, we have little hope of an efficient union being formed unless Great Britain is a member.

We think it a reasonable position for us to take with regard to the present proposals by France and the United States that we should say that the government of India strove long and earnestly to further the formation of an international union; that when they saw that the opposition of England rendered impossible the attainment of that object within any measurable time, they temporarily abandoned their efforts in that direction and decided, as the least prejudicial of the courses open to them, to throw in their lot with Great Britain and to adopt the gold standard; that, as it appears improbable that an effective union will be formed without the adhesion of Great Britain, and as the measures adopted to introduce a gold standard in India are now approaching final success, they consider that it will be wisest to adhere to the course adopted in 1893 until Great Britain is prepared to join in international bimetallism, and that they therefore wish to adhere to the same monetary standard as Great Britain, with which nation they are most closely linked both in respect of their commercial relations and in all other respects, and to refrain from becoming a party to arrangements with other nations in which Great Britain sees ample reason for refusing to join.

So far the arguments we have offered in discussing the chances of success or failure of the arrangement have been independent of consideration of the precise ratio proposed by France and United States. We have objected to the arrangement on grounds which apply to it, whatever be the ratio adopted, but we must add that our objections are greatly strengthened by the fact that so high a ratio is proposed as 15½ to 1. It seems to us that the difficulty of making the arrangement effective will be immensely increased by the adoption of a ratio differing so widely from the present market ratio. Indeed, even if it could be maintained successfully, we should object to that ratio in the interests of India, and we recommend that your Lordship should, on behalf of India, decline to participate in or do anything to encourage the formation of a union based on that ratio.

We have said in paragraph 5 that the first result of the proposed arrangement would be an immediate disturbance of trade and industry by the advance of the exchange value of the rupee, which will be very intense if the rise is from between 15 and 16 pence to about 23 pence. There is no doubt that the effect would be to throw some branches of the export trade of India and the industries connected therewith (the planting industries, for example, in which a large amount of European capital has been embarked) into the most depressed condition for some time at least. The period of depression might be long or comparatively short, though there are authorities who are inclined to attribute a permanently disastrous effect to such a large and sudden rise in exchange, and to apprehend that Indian commerce might be utterly shaken by the change.

In any case, we are of opinion that the true interests of India demand that any measures for attaining stability in the rate of exchange between gold and silver should be based upon a rate not greatly differing from 16 pence the rupee, and that any measure which would raise the rupee materially higher than that level involves great dangers, for which we see no adequate compensations. Your lordship will observe that we attach no special importance to the advantages to be derived from the proposed considerable rise in exchange, mentioned in paragraph 5 of your dispatch, and consider them to be far outweighed by the resulting evils.

Pressed as we have been for many years by the difficulty of finding the continually increasing number of rupees requisite to discharge our sterling liabilities, we are apt to look too exclusively at the effect which a rise of exchange would have in diminishing the burden of that demand upon us. We do not deny that a large surplus of revenue will arise from so great an improvement in exchange; but it is not to be forgotten that there are many respects in which our revenue account must directly suffer by a rise in the exchange value of the rupee, and that these considerations ought to greatly influence our estimate of the benefit to our revenue account which is almost the sole advantage which, as a Government, we can expect to obtain from the proposed measures.

The anticipated fall in prices is one that will adversely affect both our revenues and the general condition of the agricultural classes in the country. To take the case of our land revenue, a very large portion of the country has passed under land-revenue settlement during the last ten or fifteen years. One of the factors in fixing the demand of the Government for revenue is the price of agricultural produce. If that price falls away, the heavier the demand becomes, and if it falls away materially the relation between the price that the ryot can obtain for his produce and the assessment he has to meet may be so seriously altered as to affect the agricultural prosperity of large tracts of country.

The work of resettlement is a tedious one; it can not be effected in all probability for some years, and when it is effected it will pro tanto dissipate much of the advantage which the rise of exchange would bring to the Government account.

So, also, as regards our railway revenues, which are now so important a portion of our income. They are in part directly dependent upon the activity of the export trade, and a blow struck at that trade will be felt by us immediately and directly through our railway account.

For these reasons, therefore, in addition to those set forth in the earlier portion of this dispatch, we recommend that the reply to the request of the Governments of France and the United States should be in the negative. We presume that a union based upon a ratio low enough to suit our interests would be unacceptable to France and the United States.

With reference to paragraph 6 of your Lordship's dispatch, we invite attention to the description of the present currency system of India given in paragraph 2 above. There appears to be some misapprehension in the comparison drawn between the arrangement proposed by the United States and France and the "present system" in India.

The present system is, of course, open to the objection that it is one of artificial restriction, but it is essential to bear in mind that it is not a permanent system, or, indeed, a system at all. We are in a transition period, moving from one system to another, and the present artificial restriction is merely a temporary expedient which has for its sole object the acceleration of the movement, and which will cease to exist at the completion of the movement. Thereafter the expansion and contraction of the currency will be left to the natural forces of the market; that is, it will be regulated automatically by the inflow and outflow of gold.

It is true that the system will be open to the other objection stated in paragraph 6 of the dispatch, that the rupee will continue to remain at a value above its metallic value; but—as was pointed out by Lord Herschell's committee—this is an objection which has not made itself seriously felt in the other countries, including France and the United States, in which an analogous system has been in operation for many years. It is not likely that the objection will make itself seriously felt in India when the gold standard has been effectively introduced.

The question really is not one of comparison, as put by your Lordship, between the present temporary expedient in India and the arrangement proposed, but between a gold standard and the proposed arrangement, which involves the abandonment of the policy of a gold standard, adopted in 1893, in favor of reversion to the policy of a silver standard.

In paragraph 9 of the dispatch your Lordship reminds us that "in 1892 the policy of closing the mints was only recommended" by Lord Lansdowne's government "on the ground that an international arrangement, similar to that which is now contemplated, was not then obtainable," and we are asked to say whether we see any reason to modify the views expressed in that sense in the dispatches of the 23rd March and 21st June, 1892.

In reply, we have first to point out that the international arrangement which Lord Lansdowne's Government contemplated is very far from being similar to that which is now proposed. The proposal now under consideration is for a union of two countries only, with some assistance from a third. The international arrangement contemplated in 1892 was a general bimetallic union of all important nations, or, to use the words of the dispatch of the 4th September, 1886, which is referred to in paragraph 2 of dispatch of the 21st June, 1892, as expressing the views held by Lord Lansdowne's Government, "an international agreement for the free coinage of silver and the making of both gold and silver coin a legal tender at a fixed ratio by a group of nations possessed of a metallic currency of sufficient extent to maintain that ratio permanently." We have already stated our opinion that the agreement now proposed does not fulfill the last-named essential condition.

Secondly, circumstances have essentially altered since 1892. Despairing of securing the adoption of any of the measures which they had persistently urged, the Government of India decided to attempt the establishment of a gold standard, and, as the first step, closed the mints to the coinage of silver tendered by the public. If the proposals now made had been made in 1892 or at any time before June, 1893, it is conceivable that the Government of India of that time would have welcomed them as containing a possibility of securing the objects they desired, and would, in order to secure their adoption, have agreed to postpone the closing of the mints and to keep them open for a period sufficient to allow a full trial to the measures of France and the United States, say for five years.

But our position is now very different. The experience of the last three or four years has cleared up many doubts which were present to our predecessors' minds in 1893, and it has taught us that the course we actually adopted in 1893 really had in it better chances of success than the alternative of a partial international agreement. To agree not to close mints still open for a definite time, and to agree to reopen closed mints, are two very different things. The former course would have been justifiable if the measures proposed were such as to afford a reasonable expectation of securing the main object of the Government of India, namely, stability in the rate of exchange. The latter is entirely unjustifiable unless the measures afford a practical certainty of securing that object.

The conditions under which we have had to reply to your Lordship's dispatch preclude our consulting the commercial and banking communities in this country, although the subject is one in which they are, as we have explained, most closely interested. It was only after prolonged public discussion, and after a formal examination by a committee of experts, that the policy of 1893 was adopted; and if we thought it our duty to advocate a change in that policy instead of to set out the strong objections which we see to its abandonment, we would nevertheless strongly deprecate any steps of the kind being taken without the fullest preliminary consideration on the part of the banking and commercial bodies in this country.

To sum up our reply to your Lordship's reference is a strong recommendation that you should decline to give the undertaking desired by France and the United States. Our unanimous and decided opinion is that it would be most unwise to reopen the mints as part of the proposed arrangements, especially at a time when we are to all appearance approaching the attainment of stability in exchange by the operation of our own isolated and independent action.

TREASURY CHAMBERS, October 16, 1897.

SIR: With reference to your letters of the 27th July and the 5th August last, I am directed by the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's treasury to request you to inform the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs that they have had under their consideration the proposals respecting currency which were submitted to Her Majesty's Government by the representatives of the United States and France at the conferences held at the foreign office on the 12th and 15th July last.

Of these proposals it is evident that the first, which relates to the reopening of the Indian mints to the free coinage of silver, is by far the most important; and on the 5th August the Secretary of State for India in council addressed a dispatch to the government of India, asking for an expression of their opinion on the subject.

I am now to inclose a copy of a letter from the India office,* forwarding the reply of the government of India to this inquiry.

It will be observed that their "unanimous and decided opinion is that it would be most unwise to reopen the mints as part of the proposed arrangements," and that this conclusion is indorsed by the Secretary of State in council.

My Lords have read with attention the reasons by which this conclusion is supported. Among other arguments, the government of India point out that they can hardly be expected to give up the policy which for four years they have been endeavoring to make effective, in the absence of substantial security that the system to be substituted for it is practically certain to be stable.

If, owing to the relative smallness of the area over which the bimetallic system is to be established, to the great divergence between the proposed ratio and the present gold price of silver, or to any other cause, the legal ratio were not maintained, the position of silver might be much worse than before, and the financial embarrassments of the Government of India greater than any with which they have as yet had to contend.

*See No. 5.

These are arguments against the proposals, as they stand, of which it is impossible to deny the force. But even were they less strong than they appear to my lords, or than they will probably appear to the representatives of the United States and France, the Government of India could hardly be compelled, against their own decided opinions, to make a second important change in Indian currency within so short a period as four years, at a time of exceptional difficulty and suffering.

In these circumstances my Lords would suggest that the French and American representatives should be informed that their first proposal is one which Her Majesty's Government are unable to accept.

Due consideration has also been given to the remaining proposals, but my Lords do not feel it to be necessary to discuss them at the present moment.

The proposal respecting the Indian mints was not only alluded to by the First Lord of the Treasury and the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the debate of the 17th of March, 1896, as by far the most important contribution which could be made by the British Empire toward any international agreement, with the object of securing "a stable monetary par of exchange between gold and silver," but it would also appear that the representatives of the United States and France entertain a similar opinion with regard to it.

My Lords would, therefore, ask the Secretary of State to ascertain how far the views of the French and American Governments are modified by the decision now arrived at, and whether they desire to proceed further with the negotiations at the present moment. It is possible that the time which has elapsed since the proposals were put forward in July last may have enabled the representatives of the two Governments concerned to form a more accurate estimate than was then practicable of the amount of assistance which they may expect from other powers, and of the success which their scheme is likely to attain; and that Her Majesty's Government might thus be placed in a position to consider the subject with a fuller knowledge than they now possess of many circumstances materially affecting the proposals before them.

No. 7.—The Marquess of Salisbury to Mr. Hay. *

FOREIGN OFFICE, October 19, 1897.

SIR: Her Majesty's Government have given their most careful consideration to the proposals respecting currency which were submitted by the representatives of the United States and France at the conferences held at the foreign office on the 12th and 15th of July last.

Of these proposals it is evident that the first, which relates to the reopening of the Indian mints for the free coinage of silver, is by far the most important, and consequently a dispatch was addressed on the 5th August to the government of India by the Secretary of State in council,† asking or fan expression of their opinion on the subject.

I have the honor now to inclose a copy of a letter from the India office to the treasury, forwarding the reply of the government of India to this inquiry.†

It will be observed that their "unanimous and decided opinions is that it would be most unwise to reopen the mints as part of the proposed arrangements," and that this conclusion is indorsed by the Secretary of State in council.

Her Majesty's Government have carefully considered the reasons by which this conclusion is supported. Among other arguments, the government of India point out that they can hardly be expected to give up the policy which for four years they have been endeavoring to make effective, in the absence of substantial security that the system to be substituted for it is practically certain to be stable.

If, owing to the relative smallness of the area over which the bimetallic system is to be established, to the great divergence between the proposed ratio and the present gold price of silver, or to any other cause, the legal ratio were not maintained, the position of silver might be much worse than before, and the financial embarrassments of the government of India greater than any with which they have as yet had to contend.

These are arguments against the proposals as they stand of which it is impossible to deny the force. But even were they less strong than they appear to Her Majesty's Government, or than they will probably appear to the representatives of the United States and France, the government of India could hardly be compelled, against their own decided opinions, to make a second important change in Indian currency within so short a period as four years at a time of exceptional difficulty and suffering.

In these circumstances Her Majesty's Government feel it their duty to state that the first proposal of the United States' representatives is one which they are unable to accept.

Due consideration has also been given to the remaining proposals, but Her Majesty's Government do not feel it to be necessary to discuss them at the present moment. The proposal respecting the Indian mints was not only alluded to by the First Lord of the Treasury and the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the debate in the House of Commons on the 17th of March, 1896, as by far the most important contribution which could be made by the British Empire toward any international agreement with the object of securing "a stable monetary par of exchange between gold and silver," but it would also appear that the representatives of the United States and France entertain a similar opinion with regard to it.

Her Majesty's Government are, therefore, desirous to ascertain how far the views of the American and French Governments are modified by the decision now arrived at, and whether they desire to proceed further with the negotiations at the present moment. It is possible that the time which has elapsed since the proposals were put forward in July last may have enabled the representatives of the two Governments concerned to form a more accurate estimate than was then practicable of the amount of assistance which they may expect from other powers, and of the success which their scheme is likely to attain. Her Majesty's Government might then be placed in a position to consider the subject with a fuller knowledge than they now possess of many circumstances materially affecting the proposals before them.

I am, etc.,

SALISBURY.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, let the resolution which is under consideration be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. LODGE. I ask for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska requests that his resolution on this subject be read.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask for the regular order. The confusion is so great that it is impossible to know what is being done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order. The Senator from Nebraska requests the reading of his resolution.

Mr. LODGE. Has the business of the Senate, which is the immigration bill, been laid before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has not been laid before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Is not that the regular order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is the regular order.

Mr. ALLEN. The resolution which I——

Mr. LODGE. I should like to have the bill laid before the Senate, and then, if I can have order and silence in the Chamber, I shall be very glad to know what the Senator's request is and yield to him if it is possible.

Mr. ALLEN. I have the floor. I am not making any request of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. It is impossible, as I understand it, for the Senator to have the floor until the bill comes up.

Mr. ALLEN. No; but the resolution which has just been discussed by the Senator from Colorado is formally before the Senate, and I want to have it disposed of in some form.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask what the order is at 2 o'clock?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the notice given by the Senator from Colorado was not upon the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska. His notice was that he would make some remarks on "matters connected with recent bimetallic negotiations." The Chair holds that the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, Senate bill 112 is before the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. I will take the floor on Senate bill 112, then.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That will be in order.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 112) to amend the immigration laws of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. I take it that, as the Senator in charge of the bill, I am entitled to the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair does not so understand. Senate bill 112 is before the Senate, and the Senator from Nebraska is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me for three or five minutes? I am obliged to leave the Chamber shortly.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir; I yield to the senior Senator from Massachusetts.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska yields to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not wish to argue the question involved in the bill, but I wish to state that some of its provisions but for existing necessities would be exceedingly repugnant to me. I do not like to restrain the coming into this country through those gates which have been open from the beginning of any man seeking an honest livelihood for himself or for his children. I do not find either in poverty or in ignorance any reason for refusing that welcome to manhood and womanhood which it has been the pride of the American people to extend from the beginning.

But, Mr. President, we are confronted with the fact that it has been found hitherto impossible by any national power or legislation to keep our suffrage pure. Majorities in both Houses of Congress, elections of President, governments of great States, in our recent history have been decided where the power of the Government had no relation whatever to the will of the people. We have attempted by strict naturalization laws, by strict election laws, by the exercise of the authority expressly conferred upon us by the Constitution of the United States, to confine the exercise of the suffrage in this country to the hands legitimately and constitutionally entitled to it, and we have failed.

Men of education, men of intelligence, men of wealth, scholars in universities, men who are now uniting in remonstrance against this proposed legislation, when they could accomplish their own political purposes have been found the willing, facile, and subservient allies to the men who have attempted to overthrow the honesty of legislation in this country.

It has therefore been found impossible, if ignorance and poverty and crime enter our gates, to keep the persons so admitted from taking a lawless and dishonest share in the ballot. It is for that reason—because this, though in form an immigration bill, is in substance a suffrage bill—that I am constrained to give it my support until in the future we shall be able to find some other and better remedy for this evil.

And I undertake to say that the men who deserted their old political associates when they were struggling for righteous elections in this country and, for the sake of accomplishing their own desires, indulging their dislikes or their hatred of men, or accomplishing their free-trade or other policies, joined hands with the men who were baffling our attempts to keep elections pure—it is upon them that the responsibility for whatever is evil or objectionable in this proposed legislation rests.

I have received through the mail and I have heard in private conversation sentiments uttered by eminent men in my own Commonwealth attacking the policy of the bill of my colleague, to which I intend to give my support, to which there is but one answer to be made, and the answer is: Whatever there is un-American, whatever there is of evil principle, in this proposed legislation, the men who are remonstrating against it are, in my judgment, the men who are guilty of it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator will allow me, all I desire to say is that I should like to have the resolution which has been under discussion passed over and retain its place on the table subject to call, and not passed to the Calendar.

Mr. LODGE. I have no possible objection to that.

Mr. ALLEN. With that order made, I have no desire to discuss the pending bill any further than I have already discussed it.

Mr. HOAR. Was there a resolution under discussion or were there merely some remarks submitted by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] upon the question? I did not understand that the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] had been taken up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution was not taken up. The resolution was heretofore laid over at the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. I think it is due to the facts of history to say that when the resolution was introduced I asked for its then present consideration, and the Senator from Colorado asked that it be passed over in order that he might make some remarks upon it. While the resolution was not formally laid before the Senate this morning, as a matter of fact, his remarks were brought out by that resolution, and therefore I want it to remain where it is until it can be finally disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That will be the order, and the resolution will lie on the table subject to call.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me a moment, or does he desire to proceed at this time?

Mr. LODGE. I yield with pleasure to the Senator to offer an amendment which I understand he desires to offer, but I wish to go on with the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. I shall take but a few moments, Mr. President. I do not rise for the purpose of making any elaborate general remarks upon the bill, which obviously is one of very great consequence. I have received, in common, I presume, with every Senator, a great many protests against this bill—some in the envelopes of steamship companies, and some undoubtedly inspired by them. The motive of such opposition to the bill is beyond any question one of selfishness. In some protests it is denounced as a nativistic bill, a relic or new manifestation of Know-nothingism. If it were such to my mind, Mr. President, in any of its aspects, I should move to indefinitely postpone the bill, for I never had a nativistic thought in my life, and I believe that spirit is dead in this country, and has been for a great many years.

The bill does not essentially change the traditional attitude of the United States toward the immigrant. It is not intended by it to close the doors to any man because he was born in a foreign land. On the contrary, as I understand it, it still holds out a hospitable welcome to every foreigner, provided only he be able to read and write in any language. If he is debarred under this bill, it is not because of his nativity; it is because he is illiterate and wanting in the rudimentary education which, according to the general experience of our people, is essential to good citizenship, and that at an age which according to the experience of the world renders, such defect in him usually ineradicable.

It is not to be forgotten that the road from Castle Garden, or any landing place of immigrants, to citizenship in this country is a short and easy one; and it seems to me absurd that, while our people are expending millions of dollars every year to fit the young of the country, native and foreign born, those who are to bear the responsibility of citizenship and the duties of citizenship after us, in public and in private schools, for an intelligent discharge of those duties—for in this country the man who obeys the law is the man who helps to make the law—while some of our States have found it necessary to adopt amendments to their constitutions excluding from citizenship by an educational test those who can not read their statutes in some language and those who can not write, we should be adding year after year forever, at the dictation of steamship companies or anyone else, to the mass of illiterate persons by accepting confirmed illiterates.

With the general scope of the bill I have no quarrel, but I do object seriously, Mr. President, to what seems to me an unnecessary element of harshness. If Senators will take the trouble to note the bill as to the educational test, which is the critical part, of course, they will find it excludes primarily—

All persons physically capable and over 16 years of age who can not read and write the English language, or some other language.

I regard it as unnecessary, as altogether too harsh in its restrictive character, to require that an immigrant coming into this country shall, under penalty of being sent back to the country whence he came, be able both to read our Constitution and to write it in some language.

It is adequate, Mr. President, for all the safeguards of citizenship if one seeking entrance into this country is possessed of that rudimentary education which enables him to read our Constitution, to read our newspapers, to read our statutes, to read our history, and thereby to become thoroughly imbued not only with a knowledge, but with an appreciation of the liberty which this country affords, and of its institutions.

I doubt if there is a Senator who does me the honor to listen to me who, looking back over his life, can not remember many a man of strong native ability, of marked sturdiness of character, of great devotion to country, who could read the newspapers, who could read books, who could read our Constitution, and understand it as well as any, but who would find it very difficult indeed to write it. I have known some men, and doubtless so have my colleagues, who have achieved eminence and fortunes in the States, by ability, good judgment, and all the elements that go to make up good citizenship, who could read all that was necessary for them to read, but could not always spell or punctuate, as a Senator near me says who——

Mr. CHANDLER. We do not require spelling and punctuation.

Mr. SPOONER. Who would not be successful teachers of writing schools. It is more difficult for thousands of men to learn to write than it is for them to learn to read. A man not blind always has the letters before him. He sees them on every sign, on every bill board. Wherever he goes from morning until night he has the letters of the alphabet singly and combined in words before his eyes, which teach him to read, but it is oftentimes difficult and oftentimes impossible for a man, after he has attained years of maturity, to learn to write; and I am not willing to vote, Mr. President, and rather than do it I will vote against this bill, although with its general purposes I am in sympathy—to turn away from our shores any man, come whence he may, of good character, not a pauper, able to work and bear the burdens of life, who can read in some language our Constitution, our laws, our newspapers, and our history. No matter how well a man might read and pass the reading test prescribed by the bill, if he could not also write our Constitution, he would be turned away. It is too much.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WHITE in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SPOONER. I always yield to the Senator from New Hampshire or anyone else.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator whether he has ever looked into the extremely narrow test of writing which is applied here? The immigrant has to read "not less than twenty nor more than twenty-five words of said Constitution." Those words will be before him on a slip, and all he will have to do after reading them will be to take a pen or a pencil and write out—that is, copy, in fact—those twenty or twenty-five words. Does the Senator think that is such a severe requirement—that whether it is retained or stricken out should make the difference with him as to how he will vote on this bill?

Mr. SPOONER. I have not overlooked it. I have looked at it several times, and the more I have looked at it the less I like it. I am perfectly satisfied myself that a man who can stand the reading test, who can read 25 words of our Constitution in some language, can read 250 or 2,500 words if you will give him time enough. But my point is that if he can read our Constitution, read our laws, read our newspapers, he ought not to be turned away from our shores because for some reason or other he can not write. Certainly he would be a competent juror under the laws of any State in the Union, as suggested by my friend from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. President, I took occasion, in order to satisfy myself that although this might seem to be a slight amendment it is really an amendment of substance and consequence, to ascertain how many foreign-born citizens there were here over the age of 10 years, by the census of 1890, who could read but could not write, and I have obtained from the Bureau of Education this information upon the subject: The total foreign-born white population in 1890, 10 years of age and over, was 8,786,887 illiterates.

Under this head were classed people who could read, but could not write, or could neither read nor write, and they numbered 1,147,571. Of that number there were 222,654 foreign-born citizens over the age of 10 years in the United States who could read, but could not write. I will not take the time of the Senate to note the distribution of these. I do note, however, that in Massachusetts there were 14,432, very many of whom undoubtedly, if not now in this country, would be excluded from it under the bill of the Senator if it became a law without this amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Our constitution prevents those who can not read and write from voting.

Mr. SPOONER. Then you would have a double prohibition; you would have an act of Congress prohibiting the admission of immigrants into the United States unless they can read and write and your constitutional provision denying them citizenship unless they can read and write.

There were in the State of New York 29,099; and in the State of Pennsylvania 22,377 who could read, but could not write.

Mr. DAVIS. How many in Minnesota?

Mr. SPOONER. There were in the State of Minnesota 20,012—thousands of men, many of whom the Senator doubtless knows—good men, honest men, good citizens—who could read but could not write, and who, under the bill, if it should become a law without amendment, if over 16 years of age, could not now come into the United States.

There were in Wisconsin 19,437. In Iowa there were 9,777. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] asks me how many there were in Connecticut. In Connecticut there were 4,478 who could read but could not write.

Mr. HAWLEY. Those who can read have the privilege of voting in our State.

Mr. SPOONER. You allow them to vote under your constitution?

Mr. HAWLEY. We permit them to vote without the writing qualification if they can read.

Mr. SPOONER. Then I prefer the constitution of Connecticut in that respect to that of Massachusetts. I care for the substance, not the shadow; but I would rather live under the constitution of Wisconsin.

Mr. LINDSAY. Have you an educational qualification in Wisconsin?

Mr. SPOONER. No, sir.

Mr. LINDSAY. You let them all vote?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes. There is no better citizenship in the United States, more conservative, intelligent, obedient to law, thrifty, and industrious than in that State.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator whether Wisconsin has not laws providing for compulsory education?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly; and this is why I believe in laws for compulsory education. I believe that in popular education lies the safety of the Republic. That is why I said to the Senate that I should vote for this bill with this amendment and that I sympathize with its general purpose.

I have not had time to look at the statistics, but while there were nearly a quarter of a million in the United States, when the census was taken in 1890, who could read but could not write, I presume there were comparatively few who could write and could not read; for, generally, persons who can write can read.

Mr. President, I have before me a "constitution" to which the Senator from New Hampshire will, of course, yield willing obedience.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will if the Senator will allow me to ask him a question.

Mr. SPOONER. Then I will allow the Senator to ask me a question.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask whether the Wisconsin laws for compulsory education do not require that children and persons capable of learning to read shall also learn to write?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not remember about that this moment.

Mr. CHANDLER. Has the Senator any doubt about that?

Mr. SPOONER. I hope they do.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I want to ask this further question: If Wisconsin is going to compel every person physically capable to learn to read and write after he gets there, why should we not compel him to stay abroad and learn to read and write before he comes over here?

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator can not see the difference, I can not hope to explain it to him.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will allow me, we do not propose to keep anybody out by this provision. Every human being can come here under this proposed law who could come without it. We simply say before they come they shall learn the rudiments of reading and writing. The Senator says that is all right as to reading, but we should not require them to write. It seems to me as we only ask them to stay abroad one month or two months or three months until they get these rudiments of education, it is just as reasonable to have those physically capable—and this proposed law applies to no one else—learn to read and write as it is to say that they may come in if they can read, although they can not write.

Mr. SPOONER. The education which as a people we desire to accomplish for our own children is one thing. We want them to have as completely as possible the rudiments of education; we want them to know how to read and how to write, and to understand the history of the country, and all that. It is another thing when you propose to reverse the traditional policy of the United States—to impose an educational test, applicable to adults, which is to exclude them and their children from our shores. Immigrants, in the years gone by, it must be remembered, have been of overwhelming importance to us, to our upbuilding, and even to the preservation of our national life.

We should not be overstrict, but strict enough, and I think I yield enough to this principle—and the principle is obvious—when I say that if a person who can read comes over the sea, if he is a strong man, if he comes with his family to make his home among us and to obey our laws, if he is not within the class of people who have heretofore by our laws been excluded, we should let him in if he can read our Constitution, without sending him back until he can also learn to write it.

The Senator said if I would allow him to interrupt me he would allow me to read this, which, upon many questions, is a "constitution" in a party sense, and that he would obey it. I therefore expect the Senator to vote, albeit possibly with great reluctance, for this amendment. This is the platform adopted by the Republican party at St. Louis, and I bring it to the attention of my friend. I do not know but that he wrote it.

FOREIGN IMMIGRATION.

For the protection of the quality of our American citizenship —

Mr. LINDSAY. That is not the constitution to which the immigrant subscribes.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, no; but if he can read the Constitution of the United States he can read this one, and we think he would like it. I ask the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to this:

For the protection of the quality of our American citizenship, and of the wages of our workingmen against the fatal competition of low-priced labor, we demand that the immigration laws be thoroughly enforced and so extended as to exclude from entrance to the United States those who can NEITHER READ NOR WRITE.

Not those who can not both read and write.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think that is the proper construction of that platform.

Mr. SPOONER. I think that is the only construction.

My motion is to strike out the word "and," where the same occurs in line 9 of the bill, between the words "read" and "write," also in line 10, and in section 2, page 2, line 2, and in line 30, and insert in lieu thereof the work "or."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, line 9, after the word "read," it is proposed to strike out the word "and" and insert "or;" in line 10, after the word "read," to strike out "and" and insert "or;" in section 2, line 2, page 2, and also in line 30, after the word "read," to strike out "and" and insert "or."

Mr. SPOONER. I wish to ask the Senator who has charge of the bill whether it is clear that the question of whether the immigrant should or should not be rejected for failing to meet this test is subject to appeal. The Senator from New Hampshire informs me—and I think he is correct about it—that there would be an appeal. I think that is of the utmost importance.

Mr. LODGE. That was the intention of the bill, and I so understand the provision.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will allow me, the bill reported by the Senator from Massachusetts simply provides an additional test. It does nothing more. The test is to be applied according to the existing law, and by the existing law any decision adverse to an immigrant is subject to appeal, first, to the Commissioner-General of Immigration, and second, to the Secretary of the Treasury. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. SPOONER. I think that is true, and I regard that as of the utmost consequence, because a person coming from another country into ours and obliged to undergo such a test as a condition of entrance will be more or less embarrassed and bewildered, and might not then meet the test, when with more deliberation he could do so. He should not be, in so important a crisis, entirely subject to the decision of the inspector upon the first attempt.

Mr. CHANDLER. That there may be no mistake on that point, let me read an extract from the act of March 3, 1891:

All decisions made by the inspection officers or their assistants touching the right of any alien to land, when adverse to such right, shall be final unless appeal be taken to the Superintendent of Immigration, whose action shall be subject to review by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SPOONER. That is right.

I wish to make one more suggestion to the Senator who has the bill in charge and also to the Senator from New Hampshire. The bill provides:

No immigrant failing to read and write out the slip thus drawn by him shall be admitted, but he shall be returned to the country from which he came at the expense of the steamship or railroad company which brought him, as now provided by law.

That might very often bring about this situation—and I will take but a moment to state it—that the father of a family, not able to stand the reading test or the writing test, should come here with a wife who would be able to stand the test and also with children who would be admitted under the bill, and he might very well have exhausted all of his savings in getting here.

It is not difficult to imagine that he came without the slightest misgiving as to his being permitted to enter, and therefore without fault. But if such a one comes, the steamship company is obliged only to carry him back at its expense, leaving the wife and the children to stay here without him, if perchance neither he nor they have money to pay their passage back to Europe, or if he has the money with which to pay their passage back to Europe he must expend it for that purpose.

Now, I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts whether it would not be wise and well, because apparently just, inasmuch as he naturally, and I think properly, expects this bill, if it be comes a law, to be very greatly enforced by the steamship companies on the other side, to add to the bill a provision that in case they bring over one who can not pass the test of literacy they shall not only return him to the country whence he came, but also his wife and children whom he brought with him.

Mr. LODGE. I think that is proper, and I would ask the Senator if he will frame an amendment to that point in the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. I will do so.

Mr. LODGE obtained the floor.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I wish to call attention to the fact that, according to the report of the Commissioner-General of Immigration last year, there were, all told, only 1,572 illiterates over 14 years of age who would have been excluded simply because they could not write. Out of a total of 44,580 illiterates over 14 years of age, 43,008 could not read or write and 1,572 could not write.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have only a very few minutes, and I should like to proceed, as I have not had an opportunity before to say anything on the bill.

I desire to state first that this is the original bill with the educational test as it passed the Senate at the last session and went to the House. It includes some modifications made in conference to meet certain objections in the Senate at that time, and the Corliss amendment affecting the passage into this country of laborers from the countries on our northern and southern boundaries has been entirely dropped. Various other schemes for a discriminating restriction of immigration have been considered by the committees charged with this subject for the last eight years. One which struck them as most favorable at the outset of their investigation was that of consular certification. We were obliged to abandon it for the reason that it would not be permitted in the countries from which emigrants come. In other words, it was an impracticable suggestion.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. LODGE. I will yield for a question; I have only a few moments.

Mr. KYLE. I have investigated the matter a little within the past few days, after talking with the Senator who is now on the floor, and I get information from the Commissioner of Immigration, Mr. Powderly, saying he knows nothing whatever of any such provision or restrictions in foreign countries. I also have a letter from the Secretary of State, addressed to me a day or two ago, in which he uses these words:

An examination of the Department's files fails to disclose any objection so far as Germany is concerned—

I named Germany in particular—nor have I been able to discover that any other foreign government has made such objection.

Mr. LODGE. Of course they have made no such objections, because we have never made any such requests. The committee made investigation to find out what would happen if such a law should pass, and I inquired personally through our consuls whether foreign governments would submit to it, and was informed that they would not. Of course the case was hypothetical. No definite proposition was made by our Government, for the simple reason that no bill had been passed.

There is also another objection. A great many of the immigrants to this country are of military age. Of course they are the best, the most desirable. They will not go to a consul and announce their intention of coming to this country, because they would then be stopped; and the effect of consular certification would thus be to exclude the immigration of the men of military age, the most desirable immigrants, and increase the immigration of those over and under military age.

I can assure the Senator from South Dakota that it is from no hostility to the scheme that I speak as I do. The committee investigated it with the utmost thoroughness. It was one which commended itself to my mind at the outset as the best, and it was with great reluctance that I abandoned it; but I found from the best inquiries, and so did the committee, that it could not be put into force; that nothing could be done with it.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. LODGE. I have scarcely five minutes. There are several matters upon which I wish to speak.

Mr. KYLE. Are we compelled to vote at 3 o'clock?

Mr. LODGE. The agreement is to take a vote at 3 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 3 o'clock has been agreed upon as the time when a vote shall be taken.

Mr. LODGE. The hour is 3 o'clock, and I have no power to set aside the agreement.

To the opponents of all restriction of immigration and those who think that every child born in Asia, outside the confines of China, in Europe, or in Africa has an inalienable right to come to the United States and settle here, I have no argument to offer, for I can not understand that position. To me it is absolutely clear that the people of the United States dwelling within its borders at this moment are the masters of this country to say who shall come within those borders and who shall not. They can exclude all or admit all, or they can admit some and exclude others. Of the power of the American people to do that I do not think there can be any question.

Moreover, I constantly hear, when a Senator gets up in opposition to restriction, something about the traditional policy of the United States. I am quite aware what that traditional policy has been, but the United States under the pressure of changing times and altering conditions has deliberately abandoned that policy.

It has abandoned it as to the criminal, the pauper, the diseased, a man or woman likely to become a charge upon the public. If there is an inalienable right in the inhabitants of other countries to come and settle here, then we have crossed it by those provisions. But we have gone further than that. We have excluded the Chinese absolutely from this country. The Chinaman is thrifty, he is industrious, he is much more orderly and better behaved than some who come in upon our eastern shores, and yet we have rigidly excluded him on the simple ground that he brings a lower standard of labor to compete with that of America. I think the Chinese legislation was correct. I supported it when it was unpopular in the East and when the West demanded it, and now I look to the West to give like support to the East in the difficulties which we are meeting.

This bill is merely an extension of existing law, a proposal to widen it so as to exclude gross ignorance. The effect of that extension was admirably shown by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] the other day. I do not intend to go over that ground. He has shown that the general effect of the educational test will be to exclude the greatest number of undesirable immigrants and the smallest number of desirable immigrants. He has shown that the illiterate immigration congests in the slums of the great Eastern cities, that it does not go out into the sparsely settled lands of the West and South. He has shown fully, and it is also shown in the report of the committee, that the foreign born who find their way in such large numbers into the asylums and workhouses and other charitable and penal institutions of the country are chiefly of the illiterate class. All these points have been covered, and we find from the replies of the governors of every State in the Union that none of them desire this sort of immigration in their States.

Now, Mr. President, just a word as to the opposition to this bill. The opposition which has been seen in the newspapers in the last ten days has been stimulated by the same force which stimulated the opposition last year. The German steamship companies, which alone are affected by the exclusion of illiterates, have raised this movement against the bill, not that the Germans are excluded, for no German practically is affected by the bill, because a small fraction of 1 per cent only of the German immigration is unable to read and write, but with their Mediterranean ships, as well as those that go to Hamburg and Bremen, this company brings to the country, and is practically the only company that does so bring, the illiterate immigration. They have stimulated this movement all over the country. They have founded a league carried on by the deputy commissioner of immigration under the last Administration, who had not been at the time of his appointment seven years a citizen of the United States, and who now calls himself a German and not an American in the letter I am about to read. He has put out a letter, a call to Germans, not to Americans, to join this league and fight the bill. In it he says:

> Our immigration laws are fully stringent enough to exclude all undesirable elements, but the nativistic authors of such entirely superfluous new laws pretend that their only object is to protect the American laboring man against foreign competition. This is, however, only a poor excuse for their real scheme, dictated by that hatred of the foreigner, whom they would like to exclude altogether. Their motto is "America for the Americans," and with immigration reduced to a minimum; if, in particular, the now comparatively feeble stream of German immigration is completely cut off, then they will succeed in oppressing Germans in this country, and ruin the German element politically and industrially. To the great satisfaction and delight of the English-American press, many a German newspaper, whose competition is a thorn in their flesh, will be forced to the wall. No German church building will then be erected any more, or conserved; no German school could exist, and the German language will disappear from the public schools.
> Fellow-citizens, do you intend to permit such injustice to be done? Shall the Know-Nothings be permitted to raise their heads again and to oppress us Germans? Shall all the blessings which German culture has brought to this country ever since be lost at one stroke? No, never, never! But if, being convinced that we Germans have to fulfill the sacred mission to instill into public as well as private life the spirit of German ideas of veracity and liberty, we must also see the necessity for going ahead in a clear-pointed-out way, in order to retain the blessings of German influence in the future.

Mr. President, I never in my life discriminated in any way against any man on account of race or creed; but I say that, however intolerant Know-nothingism may have been, nothing could be worse than the base appeal to race prejudice in this letter—this open attempt to appeal to Germans in contradistinction to other Americans. We are all Americans here, and the sooner we get rid of such race appeals the better. This letter calls on inhabitants of this country not as Americans, but as Germans. Americans with a prefix and hyphen are utterly out of place here, and in this letter even the word "American" is omitted. If it is un-American, as I believe it is, to appeal against a man on account of his race or creed, what shall be said of such an appeal as this and of its base attack on other American citizens because they are natives or of English extraction? Mr. President, the American citizens of German extraction are not opposed to this bill. I have many letters from such citizens favoring it. The German steamship companies are opposed, but they are foreign corporations, and they and their agents represent only their own selfish interests.

Now, a single word, for I see my time is closing, and that is on the point in regard to labor. I have an article here which I can not read—I should like to read it, but I will print it—from the Journal of the Knights of Labor. That great organization has declared unequivocally for this bill and for the restriction of immigration. Here are the resolutions of the American Federation of Labor, addressed to this Congress:

> We urge the adoption of a reasonable law to restrict undesirable immigration, such law to be based upon an educational qualification.
> SAMUEL GOMPERS,
> FRANK MORRISON,
> ANDREW FURUSETH.
> Legislative Committee.

This is not a snap judgment. They gave out a year ago to all their unions the question of immigration. For one year it has been discussed in the unions all over the United States. By a vote of 1,800 to 300 they adopted this resolution in favor of restriction. They take the ground that the introduction of low-priced, ignorant labor is a great injury to them. Do the German steamship companies accuse the Knights of Labor and the American Federation of Labor of Know-nothingism and nativism? They are men representing all classes of our citizens; some of them were born abroad, some are of foreign parentage, some of American parentage, but all alike interested solely in the welfare of labor. And that resolution is the voice, the deliberate voice, of the two great labor organizations of the country. They have discussed the question thoroughly. They know the wishes of unorganized labor as well as of organized labor. They give the serious, earnest opinion of the wage earners of the country. They know the evils of unrestricted immigration, for they have suffered from them. They are witnesses whose testimony is conclusive and can not be set aside. They have a right to be heard which does not pertain to foreign steamship companies, with their appeals to race prejudice, which should never be uttered in this country.

Mr. President, those men, in my judgment, know what is desired and what is right for the wage-earners in this matter, as they desired and obtained the legislation against the Chinese.

One word more and I will have done. I ask for this bill as a protection, a very moderate one, to our citizenship, to the qualities of race on which this country is founded; to our suffrage, ill-guarded by imperfect laws of naturalization; and I ask it also for the protection of American labor, as demanded by the petitions which we have from these great unions.

APPENDIX A.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., January 6, 1898.

To the honorable the members of the Fifty-fifth Congress.

GENTLEMEN: The rapid industrial changes in modern society press heavily upon those who must toil as wage workers; skill which required years to acquire is often made valueless in a month. Introduction of new machinery and new methods continually throws large numbers into idleness and want.

When by organization and combined action we seek some relief, we are met by writs of injunctions forbidding us to advise with our fellow-workers as to the best means to protect our interests; to quit such work as we may at the time be engaged in performing, and laws already on the statute books are construed and used to compel men to labor against their will.

Again, we are brought into competition with the convicts of our own or other States, by sundry articles being made in the different penal institutions.

Laborers are imported from other countries to reduce our wages and thereby our standard of living. By these several methods we feel ourselves unduly wronged and oppressed, unable to exercise that independence becoming to and an indispensable attribute of the laboring people in a democratic country and in modern civilized life.

We feel that we have a right to bring our grievances to the attention of and to expect from the lawmaking power such definite measures of relief as seem most likely to improve our condition and preserve our independence and freedom as workers and citizens, and therefore urge your earnest consideration of and your best efforts in enacting into law the following measures:

1. An eight-hour workday on all public works. Such law to provide that all contracts or subcontracts for materials furnished or work done must contain a proviso that eight hours shall be the maximum labor of any one individual in any one calendar day. Further, that it shall be the duty of officials vested with the power of signing such contract to withhold their signatures until such proviso is inserted therein.

2. (a) In order to stop the indiscriminate and dangerous use of the writ of injunction, we urge the adoption of Senate bill 35.

(b) To free those who are yet bondmen under our statutes and in order that such bondage may not be used as an excuse for extending it to the workers of other callings, we ask the enactment into law of Senate bill 95.

3. In order to in some degree lessen the competition of convict labor we urge the adoption of a law to prohibit the transportation of prison-made goods from one State into any other State or Territory.

4. We urge the adoption of a reasonable law to restrict undesirable immigration, such law to be based upon an educational qualification.

When the bills on these various subjects are referred to their respective committees, we shall submit such reasons as seem to us sufficient for the above requests.

In conclusion, we submit that we have the right to expect all members of Congress to vote in favor of these measures when being finally considered. In addition, however, we hope that there may be many willing to give special attention and assistance in furtherance of these measures, and assurances of such may be addressed to either of the undersigned.

By order of the seventeenth annual convention of the American Federation of Labor, held at Nashville, Tenn., December 13-21, 1897.

SAMUEL GOMPERS, President A. F. of L.,
FRANK MORRISON, Secretary,
ANDREW FURUSETH,
Legislative Committee.

APPENDIX B.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION—IT IS THE PREVALENT SENTIMENT OF ORGANIZED LABOR—URGE YOUR SENATOR AND CONGRESSMAN TO SUPPORT SENATE BILL 112.

Among the other matters requiring legislative action which were considered by the last annual convention of the general assembly of the Knights of Labor, held at Louisville, Ky., November 9 to 17, 1897, the subject of restricting immigration was discussed, with the result that House bill No. 74 and Senate bill No. 112 received the unanimous approval of that body.

These bills contain practically the same provisions as were embodied in the Lodge-Corliss bill that was approved by the last Congress and vetoed by Mr. Cleveland. When the subject was before Congress, the merits of the bill was fully discussed and the necessity of restricting foreign immigration was clearly set forth. In view of these circumstances, it would seem hardly necessary to call attention to the matter at this time were it not for the fact that the opponents of restriction, and especially the emissaries of the great transatlantic steamship companies, have assumed to dictate Congressional action in the matter.

In common with all labor organizations throughout the country, the Knights of Labor have avoided premature action upon this now all-important subject. Organized labor has been content to await the results of such palliative laws as have been enacted with the hope that they might prove effective and bring some measure of relief to the overcrowded labor market in the industrial centers of the country.

That the present laws are not effective; that they do not afford relief; that they are entirely inadequate and do not meet the requirements of the case is altogether too obvious to need demonstration. Idleness, the forerunner of discontent, is the greatest cause of the worst evils of our present industrial environment. It is one of the effects we have to deal with, and compels investigation as to the cause. That there are various causes is a mere truism. But after years of careful observation and study we are forced to the inevitable conclusion that one of the immediate and most potent causes of idleness and low wages is the never-ceasing and killing competition of the cheap labor of Europe which is dumped upon our shores in human form by hundreds of thousands every year regardless of the effect upon our American institutions or the demoralization it brings to American wage earners.

It is admitted on all sides that further restriction is necessary. The only question seems to be as regards the method to be adopted. We have considered the various bills which have been before Congress from year to year, as well as the agreements for and against the same. Aside from the sentimental ideas which have been advanced by the opponents of restriction, and admitting that there is room and need for thousands of honest and industrious immigrants in the sparsely settled States in the South and West, we nevertheless claim that these sections have always received all of the immigrants who have come to this country with the means and inclination to go farther than the large manufacturing and mining States in the East and middle West.

The reports of the Bureau of Immigration show that during the last three years 75 per cent of our immigrants located in the North Atlantic States, 70 per cent going to New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, and New Jersey. They show also that while there has been a decrease of 48 per cent in the total immigration during the last five years, the proportion going to the North Atlantic States has increased from 65 to 75 per cent. It is in these States that idleness is more constant, strikes and lockouts and reductions in wages more frequent, and competition for a bare existence the greatest. In the face of such facts, is it any wonder that the people in the East should look to Congress and ask for redemption from the terrible undermining conditions that are being forced upon them by this never-ceasing stream from abroad?

As regards the propriety of the educational test, we are satisfied that it is the most practicable method yet advanced. Unlike the present laws or the proposed consular inspection, it will not leave the administration of the law to the discretion of the officials. Its redeeming feature is that it is positive and leaves no loopholes for thousands of contract laborers to crawl through, as is the case under the present law. The educational test might keep out a few desirable immigrants, but the country can well spare them if we can rid ourselves of the large class of undesirable ones. The line must be drawn somewhere, and to our mind the educational test offers the best remedy. It needs but a glance at the official reports to convince any fair-minded person that such a test will affect a larger proportion of the undesirable class and a smaller proportion of the desirable immigrants than any other measure excepting a law that would exclude all immigrants.

We claim that 90 per cent of the immigrants that would be affected by this test are of a class that is not wanted in any section of the country, and in making this assertion we feel that we speak with authority. Our organization and work carries us into every State in the Union, and everywhere not only the wage earners but men in every walk of life are pronounced in favor of more effective restriction of immigration. We wish to emphasize the fact that the American wage earners are the most liberal of any class in the world. Their sympathy has always gone out to the poor and oppressed of all lands, and they have aided and welcomed them to a home in this country where they might enjoy some of the blessings of our free institutions and partake of the fruits of our American standard of civilization.

But of late years the conditions as well as the character of our immigration have changed. Instead of those immigrants which are most closely related to the races that built up our standard of civilization, we have been receiving hundreds of thousands of the lowest and most servile races of Europe. They have come to this country, set up their foreign standards, and in so many words they have said to the American wage earners, "Meet us if you can!" This condition of affairs has been going on for years. The American workingman has been pushed aside and the newly-arrived immigrant given employment simply because he will work for less wages, regardless of the conditions of employment.

Their wants are few and their methods and standards are such that no man can compete with them and live as an American citizen should live. From one end of the country to the other they had been used as a club to beat down wages until at last forbearance has indeed ceased to be a virtue, and as a matter of self-preservation the American wage earners are compelled to ask for redemption. This can only be brought about through remedial legislation. With one or two exceptions, every labor organization in the country has pronounced in favor of restriction based upon the educational test, and in this instance they represent the unorganized as well.

On their behalf we feel that we are not coming as mendicants. On every ground of public morality, peace, and justice they have a right to expect that Congress, in legislating for the best interests of the whole people, will give heed to the demands of the wage earners in this instance.

It is not often that Congress has an opportunity to demonstrate its willingness to enact laws which will be of immediate and practical benefit to the wage earners of this country, but in this particular instance the opportunity is here and the time is ripe for action. It remains to be seen how our National Legislature will act.—Journal of the Knights of Labor, January 13, 1898.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 3 o'clock having arrived, the question before the Senate is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. CAFFERY. I desire to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana will be read for information.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the word "sixteen," in line 8, section 1, and insert "twenty-one;" and to strike out all after the word "and," in line 12, down to the word "may," in line 13; so as to read:

All persons physically capable and over 21 years of age who can not read and write the English language or some other language; but a person not so able to read and write who is over 50 years of age and is the parent or grandparent of a qualified immigrant over 21 years of age may accompany such immigrant, or such a parent or grandparent may be sent for and come to join the family of a child or grandchild over 21 years of age similarly qualified and capable, and a wife or minor child not so able to read and write may accompany or be sent for and come to join the husband or parent similarly qualified and capable.

Mr. CAFFERY. I should like to be allowed to make a few remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that by a unanimous-consent agreement of the Senate the hour of 3 o'clock was fixed upon to vote finally on the bill. An amendment has been offered by the Senator from Wisconsin, which amendment has been stated from the desk, and it is now before the Senate. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CHILTON. Let it be stated again. I was not here at the time it was offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin. The Chair understands there are two amendments or two classes of amendments, one being the elimination of the word "and," the insertion of the word "or," and an addition also, to come in on the third page of the bill.

The SECRETARY. It proposed to strike out the word "and" in line 9, section 1, between the words "read" and "write;" to strike out the same word in line 10 between the same words; in section 2 to strike out the word "and" in line 2 and insert "or;" and in line 19 to strike out the word "and" and insert "or;" so that it will read in each case "read or write." After the word "law," in line 22, section 2, it is proposed to insert:

And shall also transport with him the wife, children, and other relatives herein mentioned who come with him, if they desire.

So as to read:

But he shall be returned to the country from which he came at the expense of the steamship or railroad company which brought him, as now provided by law, and shall also transport with him the wife, children, and other relatives herein mentioned who come with him, if they desire.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is no objection to the last amendment. Let the votes be taken separately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that they are separate propositions. The first question before the Senate is the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin with reference to the elimination of the word "and" and the substitution therefor of the word "or."

Mr. ALLEN. How will the bill read as amended? Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska desire that the entire bill shall be read?

Mr. ALLEN. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill with the amendment as proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin, substituting the word "or" for the word "and."

The SECRETARY. In line 9, section 1, it is proposed to strike out the word "and" and insert "or;" so as to read:

All persons physically capable and over 16 years of age who can not read or write the English language, etc.

After the word "law," in line 22, section 2, it is proposed to insert:

And shall also transport with him the wife, children, and other relatives herein mentioned who come with him, if they desire.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent that the last amendment may be voted on first, as I know of no objection to it.

Mr. LODGE. There is no objection to the last amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the last amendment stated? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to. The question before the Senate is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin, substituting the word "or" for the word "and," which has been stated.

Mr. CAFFERY. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL and Mr. SEWELL. Let the amendment be stated again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will again be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 9, section 1, after the word "read," it is proposed to strike out "and" and insert "or;" in line 10, after the word "read," it is proposed to strike out "and" and insert "or;" in section 2, line 2, after the word "read," it is proposed to strike out "and" and insert "or;" in line 19 it is proposed to strike out "and" and insert "or," and in line 30 it is proposed to strike out "and" and insert "or;" so as to read in each case "read or write."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAFFERY (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], and withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FRYE (when Mr. HALE's name was called). The senior Senator from Maine is paired with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. ALLEN (when Mr. TURNER's name was called). The junior Senator from Washington stands paired on this vote and on the passage of the bill with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. He not being present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILSON (when his name was called). I stand paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GEAR. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] who is absent.

Mr. PETTUS (after having voted in the affirmative). I observe that the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] is not in his seat. I am paired with him, and voted inadvertently. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. MCLAURIN] is absent because of illness.

Mr. CHANDLER (after having voted in the negative). I am paired on political questions with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN]. This not being a political question, as I understand it, I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BACON. I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], but under our agreement I am entitled to vote on questions nonpolitical. Not regarding this as political, I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BUTLER. I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. DEBOE. I am paired with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BATE. My colleague is absent, and he is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. DEBOE], as the latter has stated. The Senator from Kentucky stated that he would vote "yea" if my colleague were present. My colleague would likewise vote "yea." So the Senator from Kentucky can vote if he desires.

Mr. DEBOE. Then I will vote. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 22; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY].

Mr. LODGE. That amendment, I hope, will not be accepted. I ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. STEWART. Let the amendment be read.

The SECRETARY. In line 8, page 1, strike out the word "sixteen" and insert "twenty-one;" and after the word "and," in line 12, on the same page, strike out the words "capable of supporting such parent or grandparent."

Mr. LODGE. Those amendments are, I think, distinct.

Mr. BACON. I ask that that part of the bill be read as it would read if amended as proposed.

The Secretary read as follows:

All persons physically capable and over 21 years of age who can not read or write the English language or some other language; but a person not so able to read or write who is over 50 years of age and is the parent or grandparent of a qualified immigrant over 21 years of age and may accompany such immigrant, etc.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask for a division of the question. Let the vote first be taken on the amendment striking out "sixteen."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland suggests a division of the question. The first question will be on the amendment proposed in so far as it eliminates "sixteen" and inserts "twenty-one" before the words "years of age."

Mr. LODGE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON].

Mr. PETTUS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. I would vote "yea" if I had a vote.

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. I would vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. While privileges are allowed to each under the pair, I do not feel at liberty to vote in his absence on this question.

Mr. WILSON (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO]. I am not advised as to how he would vote on this question. It is suggested to me that I transfer my pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] and vote. I will do so. I vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 29, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—29.

Allen,	Daniel,	McEnery,	Roach,
Bacon,	Gorman,	Mallory,	Stewart,
Bate,	Hawley,	Mills,	Turpie,

Deboe,	McLaurin,	Smith,	Wolcott.

So the first part of Mr. CAFFERY's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now before the Senate is upon the second portion of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY]. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 13, strike out the words "capable of supporting such parent or grandparent."

Mr. STEWART. How will the clause read with those words stricken out?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read as it would stand if amended as proposed.

The Secretary read as follows:

All persons physically capable and over 16 years of age who can not read or write the English language or some other language; but a person not so able to read or write, who is over 50 years of age and is the parent or grandparent of a qualified immigrant over 21 years of age and may accompany such immigrant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Chair is correct, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana eliminates the word "and" as well as the words "capable of supporting such parent or grandparent."

Mr. CAFFERY. Yes, sir; it eliminates the word "and."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will re-read the clause as proposed to be amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

All persons physically capable and over 16 years of age who can not read or write the English language or some other language; but a person not so able to read or write who is over 50 years of age and is a parent or grandparent of a qualified immigrant over 21 years of age may accompany such immigrant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the second part of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana.

The second part of Mr. CAFFERY's amendment was rejected; there being on a division—ayes 22, noes 32.

Mr. KYLE. At the end of line 19, page 2, I move to insert:

And any alien convicted of a felony or other infamous crime, or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, within one year after his arrival within the United States, shall be returned as by law provided, upon the completion of any sentence imposed upon him by the court before which he is convicted, the expense of such return to be paid as in said section, or by law, provided.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. LODGE and Mr. MILLS called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. As he is not present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. DEBOE (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY].

Mr. MARTIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE]. As he has not voted, I withhold my vote.

Mr. BERRY (when Mr. PASCO's name was called). The Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] is paired with the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER].

Mr. ALLEN. Did the Senator from Wyoming state that he is paired with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]?

Mr. WARREN. I am so informed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], who has charge of the pairs on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. ALLEN. I have been pairing the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER]. I announced the pair a few moments ago.

Mr. WARREN. If that arrangement has been made, and the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] is duly protected, I will record my vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WILSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO]. I will pair the Senator from Florida with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] and vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. GEAR] is paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. BUTLER. I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

OUACHITA RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. McENERY. I ask unanimous consent to take up House bill 5516. It is a bill for the extension of time to build a bridge across the Ouachita River.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will not object if the Chair will first lay the census bill before the Senate as the unfinished business. I see the chairman of the committee [Mr. CARTER] present.

Mr. CARTER. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 94) to provide for the Twelfth and subsequent censuses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now withdraw my objection to the bill the Senator from Louisiana wishes to call up.

Mr. CARTER. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the accommodation of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. McENERY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 5516.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 5516) to amend and reenact section 5 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the mayor and city council of Monroe and the police jury of the parish of Ouachita, La., to construct a traffic bridge across the Ouachita River opposite said city," approved February 8, 1897.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. FRYE. What is the status of that bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce this morning, the Chair understands.

Mr. FRYE. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Louisiana to that bill. It came over from the House of Representatives this morning, and was referred to the Committee on Commerce. The Committee on Commerce will take it up immediately, and undoubtedly will report it back, and then the Senator can call for its consideration.

Mr. MCENERY. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana withdraws his request for the present consideration of the bill.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to make a favorable report from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate upon a resolution submitted by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] on the 16th of December, 1897, and referred to the committee. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be, and the same is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer from time to time, as may be necessary, to report such hearings as may be had on bills pending before said committee, and to have the same printed for the use of the committee, and that such stenographer be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

COLUMBIAN COLLEGE.

Mr. BACON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill No. 2323, which has been reported favorably by the Committee on the District of Columbia. It is a bill to amend the charter of the Columbian College of this District, and it is important it should be passed within a reasonable time. I think there will be no discussion and no objection in connection with the bill, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2323) supplemental to the act of February 9, 1821, incorporating the Columbian College in the District of Columbia, and the acts amendatory thereof.

Mr. BACON. There are certain amendments necessary to be made in the dates by reason of the fact that the bill as originally drawn contemplated its passage before the 1st day of January. That date having now passed, it is necessary to insert another date. The amendments changing the dates are indicated upon the bill which I send to the desk.

Mr. HOAR. What institution is this? Is it the old Columbian College?

Mr. BACON. Yes, sir; it is.

Mr. HOAR. The law school?

Mr. BACON. No, not the law school, not the Columbian University, but the Columbian College. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] introduced the bill. I am simply representing the Committee on the District of Columbia in asking for its consideration and passage.

Mr. HOAR. This is a bill supplemental to the act incorporating the Columbian College—that is the title?

Mr. BACON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. Then it goes on to provide—

That the Columbian University, on and after the 1st day of January, 1898, etc.

What institution is this?

Mr. BACON. It is the Columbian College.

Mr. HOAR. Then if it is the Columbian College, why is it styled "the Columbian University?"

Mr. GALLINGER. It is known as the "Columbian University" at the present time.

Mr. BACON. It may be so; but the Senator from Maine can better answer than I can.

Mr. FRYE. I think the title has been changed since the original charter of incorporation. It is the Columbian University now.

Mr. HALE. It is the Columbian University now.

Mr. HOAR. Is it the old college that was up on the hill at the head of Fourteenth street, and is now at the corner of H and Fifteenth streets?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. HOAR. Does the old college charter require that all the trustees, or two-thirds of them, shall belong to one religious denomination? Is not this a change in the charter?

Mr. FRYE. That is part of it. It is a Baptist institution.

Mr. BACON. I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that there is nothing in the bill, if he will examine it, which will justify the teaching of the tenets of any particular denomination, nor, in fact, is there anything which will authorize the teaching of theology in any shape.

Mr. HOAR. My question is not whether it authorizes certain teachings, but whether a certain provision about the religious faith of the persons to whom it shall be committed is in the original act of incorporation, granted many years ago, or whether we are introducing that now for the first time?

Mr. FRYE. It is in the original act.

Mr. HOAR. Why was it put in here?

Mr. FRYE. Because there is an increase in the number of trustees.

Mr. HOAR. And the Senator reporting the bill thinks the provision is not in the original act. I should like to ask another question.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, before he passes from that, I think the Senator from Maine is mistaken in his response to the inquiry of the Senator from Massachusetts. I will ask for the reading of the papers which accompany the report, and in those papers there is a communication from the president of the college which will give the information the Senator desires.

Mr. HOAR. This is an institution of the highest standing. I was very intimately acquainted with two of its former presidents. I wish to ask if there is any denomination of Protestant Christians known by the name of the "Regular Baptist Church?" Is that part of the name of the regular Baptist denomination?

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator ask me that question?

Mr. HOAR. I know there is a denomination of the very highest character and standing in my part of the country and all over the country, I am quite sure, known as Baptists; but I never heard of a regular Baptist denomination before. Is this to distinguish them from some irregular Baptists?

Mr. BACON. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that the report be read, which contains a letter from the president of the college.

Mr. HOAR. I do not ask that, if the chairman of the committee will answer the question. I was led to put my first question because the title of the bill calls this institution "the Columbian College," whilst in the body of the bill it is called "the Columbian University," and one gentleman, who professes to know, said it was not the old college, while another said it was. I understand now this is simply an amendment of the ancient charter of an institution well known and eminent. I do not wish to interfere with anything the managers of that institution may think desirable, and I shall not ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I dislike very much to suggest any opposition to any plan of organization that the very respectable and learned gentlemen who manage this university ask, but I do think we ought to stop and pause a moment before we provide in any bill incorporating an educational institution in the District of Columbia that it shall be under the management of any particular denomination, or that the people constituting its board of trustees shall, two-thirds of them, be of a particular religious persuasion. I do not think it is necessary in this case, Mr. President. This institution, as I understand it, has always been more or less under the control of the Baptist Church, and it will continue to be, I have no doubt, without this provision in this act of incorporation; but we shall not stop here.

If we do this, we shall have a plan for a university here—I do not know but it is already in the plan for a university, though I think it is not—as to which it shall be required that two-thirds of the trustees and incorporators shall be Methodists; and pretty soon we shall have some institution here incorporated, or there will be a change asked in institutions already incorporated, in which it will be provided that two-thirds of the board of trustees shall be Episcopalians, and some other institution incorporated in which it shall be provided that two-thirds of the board of trustees shall be Catholics.

I do not think this feature has ever been introduced into any act of incorporation in the District of Columbia, and, with all respect to this institution and to the very learned and able gentlemen who manage it, I think it would be a very great mistake to enact any such provision. This is a university; it is not an academic institution solely; it may have—I do not know whether it has or not—a theological department.

Mr. BACON. It has not.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It certainly has a medical and a law department, and if there is any reason why young men who desire to be graduated in law or in medicine should have the board of trustees which manages the college in which they are educated Baptists, I can not see it, and the same is true of the academical department. I think that the adoption of this feature will lead us into serious difficulty before we get through, and, saying this, I say it with the highest respect for this institution and for its management and with the very highest respect for the Baptist Church in the United States.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, this is not an institution which derives any support from the funds of the Government or of the District of Columbia. It is, as I understand, an institution which has always been dependent for its support and maintenance upon the Baptist Church, and while the criticism of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] would be eminently correct if this were in the nature of a public institution deriving its support from public funds, I do not understand that it would be correct in a case where it is a college supported by a particular denomination.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BACON. The junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] first addressed me with a request, and I will yield first to him.

Mr. GALLINGER. I simply want to ask the Senator having charge of the bill if it has not been represented to the committee that one purpose in asking for this change is that the institution will be able to get larger donations and bequests than it otherwise could?

Mr. BACON. I have a letter to that effect which I was about to ask to have read in a moment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to ask the Senator this question: Is it proposed to require by law that this shall be a Baptist institution?

Mr. BACON. It is not.

Mr. CHANDLER. Would it be a violation of the law creating the institution if it should cease to become a Baptist institution?

Mr. BACON. The law does not require it to be a Baptist institution, but simply puts it under the control of that denomination.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the bill not say that two-thirds of the governing board shall belong to a particular denomination?

Mr. BACON. It does.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then we are establishing a corporation which must be a Baptist corporation by the laws of the United States. Is not that the establishment of religion by the United States?

Mr. BACON. I do not know what view has been taken about such a question as that in the District, but certainly in every State in this Union there are denominational colleges.

Mr. HOAR. I was about to ask the Senator whether that was not originally, if it is not now, the arrangement about Yale College?

Mr. BACON. I am not familiar with that; I do not know; but the objects of these several changes are set out in the letter from the president of the institution, and I will ask that it be read. Senators, if they will observe the reading of the letter, will see that there are substantial reasons why this should be done. It is necessary that the college should be under some responsible head; that somebody should have such charge, control, and responsibility that persons desiring to make donations can do so with a full knowledge that what they bestow will not be wasted by those who may be irresponsible.

I will ask, in conclusion, that the letter, which is very short, of the president of the institution, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, may be read, giving the reasons why he desired this bill to be passed. It is, as I have stated, a bill which was introduced by the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE COLUMBIAN UNIVERSITY,
Washington, D. C., December 9, 1897.

SIR: The annexed Senate bill, No. 223, entitled "A bill supplemental to the act of February 9, 1821, incorporating the Columbian College, in the District of Columbia, and the act amendatory thereof," was presented to the annual meeting of the corporation of the Columbian University, held at the university in June, 1897, and was unanimously adopted, and the president, with Mr. Charles W. Needham, a member of the board, were appointed a committee to present the matter to the committees of the Congress of the United States and ask its passage.

The provisions of the bill are: (a) To vest the control in a single board of trustees; (b) to change the term of office of trustees, and (c) to set forth in the charter, in express terms, what has always been the fact, that the university is under the control of the Baptist denomination.

The first and second amendments will, it is believed by the board, secure more active and efficient services on the part of the members of the board, for the reason that their office will be dependent somewhat upon their service and influence as trustees, whereas now they are elected for life without express power in the corporation to remove any trustee for any cause.

The third amendment will enable the university to secure endowments and contributions for its support and maintenance, which are now withheld because prospective donors are in doubt as to what permanent body is responsible for the conduct and maintenance of the institution. It is not the purpose to make the teaching or work of the institution denominational, but only to cast upon a body of Christian people the duty and obligation of supporting the university.

Very respectfully submitted.

BENAIAH L. WHITMAN,
President of the University.
CHAS. W. NEEDHAM,
Member of the Committee.

Hon. JAMES MCMILLAN,
Chairman of Senate Committee District of Columbia.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I thought at first that there might be some question about the reasonableness of this arrangement, but it seems to me, on reflection, that every Senator will see that this is no more than carrying out a universal American policy. Does anybody doubt that the different religious denominations are entitled to have their own churches incorporated, their religious societies, and parishes, as they are in all the States? In the next place, nearly all the universities and colleges not State universities and colleges are in the control of some religious denomination. That is the universal practice, and has been from the beginning, and our educational system has grown up in that way. Brown University, Amherst College, Williams College, and Yale University in New England are all institutions expressly restricted in that way.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is there any guarantee in their charters given by the States that they shall always remain under the control of particular denominations?

Mr. HOAR. They have, I suppose, in their charters as much guarantee as there is in this.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. HOAR. I know, or think I know, that Yale University was until a very recent period under an arrangement by which every member of its board of trustees was to be a Congregational minister in regular standing, and although I think they have let in a few laymen, a majority of that board is still required to be composed of Congregational ministers in regular standing. If I am mistaken, the Senator from Connecticut will correct me.

In the first place, we have no state church, not because we do not suppose the churches are essential to civilization and to the maintaining of an educated, religious people, but because we do better to commit to the various religious denominations the control of their own churches in freedom and in equality. That is the American policy. In the same way a large portion of the people of this country desire to have their children taught, not necessarily the tenets of their particular creed, but taught by persons who agree with them in religious opinion, and they will give money, as this letter says, which would not be given where there is no assurance of that kind. The courts carry out these trusts for churches and colleges with entire impartiality and entire equality among the different denominations.

When we are dealing with the District of Columbia in its local affairs, we deal with the people of the District as if we were the legislature of a State. It seems to me entirely reasonable that this religious body—to which it is unnecessary to say I do not belong—should be entitled to have its own college if it desires.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, line 4, before the date "1898," it is proposed to strike out "January" and insert "June;" in line 12 to strike out "30th day of December, 1897," and insert "31st day of May, 1898;" in line 16, after the words "day of," to strike out "January" and insert June;" and in line 27, after the words "day of," to strike out "January" and insert "June;" so as to make the section read:

That the Columbian University, on and after the 1st day of June, 1898, shall be under the management and control of a board of trustees, consisting of twenty-two members; the president of the university shall be ex officio a member of said board, and the remaining twenty-one shall be divided into three classes with seven members in each class: a majority of said board shall be residents of the District of Columbia, and seven members shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. That on or before the 31st day of May, 1898, a meeting of the trustees and overseers of said university shall be held, and said meeting shall elect twenty-one trustees, seven of whom shall be designated to serve from the 1st day of June, 1898, until the annual meeting in 1899; and seven from the same date until the annual meeting in 1900; and seven until the annual meeting in 1901. Two-thirds of said trustees, and also the president of the university, shall be members of regular Baptist churches; that is to say, members of churches of that denomination of Protestant Christians now usually known and recognized under the name of the regular Baptist denomination; said trustees so elected shall serve for the periods mentioned and until their successors are elected. That on the 1st day of June, 1898, the terms of office of the present trustees and overseers shall cease and determine, and thereupon the control and management of said university, its property and trusts, shall vest in the board of trustees elected as hereinabove provided and their successors.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUIS A. YORKE.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. 2753) for the relief of Louis A. Yorke.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to set aside the action of the board by which Passed Asst. Paymaster Louis A. Yorke was examined for promotion, and authorizes the President to appoint him to the office to which he would have been promoted but for said action, and to retire him in that grade as of the date he was wholly retired.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BIMETALLIC NEGOTIATIONS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have in my hand the correspondence respecting the proposals on currency made by the special envoys from the United States, alluded to in the speech of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], and also in the annual message of the President of the United States. No order has been made to print this as a document, and I ask that such an order be made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire to print the proposals as a document? The Chair hears none, and that is the order.

Mr. GEAR subsequently said: I move that 5,000 copies of the document filed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] be printed in place of the ordinary number.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa refers to the correspondence respecting the proposals on currency?

Mr. GEAR. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa moves that 5,000 copies instead of the usual number of the document referred to be printed for the use of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

RECEIVERS OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2934) to amend section 2234 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know the object of the bill. Let the report be read.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I think I can explain the bill without having the report read, if the Senator from Missouri will consent.

Under the present condition, receivers of public moneys are not responsible under their bonds for any moneys received from the sale of Indian lands, and the Interior Department finds itself very much embarrassed as a result. A request has come from the Secretary of the Interior for this legislation. It is simply an amendment of the existing statute.

Mr. ALLISON. Are Indian lands sold by receivers?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. In several instances large sums of money have been received by receivers of public moneys for which they are not accountable under their bonds, and there has been a decision of the court to that effect. Perhaps it would be well to have the letter of the Secretary of the Interior read.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have glanced over his letter. Let it be printed in the RECORD, so as not to consume time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, December 22, 1897.

SIR: In my annual report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, at pages 19 and 20 of said report attention is called to the decision rendered September 22, 1896, by the United States district court for Idaho, in the case of the United States vs. George B. Rogers and Charles W. Berryman, sureties on the bond of Charles W. Danielson, receiver of public moneys at Blackfoot, Idaho, which decision was affirmed by the circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit July 1, 1897, holding "that it is not a part of the duties of registers and receivers to sell Indian lands and that the proceeds of sales of such lands are not public moneys of the United States, but are trust funds for which the sureties on receivers' bonds are not liable or responsible to the United States if their principals fail to pay over and account for the same."

That under said decision it is possible for registers and receivers of local land offices, if the receipts from the sale of Indian lands are sufficient, to become entitled to the maximum compensation of $3,000 in addition to the compensation allowed them by the law for the sale of public lands, so that their compensation for both classes of lands may reach $6,000.

The statement is also made that Indian lands are being disposed of at the present time at ten or more land offices, the proceeds of which amount to hundreds of thousands of dollars yearly, for which the sureties on the bonds of receivers are not liable, and in order to secure and protect the interests of the United States it is recommended that section 2234 of the Revised Statutes be amended by adding to it, as it now stands, the following:

"Who shall have charge of and attend to the sale of the public and Indian lands within their respective districts, as provided for by law and official regulations; and receivers shall be accountable under their official bonds for the proceeds of such sales and for all fees, commissions, or other moneys received by them under any provision of law or official regulation."

The attention of your committee is called to this recommendation at this time with the request that it take such action in the premises as may result in the speedy enactment of the legislation recommended. I desire to say in this connection that the attention of the Committee on Indian Affairs has also been called to this matter and a similar recommendation and request made, and I have also addressed a similar communication to the chairman of the House Committee on the Public Lands.

Very respectfully,

C. N. BLISS, Secretary.

Hon. H. C. HANSBROUGH,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands, United States Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MUSCOGEE COAL AND RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. BAKER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2858) authorizing the Muscogee Coal and Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory and Oklahoma Territory, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move, after the word "alter," in line 2, section 11, to insert the words "or repeal."

Mr. BAKER. There is no objection to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the section so as to read:

That Congress may at any time amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE CENSUS.

Mr. CARTER. I should like to make an announcement. I desire to state, for the information of Senators who may be concerned in the consideration of the census bill, Senate bill 94, that immediately after the disposition, at an early hour to-morrow, of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, I shall ask that the census bill be taken up for consideration and that its consideration be continued before the Senate until it is finally disposed of. It is important that this legislation shall be disposed of in some manner.

Mr. WHITE. I will inquire of the Senator from Montana whether it is the intention to displace the executive business with which we have to deal with the bill to which he refers? The reason why I make the suggestion is that it is better to know in advance, for convenience simply. I have no objection, and do not care about it particularly one way or the other.

Mr. CARTER. In that behalf I will state to the Senator from California that there is no disposition to displace the executive business, but the fact is that the census bill is now pending as the unfinished business before the Senate.

Mr. WHITE. And the Senator desires that it shall so continue?

Mr. CARTER. The committee regards it of sufficient importance to press its consideration until it is finally disposed of.

Mr. WHITE. I understand.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to make an observation respecting the suggestion made by the Senator from Montana. The census bill, so called, is now the unfinished business and will remain so, but the rule of the Senate is that when appropriation bills are ready the unfinished business, by unanimous consent, gives way. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Montana to the fact that it is the intention of the Committee on Appropriations to-morrow, or certainly the next morning, to call up the regular pension appropriation bill, and I hope there will be no arrangement which will interfere with the appropriation bills when they are ready, because I shall feel obliged to make objection unless that is thoroughly understood.

Mr. CARTER. I will state for the information of the Senator from Iowa that I began my remarks by stating that the urgent deficiency appropriation bill would first be disposed of to-morrow, as I understood.

Mr. ALLISON. I heard the remarks of the Senator; but he stated that after the consideration of that bill had been concluded he wished that no other business of a legislative character should intervene until the census bill was disposed of.

Mr. CARTER. That remark, of course, must be taken in view of the regular rule of the Senate, which gives the right of way to appropriation bills.

Mr. ALLISON. I appreciate the importance of pressing the census bill.

Mr. GORMAN. I could not hear what the Senator from Iowa stated about pressing the pension appropriation bill to-morrow. Am I to understand that the pension appropriation bill is to be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Montana stated that the urgent deficiency bill would be considered to-morrow, and that afterwards he desired the Senate to take up the census bill and continue its consideration until disposed of, which, of course, by implication at least, would suggest that appropriation should not intervene. I made the suggestion that general legislative business should always be subordinate to the consideration of appropriation bills when they are ready, in accordance with the uniform usage of the Senate.

If the Senator from Maryland has any suggestions as respects his own convenience or otherwise, of course I shall be glad to hear him.

Mr. GORMAN. It is very unusual and extraordinary at this early period in the session to press the appropriation bills. I think it is without example in the history of Congress, in all probability, and what we desire—I am sure the Senator from Iowa will agree to it—is that there shall be some understanding as to the time when these important bills will be pressed.

The Senator in charge of the census bill, as it is the unfinished business, desires to further its consideration. That discussion may go on and the bill may be disposed of. It is fair that we should know. Matters are to be considered in secret session which may continue for a week. If it is the understanding that everything is to give way to such discussion of the appropriation bills as possibly may take place, we ought to have at least a day or two days' notice of it.

I suggest to the Senator from Iowa, if it will suit his convenience, that, other than as to the urgent deficiency bill, for which there may be some pressing need, the appropriation bills ought not to be taken up until next week.

Mr. ALLISON. No one knows better than does the Senator from Maryland that it is the practice of the Senate to take up the appropriation bills, with deference to the convenience of Senators, as soon as they are ready for consideration. I do not think, with all respect to the Senator from Maryland, that at such a stage of the session it has ever before occurred that so little has been done in the Senate with respect to appropriation bills as at the present session. I hope during this week we will conclude the consideration of the pension appropriation bill, or at least commence it.

Mr. GORMAN. When do I understand the Senator will call it up—to-morrow?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] is in charge of the bill, and he desires the Senate to take it up to-morrow, but if any Senator prefers that its consideration shall be postponed for a day or two, certainly that will be done.

Mr. GORMAN. I desire that it shall be postponed. I do not think we are ready to take it up to-morrow or the next day. Therefore I suggest to the Senator, and that was my object in interrupting the Senator from Iowa——

Mr. PERKINS. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me? The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] gave notice that to-morrow, immediately after the morning business, he would call up the urgent deficiency appropriation bill. Would it be agreeable to the Senator from Maryland to consider the pension appropriation bill Thursday?

Mr. GORMAN. Do I understand the Senator to say that he will call up the pension appropriation bill Thursday?

Mr. PERKINS. If it is agreeable to the Senator from Maryland; if not, at a later date.

DISPOSITION OF ABANDONED IMPORTED MERCHANDISE.

Mr. FRYE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3132) to provide for the disposition of abandoned imported merchandise.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine?

Mr. ALLEN. What is the bill?

Mr. FRYE. It is a bill which simply requires that when property has been abandoned on account of its being spoiled, like a cargo of fruit——

Mr. ALLEN. It is not an appropriation bill?

Mr. FRYE. No; it is not an appropriation bill. It requires the collector of customs to designate where fruit shall be thrown away.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the consideration of the bill may be postponed until to-morrow. I desire to look into it.

Mr. FRYE. The only change——

Mr. ALLISON. That may be true, but I desire to look into it. The bill is an amendment of the tariff act of 1890, and I desire to see the effect of it before it is passed.

Mr. FRYE. The only change made in the bill is a requirement that the collector of customs shall designate the place where the abandoned property shall be deposited. That is all.

Mr. ALLISON. It will take but a moment to pass the bill.

Mr. FRYE. The bill comes from the Treasury Department.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a matter I desire to look into.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the present consideration of the bill.

AMERICAN REGISTER FOR THE STEAMER NAVAHOE.

Mr. FRYE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3053) to provide an American register for the steamer Navahoe.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to have the Senator from Maine state the reason for giving this foreign vessel an American register.

Mr. FRYE. Because in American shipyards there was more than three-quarters of her entire value put upon her; and the only reason why the Secretary of the Treasury did not give her a register was that she was not wrecked within 3 miles of the shore.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MATES ON RIVER AND OCEAN STEAMERS.

Mr. CAFFERY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2781) to amend section 4440 of the Revised Statutes, authorizing the licensing of mates on river and ocean steamers.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The amendments were, on page 1, after line 5, to insert:

On page 2, after line 22, to insert:

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments may be concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendments made by the House of Representatives.

The amendments were concurred in.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twelve minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 18, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

REGULATION OF CEMETERIES, ETC.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, this is the day set apart by unanimous consent for the consideration of District business. On behalf of the District Committee, I desire to call up sundry bills. I will state for the information of the House that our committee does not intend to consume any considerable time to-day. I believe that the bills, or a majority of them, which we shall bring up were very carefully considered in the last Congress; and I think none of them will provoke debate to any extent. I make this explanation as there is other business to come before the House.

In the first place, I call up the bill (S. 467) for the regulation of cemeteries and the disposal of dead bodies in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this act no person or persons shall lay out any new cemetery, or part of any cemetery, within the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, nor in said District within one mile and a half from the boundaries of said city; no person shall in said District lay out any cemetery, or part of any cemetery, within less than 200 yards of any dwelling house except with the written consent of the owner, lessee, and occupier of such house, nor without a permit to do so from the Commissioners of said District.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the owner or owners of any cemetery or cemeteries in said District to inclose such cemetery or cemeteries in said District with good and sufficient walls or fences to prevent entrance thereto or exit therefrom except by gates provided for that purpose. Such cemetery or cemeteries shall, if required by the Commissioners of said District, be underdrained to such a depth as will prevent water remaining in any grave or vault therein.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the owner or owners of any cemetery or cemeteries in said District to divide the area to be used for graves into lots of reasonable size, to be permanently designated by conspicuous marks, so that the position of each may be readily determined; each lot to be duly numbered; a plat of such cemetery showing the area so divided, the division into lots, and the number of each such lot shall be filed in the office of the surveyor of said District; the grave spaces hereafter laid out for the burial of persons above 10 years of age to be at least 8 feet by 3 feet, and those for the burial of children under 10 years of age at least 6 feet by 2 feet, or, if preferred by said owner or owners, one-half the measurement of the adult grave space, namely, 4 feet by 3 feet.

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the owner or owners of any cemetery or cemeteries in said District to cause to be kept in the office of the superintendent or person in charge of such cemetery or cemeteries a register showing the number of each lot, the name, age, cause of death, and date of burial of each person or persons buried in any such lot or grave space, and the number of the burial permit authorizing such burial; in cases of disinterment said register shall show the date of such disinterment and the number of the official permit therefor opposite the name of the person whose remains are disinterred; such register shall be, at all times, open to inspection by duly authorized representatives of the health department and of the police department of said District.

SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of the superintendent or person in charge of any cemetery, or other place for the disposal of dead bodies of human beings in the District of Columbia, to register his or her name at the office of the health department of said district, giving full name, residence, and place of business, and in case of removal from one place to another in said District to make change in such register accordingly.

SEC. 6. That no dead body of any human being, or any part of such body, shall, in said District, be removed from place to place, interred, disinterred, or in any manner disposed of without a permit for such removal, interment, disinterment, or disposal granted by the health officer of said District, nor otherwise than in accordance with the terms of said permit; permits for the removal, interment, or disposal to be issued upon the presentation of a proper death certificate, signed by a physician, registered at the health department of said District, who has attended the deceased during his or her last illness, or by the coroner of said District or his deputy, or by the proper municipal, county, or State authorities at the place where the death occurred; permits for disinterment (including permission to reinter or transport the body disinterred) to be issued upon the written application of the nearest relative or the legal representative of the deceased; and no superintendent or other person in charge of any cemetery in said District, or other place for the disposal of dead bodies, shall assist in, or assent to, or allow any such interment, disinterment, or disposition to be made in such cemetery or place until permit shall be given as aforesaid. It shall be the duty of every such superintendent or other person who shall receive any such permit aforesaid to indorse thereon the date of interment, disinterment, or disposal, and to preserve, sign, and return the same to the health officer of said District before 6 o'clock p. m. of the Saturday following the day of burial, disinterment, or disposal.

SEC. 7. That no dead body, or part of the dead body, of any human being shall be in any manner carried or conveyed from, in, to, or through said District by any person or by means of any boat, vessel, car, stage, or other vehicle, or by any public or private conveyance, without a permit therefor first granted by the health officer of said District: Provided, That bodies or parts of dead bodies aforesaid, except such as have died of Asiatic cholera, yellow fever, typhus fever, smallpox (including varioloid), leprosy, the plague, diphtheria, or scarlet fever, may be brought into said District, or carried through the same in transit, upon a permit of the proper municipal, county, or State authorities of the place at which such person died; whenever the remains of any deceased person have been conveyed, transferred, or removed beyond the limits of said District, it shall be the duty of the person or agent or officer of the corporation having charge of such conveyance, transfer, or removal to detach, date, sign, and return to the health officer the coupon attached to the permit by said health officer authorizing such conveyance, transfer, or removal before 6 o'clock p. m. of the Saturday following the day of such conveyance, transfer, or removal of said remains.

SEC. 8. That it shall be the duty of any person or persons having custody or control of the dead body of any human being, or any part of such body, to report in writing, or cause to be reported in writing, to the health officer of said District within forty-eight hours after the death of the deceased, the name of said deceased and the location of the body or part thereof; no such body or part thereof shall be kept in said District in such manner as to give rise to any offensive odors to the annoyance of any person or persons in the neighborhood or to the public, nor so as to be exposed to the public view; nor shall any such body or part thereof be permitted by the person or persons having custody or control of it to remain unburied for a longer period than one week after death without permission of the health officer unless it has been cremated or deposited in the vault of some cemetery; nor shall any person publicly exhibit in said District, for pay or otherwise, any dead body of any human being, or any part of such body, without a permit from the health officer of said District so to do, except such exhibition be in connection with some Government museum or with some institution of learning permanently located in said District.

SEC. 9. That no person shall bury or cause to be buried within said District the body or part of the body of any deceased person except in such grounds as are now known and used as public or private burial grounds, or such as shall hereafter be designated by the Commissioners of said District and authorized by them to be used as such: Provided, That no cemetery shall hereafter be established within one mile and a half of the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 10. That no body shall be buried in said District in any vault unless the coffin be separately entombed in properly cemented stone or brick work, so as to render such vault airtight; such vault, after having been sealed, shall not be opened within ten years; no body shall be temporarily deposited in any vault for a longer period than one month, unless such body is in a hermetically sealed metallic case, nor in any instance for a longer period than one year.

SEC. 11. That no grave in said District shall be reopened, except for the purpose of disinterment, within ten years after the burial of a person above 12 years of age, or within eight years after the burial of a child under 12 years of age, unless the grave has been, in the first instance, of sufficient depth to permit subsequent interments, in which case a layer of earth of not less than 1 foot thick shall be left undisturbed over the previously buried coffin, unless such coffin has been separately entombed in properly cemented stone or brick work; but if on reopening any grave the soil be found to be offensive, such soil shall not be disturbed; in no case shall a grave be opened in which has been buried the body of any person who has died of Asiatic cholera, yellow fever, typhus fever, smallpox (including varioloid), leprosy, the plague, tetanus, diphtheria, or scarlet fever.

SEC. 12. That no coffin shall be buried in said District so that any part thereof is within less than 4 feet of the ordinary level of the ground, unless it contains the body of a child under 12 years of age, when it shall not be less than 3 feet below that level.

SEC. 13. That no person shall, in the District of Columbia, build or maintain a crematory or other device for destroying human bodies except within the limits of some duly established cemetery in said District, unless such person or persons has in writing the consent of the owners of more than one-half of the property within a radius of 200 feet from the place where such crematory is to be erected and maintained and a permit from the Commissioners of said District for the erection and maintenance of such crematory or other device; such permit to be for a term of years, not exceeding five, to be specified therein: Provided, That this section shall not apply to such crematories or other devices for destroying human bodies as may have been erected and are in operation at the time of the passage of this act.

SEC. 14. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to cremate or otherwise destroy the dead body or part of the dead body of any human being in said District before the issue of the burial permit by the health officer of said District, and then only when said permit is countersigned by the coroner of said District authorizing such cremation or destruction. It shall be unlawful for any person or persons to embalm, inject, or by any similar method preserve the dead body or part of the dead body of any human being in said District within four hours after death before the issue of the death certificate; and in case the death is believed to be due to other than natural cause, or the cause thereof is unknown, such embalming, injecting, or preserving shall at no time be done unless such death certificate has been signed or approved by the coroner of said District.

SEC. 15. That any person who shall violate or aid and abet in violating any of the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction thereof by competent judicial authority, be punished for each offense by a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $200, or by imprisonment for not less than seven nor more than ninety days in the jail of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 16. That prosecutions under this act shall be in the police court of the District of Columbia, in the name of said District, on information signed by the attorney of said District or one of his assistants: Provided, That any person or persons tried under this act shall have the privilege, when demanded, of a trial by jury as in other jury cases in said police court.

SEC. 17. That nothing in this act shall be construed to interfere with or prevent the disinterment of any body when such disinterment is ordered by one of the justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, or by the coroner of said District, for judicial purposes; the provisions of this act shall not be held to interfere with the disposal of the ashes of bodies which have been cremated.

SEC. 18. That the provisions of this act shall not be applied to prevent the immediate removal of bodies from Graceland Cemetery, as required by "An act to prohibit the interment of bodies in Graceland Cemetery, in the District of Columbia," approved August 3, 1894.

SEC. 19. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, this is one of a number of bills which, coming from the health department, were reported and passed in this House in the Fifty-fourth Congress. After being prepared at that time by the health officer of the District, the bill was submitted to the Commissioners and by them to the medical societies of the District. Frequent conferences were held upon the bill. The superintendents of the several cemeteries were called into conference. Amendments were suggested and considered very carefully, and the bill passed the House without material objection, but too late for consideration by the Senate. In this Congress the bill has been reintroduced into the Senate in precisely the form in which it previously passed the House; and it is now reported without amendment.

The necessity for this proposed legislation is fully explained in the report of the committee. The report embraces letters from the health department, but as those letters are of considerable length I hardly think the reading is necessary. If there is no desire to debate the bill, I ask for a vote.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I have tried to get a copy of this bill, but have not succeeded. I noticed, however, during the reading that the bill provides both minimum and maximum penalties for certain violations of its provisions. I suggest to the gentlemen in charge of this bill that the later practice in framing punitive statutes is to omit provision for a minimum penalty and provide simply that the punishment shall not exceed a certain maximum. I think that which is now the general practice in this respect should be followed in our legislation here. Where a minimum penalty is provided it frequently happens that the judge or the jury hesitates about conviction, because, although the circumstances of the case justify some punishment, even the minimum prescribed by the law seems to be excessive. I suggest to the gentlemen that an amendment of the kind which I propose can do no harm and in certain cases may operate beneficially.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. There will be no objection on the part of the committee to the amendment suggested.

Mr. TERRY. I move to strike out in the bill the provisions for minimum penalties and retain only the maximum penalties.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. In order to make the gentleman's suggestion more specific, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 4 and 5 of section 15 strike out the words "less than $25 nor;" and in line 6 strike out "less than seven nor;" so that the clause will read, "by a fine of not more than $200, or by imprisonment for not more than ninety days," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DISPOSAL OF CERTAIN REFUSE.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I call up for present consideration the bill (S. 1258) to regulate, in the District of Columbia, the disposal of certain refuse, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to maintain, upon any original lot or subdivisional lot, situated on any street in the District of Columbia, where there is a public sewer and water main available for the use of such lot, any system of disposal of human excreta except by means of water-closets connected with such sewer and water main.

SEC. 2. That no privy shall be constructed or maintained in said District, every part of which is not at least 5 feet from the line of any adjoining lot, 2 feet from any street or public or private passageway, and 10 feet from any building used or intended to be used for dwelling purposes, or wherein persons are employed or intended to be employed in any trade or business; nor within 50 feet of any well or spring used or likely to be used by man as a source of water for drinking or domestic purposes.

SEC. 3. That every privy in said District shall be constructed and maintained in such a manner and position as to afford ready means of access thereto for the purpose of cleaning the same, and to admit of the removal of the contents from the premises whereon such privy is situated to the public street without being carried through any dwelling house or building where persons are employed in any trade or business; and said privy shall be so constructed as to prevent undue exposure of the occupants thereof, and provided with a sufficient opening for ventilation, as near the top as practicable, communicating directly with the external air. The floor thereof shall be paved with some nonabsorbent material, and constructed so that it shall be in every part at a height of not less than 4 inches above the level of the surface of the surrounding ground and have a fall or incline toward the door of the privy of half an inch to the foot. Said privy shall be provided with a suitable receptacle or suitable receptacles for filth, which may be movable or fixed, which shall have suitable covers and be kept closed therewith whenever practicable.

SEC. 4. That whenever any privy in said District is provided with a movable receptacle there shall be constructed over the whole area of the space immediately beneath the seat of the privy a floor at a height of not less than 4 inches above the level of the surface of the adjoining ground, said floor and the whole extent of each side of such space between the floor and the seat to be constructed of some nonabsorbent material. The seat, the aperture therein, and the space beneath must be of such dimensions as to admit of the removable receptacle for filth being placed or fitted beneath the seat in such manner and position as may effectually prevent the deposit of any filth elsewhere than in the receptacle. The seat shall be so constructed that the whole or sufficient part of it may be readily removed or adjusted in such a manner as to afford adequate access to the space beneath for the purpose of cleaning the same and removing the receptacle therefrom or placing or fitting it therein. Such receptacle for filth shall not exceed in capacity 2 cubic feet, and shall be made of metal, water-tight, and provided with handles, and so constructed that it may be closed with a cover and made air-tight at the time of its removal. Such receptacle shall at all times be kept in good repair.

SEC. 5. That whenever any privy in said District is provided with a fixed receptacle, the bottom and floor of said privy shall be in every part at least 4 inches above the level of the surface of the adjoining ground, and adequate means of access must be provided for the purpose of cleansing the receptacle and removing the filth therefrom. Said receptacle shall not exceed in capacity 8 cubic feet, and shall be constructed of such material or materials and in such a manner as to prevent any absorption by any part of it of any filth deposited therein or any escape of its contents by leakage or otherwise, except in process of cleaning. Said receptacle shall be maintained at all times in good repair.

SEC. 6. That no person shall, in said District, deposit in any receptacle for filth in any privy any substance except human fecal matter, urine, and liquid house refuse, except for the purpose of disinfecting or deodorizing; and it shall be the duty of the occupant or occupants of any premises on which a privy is located, or, if such premises be unoccupied, of the owner or owners thereof, to keep the same and the contents thereof disinfected and deodorized at all times.

SEC. 7. That no occupant of any premises in said District whereon is situated any privy, or, if such premises be unoccupied, no owner or owners thereof, shall permit the approaches to such privy, the walls, floors, seats, or fittings thereof, to be in such a state or condition as to be a nuisance or annoyance to any person or persons, for want of proper cleansing thereof, nor allow any receptacle for filth used in connection with any privy to be filled within less than 4 inches of the top thereof.

SEC. 8. That no part of the contents of any privy shall, in said District, be removed therefrom, nor shall the same be transported through or over any streets or highways, except as the same shall be removed and transported by means of some air-tight apparatus, pneumatic or other process, so as to prevent the contents from being agitated or exposed to the open air during the process of such removal or transportation.

SEC. 9. That every building in said District used for dwelling purposes, or where persons are employed or intended to be employed in any trade or business, shall be provided with sufficient and suitable privy accommodations, having regard to the number of persons employed in or in attendance at such building; and also where persons of both sexes are employed or intended to be employed, or in attendance, with sufficient, suitable, and separate privy accommodations for persons of each sex. It shall be unlawful for any owner or agent to put any person or persons in possession of any building, or any part thereof, not provided with privy accommodations as aforesaid, except a watchman for the purpose of guarding such building or part thereof.

SEC. 10. That no person shall, in said District, deposit any human fecal matter in any place except in some properly constructed privy or water-closet, nor shall any person, having removed the contents, or any part thereof, of any privy in the District of Columbia, deposit it in any place other than such as may be approved by the health officer of said District.

SEC. 11. That it shall be unlawful for any person other than such as shall be authorized by the health office of said District to clean for pay any privy therein. Said authority shall be granted by said health officer upon application to any person who is properly equipped as to apparatus and means of disposal for performing the work to be done.

SEC. 12. That no person shall, in said District, erect or maintain a privy without having secured from the health officer of said District a permit so to do. Such permits shall be issued subject to the conditions of this act upon written applications without cost, shall be numbered consecutively, and shall describe the location where each privy is to be maintained.

SEC. 13. That no person shall, in said District, construct or maintain any system of sewage disposal by means of broad irrigation, subsoil irrigation, or otherwise, except upon a permit issued by the Commissioners of said District. Applications for said permit shall be in writing to said Commissioners, and shall be accompanied by detailed plans of the system which it is proposed to construct and maintain; and no permit shall be issued under this section until said Commissioners are satisfied that said system can be maintained without nuisance or danger to public health.

SEC. 14. That any person who shall violate or aid or abet in violating any of the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $50, or by imprisonment in the jail of the District of Columbia for not exceeding fifteen days.

SEC. 15. That prosecutions under this act shall be in the police court of the District of Columbia, in the name of the District of Columbia, on information signed by the attorney for said District or one of his assistants: Provided, That any person or persons tried under this act shall have the privilege, when demanded, of a trial by jury, as in other jury cases in said police court.

SEC. 16. SEC. 18. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, this bill, like the one last under consideration, originated with the health department of the District of Columbia. The bill was carefully considered in the last House and, after the adoption of certain amendments, was passed without objection and sent to the Senate, but too late for consideration in that body. The bill is now presented here in precisely the same form in which it was passed by the House in the last Congress. It has passed through all the ordinary channels—the District Commissioners, the health officers, and the medical societies of the District—and is now unanimously recommended by our committee.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BEQUEST OF PETER VON ESSEN.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I now call up the bill (S. 468) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to accept the bequest of the late Peter Von Essen for the use of the public white schools of that portion of said District formerly known as Georgetown.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and required to accept the bequest of $12,057.24 bequeathed by the will of the late Peter Von Essen to the late corporation of Georgetown for the use of the free white schools of said town, and which sum has been decreed to be turned over to said Commissioners, as the successors of the said corporation, by the supreme court of the District of Columbia in equity cause numbered 5238; and that said Commissioners be, and they are hereby, required to distribute the said funds among the heirs of the said Peter Von Essen, deceased, share and share alike, upon satisfactory proof of such heirship.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill was reported to the House by myself from the Committee on the District of Columbia. It is a bill that was passed in the last Congress both by the Senate and the House, unanimously, I believe. It went to the President in the closing hours of Congress, and we think that want of time was alone the cause of its failure. It was not approved by him, as we believe, for that reason. At any rate, it did not meet any adverse action. The Senate, at the extra session, passed it again, and now it is here reported from the District Committee unanimously for the consideration of the House. I suppose there is no objection to it.

The committee recommend an amendment to the caption, which, I take it, will be voted on after the passage of the bill. If any gentleman desires to ask any question with reference to the matter, I will endeavor to answer him.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will yield to the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like the gentleman to make some explanation of the bill, as to why this gift or donation should be refused in this manner—apparently accepted, but still refused, under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The bill was drawn originally, I will state to the gentleman from Iowa, for the acceptance of the donation by the Commissioners for the schools. But it was modified in its design, and that is the reason of the change in the caption of the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is not that really the important thing? This is a gift donated to the free white schools of Georgetown. It seems that there would be no difficulty about accepting such a donation.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The facts are, that an old gentleman named Von Essen died in Georgetown some time ago—soon after the war—a man who had been the keeper of a saloon in that town. Shortly before his death he made a will in which he undertook to give a certain portion of the estate to his children and grandchildren, and the residue of the estate was to be devoted to the establishment of "free white schools" in Georgetown. When the will became operative there were no free white schools in Georgetown. The schools had become merged in those of the District of Columbia, and were taken care of by annual appropriations made by Congress for the benefit of the general school system of the District of Columbia. There was no distinction, so far as the appropriation of money is concerned, between the white schools and the colored schools.

The Von Essen estate was in litigation for some time afterwards, and finally when it was settled about $12,000 was left, representing the residue of the estate. This money was turned over to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in an effort to execute the provisions of the will. But inasmuch as there were no "free white schools" in Georgetown to turn it over to, and as the Commissioners still have this fund in hand, it is proper for the Congress to devise some means by which the funds can be disposed of.

When the will was written, quite a number of years ago, there were free white schools in Georgetown under the system of schools then in operation in that city. The schools there were kept up by voluntary donations by men of wealth, people who were able to make such contributions. But, as I said before, this Von Essen fund could not be paid over under the provisions of the will and was in the hands of the Commissioners, while the schools themselves had become a part of the public-school system of the District of Columbia. And hence, the Commissioners being at a loss for the necessary power to dispose of the money, as they could only use it technically under the law for the purpose contemplated in the will without some action on the part of Congress, this legislation is proper and necessary.

Of course, Congress can take possession of the money, or can order the Commissioners to pay it into the fund for the District of Columbia generally, and let it go to the schools, white and black alike, of the District. Or they can direct the Commissioners to do what we think ought to be done with it, give it to the poor children or the grandchildren of this old man, Von Essen, who are in need of it. The bequest having failed, there being no way by which it can be carried out literally, it becomes a question whether that money shall go to the schools, white and black alike, of the District of Columbia or be turned over to the children or grandchildren of this old man.

Congress at its last session, as I have said, passed the bill unanimously through both houses. The Senate passed it at the extra session, and it is now before us for our consideration, recommended by the Committee on the District. That is about the condition of the matter and all of the facts as I understand them.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to ask the gentleman another question, whether there are any free schools in Georgetown that are for white children alone, or where they alone are taught?

Mr. RICHARDSON. My understanding of the school law is that the schools are separate, white and black, that they are accommodated in different buildings. There is no separate law.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then there are free white schools in Georgetown?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir; there are; but these schools are cared for by appropriations from the Treasury, half by the Government of the United States and half by the revenues of the District of Columbia; and there is no distinction in the appropriation made by Congress for the schools of the District between whites and blacks. The giving of this contribution to any one of the white schools would make a distinction that is not anywhere found in the laws covering the regulation of schools and their appropriations in the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEPBURN. Would it not be possible to devote this to the library, for instance, of the particular schools that are free to children in the District of Columbia—for white children alone, under the terms of the bequest?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think Congress can make that disposition of the fund.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then what are the special reasons for giving this contribution up or donating it to other purposes?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The only reason in the world is, as I have stated, that the appropriations from the Treasury of the United States and the District of Columbia, jointly, are for the schools, white and black alike. Congress, of course, can make a distinction, if it desires to do so, and make this fund applicable alone to the schools for white children. But we have no such law in existence. You can make one, but it would be a distinction as between the two classes of schools where no such distinction now exists.

We could make this distinction if we wished, and appropriate it to any particular white school. The gentleman says, "Why not give it to a library for some of these schools?" Well, we can do that. It is perfectly competent for Congress to donate this to a library, but it seems to me that these children, who are poor, as the proof shows, these grandchildren of Mr. Von Essen, present a higher claim to Congress, and it occurred to the committee that they presented a higher claim than the Treasury of the United States does, inasmuch as the Treasury has ample funds for the education of the children of the District of Columbia without resorting to this poor pittance of $12,000, which will thereby be taken from these poor people. We thought that inasmuch as Congress had to legislate, the money should go to them rather than to the Treasury of the United States. Of course, if Congress wants to make the will operative by giving the money to a library that can be done. It is perfectly competent.

Mr. HUNTER. In view of the failure of the bequest, would not the money, under the laws of descent, go to these grandchildren anyway?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well, that is contended for by my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS], who is a very able lawyer and a member of the committee, who was not on the committee in the last Congress. That question was not raised then. But whether that is true or not, if we have got to legislate at all (and we have to do it in order to get the money out of the hands of the Commissioners), it occurred to the committee that as between the Treasury of the United States and these poor children, we would take the side of the children.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa as much time as he desires.

Mr. HENDERSON. My attention was brought to this matter in the last Congress by a lady from my State who knew the heirs who are interested in this matter, who knew of their poverty and their distress. I was very glad to see the bill pass in the last Congress, as I think it did without a dissenting vote, after it was explained; but a matter soon goes out of one's mind, and I have just been looking at the report to refresh my memory again. It seems that this testator, this old Mr. Von Essen, had two children at the time of his death—a boy and a girl. The boy was profligate, dissipated, and Mr. Von Essen cut him off with an annuity, making this bequest for the schools of the corporation of Georgetown, and leaving the rest of his fortune to his daughter.

When the thing was settled up, it appeared, as it appears in a good many cases, that there was no fortune to be left to the daughter. Now there are only surviving the children of that daughter, the grandchildren of Mr. Von Essen, as is certified here in a letter from one W. H. Gaskins, dated January 1, 1897. One of these heirs is working for $7.50 a week and supporting a wife and four children. The other grandson was, at the time of the writing of that letter, working for Wimsatt & Uhler; one being a teamster and the other a mechanic. They are in oppressed circumstances, as is found by the committee, and as this lady showed to me. It will be seen from the report that leading citizens of Georgetown have, with great unanimity, asked that this money go where equity would seem to point, to these two remaining grandchildren of Mr. Von Essen. The Commissioners of the District have favored this disposition.

You understand the point, as explained by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], that when the corporation of Washington was formed the corporation of Georgetown was wiped out. There was no corporation of Georgetown to which this money could go, and the money is now in the Treasury. Nobody has had the use of it, and here are two descendants, sober, industrious, hard-working people, who need this money; and it seems to me that a sense of justice points clearly to our duty to give it to these descendants of the daughter of Mr. Von Essen, who was a worthy person, and whose descendants seem to be of the same character. There is but one sentiment in the District of Columbia in regard to this matter, and that is that all the schools of the District being provided for, this bequest having failed, and having been made at a time when there were no public schools supported by public funds—the schools then being supported by private subscription—that these conditions having all passed away, it would be wise now to give the money to these worthy descendants.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is it not a fact that the courts have decided that the original bequest has failed?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes; they have so decided.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And that the money was only paid into the Treasury awaiting the decision of the courts?

Mr. HENDERSON. Awaiting the action of Congress.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, as a matter of fact, the money does not belong to the United States Government, under the decision of the courts?

Mr. HENDERSON. Not at all. The gentleman is right about that. That is exactly the situation.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote upon the proposition. There is an amendment to the caption of the bill which should be voted on after the bill passes.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

By unanimous consent, the title was amended by inserting, after the word "Georgetown," the words "and distribute same among the heirs of Peter Von Essen, deceased."

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PROTECTION OF FISH IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I now desire to call up for immediate consideration the bill (H. R. 6161) for the protection of fish in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6161) for the protection of fish in the District of Columbia, for the maintenance of a permanent spawning ground in the Potomac River in said District, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the date of the passage of this act no person shall fish with fyke net, pound net, stake net, weir, float net, gill net, haul seine, dip net, or any other contrivance, stationary or floating, in the waters of the Potomac River and its tributaries within the District of Columbia: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the use of barrel nets or pots for the catching or killing of eels, or prevent the United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, or his agents, from taking from said waters in any manner desired fish of any kind for scientific purposes or for purposes of propagation, and that none of the provisions of this act shall apply to persons employed in catching young catfish, smelt, chub, bull minnows, and crayfish for use as bait in fishing with hook and line: Provided further, That any person engaged in taking such catfish, smelt, chub, bull minnows, and crayfish shall first have procured a written permit from the said Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries to take such bait for hook-and-line fishing.

SEC. 2. That no person shall catch or kill in the waters of the Potomac River or its tributaries within the District of Columbia any black bass (otherwise known as green bass and chub), crappie (otherwise known as calico bass and strawberry bass), or striped bass (otherwise known as rockfish) between the 15th day of April and the 1st day of June of each year, nor have in possession nor expose for sale any of said species between the dates aforesaid, nor catch or kill any of said species of fish at any other time during the year except by angling, which shall not include the taking of fish by what are known as out lines or trot lines.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any person to have in possession or expose for sale in the District of Columbia after the 10th day of June in any year any fresh fish of the shad or herring species.

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any person to expose for sale in the District of Columbia at any time during the year any striped bass or rockfish or black bass having a length of less than 9 inches.

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any person to catch or kill in the waters of the Potomac River or its tributaries within the District of Columbia any fish by means of explosives, drugs, or poisons.

SEC. 6. That no person shall allow any tar, oil, ammoniacal liquor, or other waste products of any gas works or works engaged in using such products, or any waste product whatever of any mechanical, chemical, manufacturing, or refining establishment, to flow into or be deposited in Rock Creek or the Potomac River or any of its tributaries within the District of Columbia, or into any pipe or conduit leading to the same.

SEC. 7. That any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction therefor before the police court or any other court of the District of Columbia shall be fined for each and every such offense not less than $10 nor more than $100, and in default of payment of fine shall be imprisoned in the workhouse for a period not exceeding six months; and any officer or other person securing such conviction before the police court of the District of Columbia shall be entitled to and receive one-half of any fine or fines imposed upon and paid by the party or parties adjudged guilty.

SEC. 8. That all nets, boats, or other contrivances, the property of any person convicted under the provisions of this act shall be returned to the property clerk of the Metropolitan police department, to be delivered to the owner upon the order of the judge of the police or other court, and if not called for within six months by the claimant, the same shall be treated as other abandoned property coming into the hands of the police.

SEC. 9. That all acts or parts of acts not in harmony with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I think that perhaps the report should be read. It really sets forth the reasons for the passage of the bill.

The report (by Mr. CURTIS of Iowa) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6161) for the protection of fish in the District of Columbia, for the maintaining of a permanent spawning ground in the Potomac River in said District, and for other purposes, beg leave to report the same to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

This bill has the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and your committee is advised that the same was practically arranged by the United States Fish Commissioner, and is a consolidation of the existing laws, with a few proposed modifications to meet new conditions.

The principal object of the proposed legislation is to preserve the small game fish which are planted in the waters of the District of Columbia, to enable the United States Fish Commissioner to obtain a full supply of fry for transportation to other waters, and to give all kinds of fish a small area where they may be undisturbed.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I call for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The question was taken, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. That is all the business we have to present from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill. Pending that, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask my colleague on the committee if we can not agree as to some time when general debate shall be closed by unanimous consent.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, as a matter of inquiry from the chairman of the committee, what would be satisfactory to him about it? I think we can come to an arrangement.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, the House had an hour and three-quarters of general debate on the bill last Saturday, and it seems to me that we ought to agree, before going into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, on some hour when the debate will close; and I would suggest that it close in an hour and a half, one hour under an arrangement that I had with him to be given the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCLELLAN], who has served four years on the committee, and thirty minutes on this side to be consumed by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GRIFFIN], a member of the committee.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, on this side of the House there are gentlemen, besides the member suggested, who desire to address the House, and I think we can very well afford to debate this bill, say, until 4 o'clock. That would give three hours of debate, and that would be agreeable to us all. We could close the debate at 4 o'clock. There is no need of hurrying it along very fast.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I will make this proposition to my colleague on the committee: That we have general debate for two hours and a half, giving one hour and three-quarters to that side and three-quarters to this side.

Mr. COX. The only difference between us is half an hour.

Mr. HULL. That will give you more time than the other proposition to close general debate.

Mr. COX. That is an hour and three-quarters to our side of the House.

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. COX. Of the three hours?

The SPEAKER. Of the two hours and a half.

Mr. HULL. Of the two hours and a half.

Mr. COX. I think we can just say close this debate in three hours. I think we will arrive at it before the three hours are exhausted. I do not think we will have any trouble about it.

Mr. HULL. Then under that proposition I understood the gentleman from Tennessee would control one hour and a half.

Mr. COX. I think the proposition of the Chair is a very fair one.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa—that general debate on this bill close at half past 3, one hour and three-quarters to be given the Democratic side? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question now is on the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, just as a matter of inquiry, as I always try to accommodate my friends on this side if I can, I want to know if the hour and three-quarters to be allotted to us is to be controlled by myself?

Mr. HULL. That is my understanding.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I am to have an hour, as I understand.

Mr. HULL. My original proposition was that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCLELLAN] would have an hour. That was simply my statement.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I think I had better take it. I will take just as much less than an hour as possible. I will cut my remarks down as short as I can.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes to my colleague on the committee [Mr. GRIFFIN].

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, in consideration of this bill on Saturday last in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union our colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX], made some criticisms with reference to some special features of the bill. While his remarks in the main were favorable to the passage of such a bill, yet the bill did not escape his criticism in reference to a few of its features.

I desire at this time to explain some of the questions which seem to be troubling our colleagues on the other side. The remarks then made and the colloquy which occurred between the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHEELER] would indicate that the policy of retiring army officers on three-fourths pay was a bad one. In reply, I have this to say, that ever since August, 1861, this policy has prevailed in this country, and it has been deemed a wise policy; not only officers in the Army of this country have been retired in accordance with that law, but the law and the principle covered by it is in vogue in other nations. So that it has not only received the sanction of thirty-seven years in the United States, but it has also, so far as the principle is concerned, been sanctioned and met the approval of other nations.

The great difficulty with my friend from Tennessee [Mr. COX] seems to have been with reference to the wrong information which he derived and the impression created in this committee that the $1,200,000 which this bill proposes to appropriate for retired officers' pay was largely—yea, very largely—increased by an improper practice, as he assumes, on the part of the Chief Executive of the nation. I think the gentleman fell into an error when he attributed so much importance to the practice which, at some intervals, prevailed of promoting just before retirement the officers who were juniors over their seniors in order that they might be retired in a higher grade. This applies to colonels and those above that grade only. This has occurred in four or five instances where two brigadier-generals have been made major-generals and three colonels have been promoted to brigadier-generals.

Now, if my friend from Tennessee will take the pay list and figure up the amount of this $1,200,000 which is absorbed in the payment of the retired pay of those five officers—and, as I am informed, there are but five to-day upon the list of the retired army officers who obtained their position in this manner—he will find that it is hardly worthy of consideration. The policy of such action on the part of the Chief Executive may be questioned, and has been questioned; but, sir, I believe that that policy ought to be defended. If it were otherwise, when an officer has reached the rank of colonel and is promoted to brigadier-general his consequence is greatly increased as an officer of this Government. His command, his prerogatives are largely increased, and if this discretion be taken away from the Chief Executive of promoting a better officer though junior to the one not so good, if the Chief Executive be stripped of that power or discretion, we may at times, and certainly there were times in the history of this country when that would have been a detriment to our interests—the question of that kind, in my mind, must be left somewhere, and in no place is it vested with better care and better profit or benefit, where it will be more wisely exercised, than in the Chief Executive of the nation, who is the Commander in Chief of all the forces.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield for a moment for a question?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Will my colleague say that these special promotions without regard to service should be allowed to be made by the Chief Executive of the nation in times of war, where he could reward gallantry on the field? Would you limit it in that way?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Why, Mr. Chairman, in reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from Tennessee, I think that there should be no limitation or qualification upon that power. For this reason, that when an officer is retired from the Army, he does not thereby cease to be a part of the military establishment of this country. The time may yet come, as I view the situation, when, instead of detailing those from the active list of the Army to give military instruction in schools and academies and institutions of learning, these retired army officers who are under three-quarters pay may be assigned to such duties at their own request.

In this respect they may be performing a service for the country such as will justify the Executive in the exercise of his discretion without any limitation whatever. If it is good in time of war, it will be in time of peace. To my mind the cases where the Chief Executive of a nation like ours would abuse this privilege are very remote, and unless some one can show that the privilege has been so abused in the past that the thinking minds of this country have discovered that it is very injurious, that it is iniquitous, it is too late now to depart from an established custom which has prevailed under our laws since 1861.

In case, also, we should become involved in hostilities, it is not at all a vagary that we might expect some of these very same officers to come to the succor of the country and lend their experience and their peculiar and greater knowledge with reference to the conduct of war than perhaps some of the younger ones possess. It is not all lost by any means. They stand in communities as educated military men, and we can hardly conceive the benefits in that respect which may grow out of the practice of keeping that class of men in touch with the affairs of the nation. They constantly report to the Adjutant-General. If any change of their address occurs, it is at once required to be reported to the Adjutant-General of the Army. Thus they keep in touch with, and are in fact, I may say, under discipline as a part of, the military establishment of this country.

Now, sir, as for the few thousand dollars which may have been expended or are yet to be expended in paying for the additional rank conferred upon these worthy officers where they were junior and were promoted over their seniors in order that they might be retired as of the higher rank, I hardly think we are justified at this time in making a change of the law on that subject. Such a proposition on this appropriation bill would be subject to a point of order, as it would be a change of law. Therefore, if the policy of retiring army officers at their own request after thirty years' service, upon three-fourths pay, and at the discretion of the President when they have attained the age of 62 years, and compulsory retirement under the law when they shall have attained the age of 64 years—if that practice has met the approval of this country for thirty-seven years, I am one of those who believe that if any iniquity had existed in the execution of such a law it would have been discovered in such a way that to-day the sentiment of the country would not sustain it as it does. But as this policy has met public approval, I hardly think the gentleman from Tennessee will feel justified in asking that any change be made in this respect.

Another subject of criticism on the part of the gentleman from Tennessee was the policy of the act of 1872 authorizing soldiers of the Regular Army to deposit their savings with the Paymaster-General and providing for the payment of 4 per cent interest upon savings thus deposited. At one time it was provided that the amount of the deposit should not be less than $50; but in a subsequent statute the amount was reduced to $5. Under this provision of law the practice of thus depositing a portion of their pay has been indulged in by a great majority of the private soldiers and noncommissioned officers of the Army. As a policy, it is a wise one. It enforces discipline more effectually than any mere act of authority. Every man who has a little deposit in the possession of the Paymaster-General feels that he has a certain interest in this country greater than he would otherwise have. The practice teaches frugality. It encourages good habits. It makes men better soldiers than they would otherwise be.

If you want to band together any association of men, give them a small fund which it is their duty to guard, and you will find there will be more cohesion by that means than by all the laws or rules or regulations you can adopt.

But the gentleman from Tennessee says that this fund goes into the hands of the Paymaster-General, and he wants to see it placed in the Treasury of the United States. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is a serious objection to that change. The law in that respect is to-day what it has been ever since 1872.

I will state the reason why it is objectionable to place this fund in the Treasury of the United States in such a way that it can not be taken therefrom except through an appropriation made by law. And lest I should not recall the point at a later stage of my remarks, I will say that this payment was provided for in the act authorizing deposits to be made and fixing the rate of interest. Hence, when it is said upon this floor that there is no authorization of law for this proceeding, gentlemen forget that the very act which built up this system authorized this payment. The money, as I ascertain, is placed in the Treasury of the United States.

The method by which it reaches the Treasury is this: When the paymasters go out to pay the troops at any post or station, the soldiers, when payment is being made, request the paymaster to retain a certain amount of their pay. Now, I ask the gentleman from Tennessee not to get the word "retain" confused with "detain," because under this law there never was authorized any detention of money; and no money has ever been detained. The deposits are voluntary. But when a request of this kind is made to the paymaster, he retains the money as requested instead of paying it over.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman allow me to make an explanation?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Of course I did not mean by anything I said to imply that this money was retained against the will of the soldier. My understanding was the same as that which the gentleman now states—that when the soldier receives the money, he voluntarily pays it back to be held as a deposit, and in that way he obtains interest upon the amount. I want to disabuse the gentleman's mind of the idea, if he has such an idea, that I understood that this money was held against the will of the soldier.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's explanation is perfectly satisfactory to me. But his language as printed in the RECORD gave me the impression that, according to his idea, some of this money was detained against the will of the soldier. The gentleman's present statement of his position is in accordance with my understanding of the matter. The paymaster retains the amount which the soldier says he would like to deposit as a part of his savings. That deposit is reported to the Paymaster-General, and at the close of every month the Paymaster-General renders to the Secretary of the Treasury a duplicate statement showing all the moneys so received during the month. The same kind of a statement is made to the Auditor for the War Department. So that while, as the gentleman from Tennessee was frank enough to say, this money will be found accounted for on the Paymaster-General's books, it is also to be found upon the books of the Auditor for that Department and upon the books of the Treasury Department.

Another consideration entering into this question is this: This is a trust fund; it is not the property of the United States. Whatever officer is charged with its care and keeping and disbursement is a trustee. The system is controlled by the Paymaster-General. It has obtained since 1872; it has not been productive of any loss or any dispute, nor has it been found to be an unwise measure. Hence if that money be now covered into the Treasury by this bill, it will require a positive affirmative enactment in order that the Paymaster-General may settle with the soldier by repaying his deposit at the end of the term of enlistment. As the law now is, the fund remains subject to be paid out when the soldier is entitled to it. As a Congress or as a committee, we can not determine how large an appropriation ought to be made for this purpose.

Men die in the service, as well as being discharged from time to time, and the amount which should be appropriated of that sum which belongs to the soldier himself can not before discharge be definitely ascertained, because there are many contingencies and many uncertain conditions which enter into the disbursement and care of the fund.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, it has operated well during the whole time that the law has been in force. There is no reason now at this late date, having continued so long and having been tested and tried as a system, for abandoning it and assuming and adopting another in its stead. It will not work well if we depart from the system with which the Army and the officers connected with it have become accustomed and are entirely familiar—a system which has been productive of so much good.

Another fact which I might state here is this: That, taking one year with another, the disbursement from this fund and the receipts coming into the fund about equalize each other. I think to-day, however, there is quite a fund known as the "soldiers' deposit fund," held by the Paymaster-General, for the purpose of paying the soldiers who are to be discharged during this year, and in that connection let me say to the committee that there are two classes of enlistments which expire during the year 1898—one the three-year enlistment and the other is the five-year enlistment, and we have not yet passed the period when the five-year enlistments have all expired. So that the large fund which appears in the hands of the Paymaster-General which may be devoted to this purpose to-day is larger than it ever will be again after we shall have discharged the five-year and the three-year men whose terms expire during this year.

It seems to me that it would be an unnecessary and unprofitable interference to undertake to change the law at this time.

Another subject which the gentleman from Tennessee has discussed, and upon which he raised a question, was that of the appropriations proposed by the bill of $18,000 for the contingent expenses and emergency calls of the Signal Service. If the gentleman from Tennessee will examine the estimates submitted by the Department, he will discover the purposes for which that appropriation is made. His contention was that we ought to have a detailed statement with reference to the amount expended from the last appropriation during the year ending June 30, 1898.

Mr. Chairman, that, it is true, could have been procured, but we were furnished with the exact amount which had been expended in the course of the operations of the office, and the office was not called upon to furnish an itemized statement. Furthermore, if we were to engage in investigating and in calling upon the various Departments for the items of the statements they submitted—statements showing where, how, and for what purpose or in what manner all of these appropriations were expended in the past, we never would see the end of our labors and could not, during any session of Congress, let it cover the entire year, be able to make the investigation necessary to determine that every item was exact, correct, and a proper subject of appropriation.

These officers are charged with certain official duties. Those who have the expenditure of money under their care are bonded officers. There are many ways by which, if anything is wrong in a bureau or Department, some one will find it out. And as to the expenditure concerning which a question has been raised by the gentleman from Tennessee, we find that at no time has there been anything wrong discovered or a serious complaint made.

Now, apprehending that I have about consumed my time, I will say in closing that on the part of my colleagues on this side of the House we find, and in fact we know, that we have given more time to the investigation and preparation of this appropriation bill than has been given to any Army appropriation bill that I have ever had anything to do with since I have been a member of this body. The bill will bear the closest scrutiny, and the result of such scrutiny will be altogether in its favor. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I desire simply to consume a moment. It is well that we should understand each other as we proceed with this discussion.

I have made no complaint about the promotion of officers on the retired list further than to criticise the manner of their promotion. Now, we have $1,200,000 appropriated for the sole purpose of paying retired officers. When you turn to the list of enlisted men that are in the Army, you will find that the retired officers are drawing almost as much pay, approximately, as the entire Army. Now, then, as to the order of promotion and the way it is done, I criticise the mode of promoting the old soldier or officer in years over the junior officer in years but older in service. That is the point of my criticism.

The case referred to last by my colleague on the committee I tried to make as clear as I could. That is with reference to the $18,000 appropriated in the bill in a lump sum and appropriated under this head—"Office of the Chief Signal Officer."

Now, if any member of the committee desires to turn to that item of appropriation, he will find that the money is appropriated, almost in toto, for the purpose of purchasing instruments, etc., with which to do the work.

Now, it struck me that these instruments ought not to wear out every twelve months, and I am still of that opinion, and when we had nothing before the committee to show how the $18,000 had been expended, I thought, and still think, that it was due to us all that we should know how they had expended that money. Remember that in several appropriation bills this same round sum of $18,000 has been appropriated for the very same purpose, in almost the same identical language. I thought we ought to know if the instruments wore out every year and what became of them.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in regard to the pay of the soldier that is kept in the Treasury of the United States, or is kept in the paymaster's office, technically, here is the point: Under the law as it exists, the soldier is not forced to pay anything. The soldier collects his pay and then deposits a certain amount of the money, which draws interest at the rate of 4 per cent, and he gets the money and the interest when he is discharged. Now, the difference between me and my colleagues on the committee consists in this. It will take me but a moment to read the section of the statute:

SEC. 1305. Any enlisted man of the Army may deposit his savings, in sums not less than $5, with any Army paymaster, who shall furnish him a deposit book, in which shall be entered the name of the paymaster and of the soldier, and the amount, date, and place of such deposit. The money so deposited shall be accounted for in the same manner as other public funds, and shall pass to the credit of the appropriation for the pay of the Army, and shall not be subject to forfeiture by sentence of court-martial, but shall be forfeited by desertion, and shall not be permitted to be paid until final payment on discharge, or to the heirs or representatives of a deceased soldier, and that such deposit be exempt from liability for such soldier's debts: Provided, That the Government shall be liable for the amount deposited to the person so depositing the same.

Now, another clause of that statute provides:

The system of deposits herein established shall be carried into execution under such regulations as may be established by the Secretary of War.

There is the point. If this money under this statute goes as the law directs it, it passes into the Treasury of the United States, or should do so, the same as other public funds go into the Treasury. Now, if it should pass, as I contend it should, into the Treasury of the United States, that Department should account for it just as other public funds are accounted for.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with this explanation of my position in regard to these matters, I yield an hour of our time to my colleague from New York [Mr. MCCLELLAN].

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I desire to thank my friend from Iowa [Mr. HULL] for having so arranged matters that I have been permitted to speak upon this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that this bill making appropriations for the support of the Army for the next fiscal year, would contain some provision for the improvement of the Army, or at least some hint that legislation in the line of improvement was contemplated by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The people of this country are generous almost to a fault. They have never begrudged a single dollar that has been expended for the support or the improvement of the Navy, because they have believed that not a single dollar so spent has been wasted.

Nor would they begrudge an even larger appropriation than that called for in the present bill, if they were sure that they were getting their money's worth. Our little Army of 25,000 men, if properly organized, would be almost large enough to form a nucleus, which, when expanded, would be the foundation of an army in time of war. But to be of any use in war our Army, in time of peace, should be, for its size, second to none on earth. It is, unfortunately, very far short of this. It is very little better than a clumsily organized, inefficient, national police force, bound up with red tape, top-heavy with the gold lace of general officers of so-called staff departments, and of staff officers, many of whom have never seen more serious service in actual warfare than that which falls to the lot of the average policeman.

The survivors of our late war are rapidly reaching an age when they will be unfit for active command. When the present Major-General Commanding the Army has retired, there will be scarcely a single officer on the active list, with a war record, and on December 3, 1897, there were only 473 officers on the active list of the Army who had served between April 15, 1861, and May 1, 1865.

Whatever may be the shortcomings of our Army, they are not the fault of its officers. The present Major-General Commanding was a gallant soldier in the late war, who has earned his present position by hard and meritorious service. The officers under his command are as fine a body of men as can be found in any army.

The faults and the shortcomings of our Army ought not to be charged to the Army, but to us. Successive Congresses, whether Democratic or Republican, have been equally to blame. Year after year, ever since the civil war, Secretaries of War and generals commanding have recommended to Congress the absolute necessity of a complete reorganization of the Army from top to bottom, and just as often as they have made the recommendation, just so often has Congress absolutely ignored it, sometimes because of motives of ill-judged economy, sometimes because of an entire lack of interest in the subject, sometimes because Congress has been occupied with what it has imagined were matters of greater importance than the national defense.

This is not a party matter; this is a matter of national concern and national necessity. Far be it from me to even suggest that we are any nearer a war to-day than we have been at any time during the past thirty-three years. What I have to say is said in no spirit of jingoism, with no desire to add even my little to a possible war scare. It is said for the purpose of calling the attention of the members of this House, and, if possible, the attention of the people, to the fact that they are paying a large price, a very large price, for an inefficient Army, utterly unprepared for war, when a very small addition of expenditure, with some activity on the part of Congress in the right direction, would make our Army what it ought to be—for its size the best on earth. [Applause.]

THE INFANTRY.

The infantry consists of 25 regiments, each composed on a war footing of 10 companies of 100 men, and each regiment is organized as 1 battalion. On a peace footing 2 companies of each regiment have been skeletonized, in direct and flagrant violation of the law, making the regiment consist of 8 companies, of 35 officers and 525 men, organized as 1 battalion. It is certainly a pleasant sensation to think that we know more than all the rest of the world; and yet, when we find the army of every other civilized nation on earth, with the exception of that of Great Britain, which is a hundred years behind the times, organized differently from ours, it would require even a greater self-complacency than that of which we are unfortunately sometimes guilty to believe that we are right and that they are wrong. While we have been standing still, in so far as military matters are concerned, trusting that good nature would prompt the rest of the world to wait for us, the world has been unkind enough to disregard our feeling and has advanced so far beyond us, that our Army is in very much the same relative position to those of Europe as the street rioter is to the policeman.

Instead of the single breechloader, scarcely accurate at 600 yards, the soldier of to-day uses a small-bore magazine rifle—in our case .30—that is absolutely deadly at 2,000 yards. Because of its flat trajectory and great accuracy, and because of the improvement in modern ammunition, the modern battle formation is a long, thin line, with as great length and as little depth as possible. The real battle unit is the company. It consists on a war footing of about 200 men. It has been found in modern experience, under modern conditions, that 800 men is the greatest number that one officer can command in extended order. The battalion therefore consists of 800 men, or four companies, the regiment being divided into three battalions.

The regiment goes into action in three lines. The first line is the line of battle, or, as it is called, the line of contact; the second acts as the support to the first, and protects its flanks; and the third acts as a general reserve and furnishes details when necessary. In our infantry organization the regiment consists of, as I say, a thousand men, divided into ten companies, and organized as one battalion. Our infantry organization has been taken literally from that of Wellington in the Peninsula, and Wellington's was taken from Oliver Cromwell's new model, without a change. Our infantry organization was a very excellent one for the seventeenth century; but we are nearly in the twentieth century now.

There is another argument in favor of the three-battalion organization, and that is economy of officers, for it only requires one regimental staff for every 2,400 men organized in one regiment, as against three regimental staffs for the same number of men organized as three regiments. The three principal arguments in favor of a reorganization of the infantry are, first, the improvement in arms and ammunition; second, the impossibility of one officer commanding as many troops in extended order as he can in close order, and third, economy of officers.

THE CAVALRY.

One of the chief defects of our cavalry is the quality of its horses. In European armies the remounts for the cavalry and artillery are purchased at private sale by boards of officers specially qualified for the service, detailed from the arm of the service for which the horses are intended, and of veterinary surgeons. The remounts when purchased are sent to remount depots, at which they are conditioned, trained, and broken, so that when drafted to the regiments they are able to take their places at once in the ranks with veteran horses. The recruit, on joining his regiment, is given a horse that has almost as much to do with making him a trooper as has the drill sergeant.

Our method of purchasing remounts is entirely different. They are purchased by contracts by the Quartermaster's Department. According to the last Army Register, that for 1897, there are in the Quartermaster-General's Department 54 officers, of whom in their early lives 13 saw service in the artillery, 8 saw service in the cavalry, 25 in the infantry, and 8 in the volunteers. In other words, it is safe to assume that of the 54 officers composing the department which purchased the horses only 21 know anything whatever about horses. Of these 21, 10 were graduates of the Artillery School, and of the entire 54 only 1 was a graduate of the Cavalry and Infantry School, and he came from the infantry. The department purchasing our horses, the majority of its officers at least, can not, from their early experience, be expected to know the difference between a horse and a cow.

The price paid for remounts during the past year bears me out in my assumption that the present methods of purchase are not altogether the best. During the past year there were purchased 888 troop horses, at an average cost of $133.10; 81 artillery horses, at an average cost of $146; 42 team horses, at an average cost of $158.54, and 344 mules, at an average cost of $90.19. These were all green, unbroken, untrained, unconditioned Western animals. I am told by friends of mine on the floor of this House, who come from the West and know something about horses, that green, unbroken Western horses suitable for troop service can be bought for $100 apiece, and that excellent draft animals can be purchased for $80 apiece.

Wishing further information upon the subject, I wrote to Mr. R. W. Rives, of New York, who is recognized as one of the leading authorities in the United States on hackneys and draft horses. In his answer to my letter he confirmed what I have just said in a paragraph which is as follows:

> The price you gave me as having been paid by our Government for horses seems extremely high, considering the class of horses which I have seen used and the length of time required for conditioning and training them. I should consider the figures you mentioned as having been given you by some Western friends—$100 for troop horses, $80 for draft animals—to be liberal.

It therefore seems that during the past year alone the United States has paid over $40,000 for the privilege of having its remounts purchased by the Quartermaster-General's Department.

The total number of horses purchased for the cavalry during the past year was 25 per cent of the total number of horses in the cavalry. During the same period the total number of horses purchased for the Austro-Hungarian cavalry was a little less than 12 per cent of the total number of horses in that cavalry. Our horses were in such poor physical condition that they required, in a majority of cases, six months in the hospital before they were fit for any work whatever.

THE BAD QUALITY OF OUR HORSES.

There is no doubt that our troopers are good rough riders, possibly the best in the world; but if the War Department is to be believed, there is equally no doubt that they are not good horsemen in the broad sense of the term and in the sense in which cavalrymen should be good horsemen. The publications of the military information division are the official utterances of the Adjutant-General's Office of the War Department. In Document 37, published in 1896, there is a paper entitled, "The annual riding competitions in Vienna." It is unsigned and published by authority, and is therefore the cool, calm opinion of the highest military authority in the Army. The riding of commissioned and noncommissioned officers in this competition is described, and then on page 210 occurs the following:

> Probably not five officers of our Army—perhaps not one—are qualified to train a horse to this degree, and probably not a dozen can take a horse already trained and make him do the things just described, particularly if an English saddle were used. Those who happen to have skill of this kind have gotten it either by laboriously educating themselves or with the assistance of civilian teachers. They have found no army officer competent to teach them.

Not a single officer in our Army, so says the War Department, competent to teach riding as it should be taught! The paper tries to excuse this state of affairs at the expense of the Quartermaster-General's Department. On page 211 occurs the following:

> Unfortunately, our service horses are generally of such faulty shape that the attitude and action of a trained saddle horse are unnatural to them, a fact that makes their training more essential while increasing its difficulties.
> A cart horse can be put through the course of training prescribed for race horses, but can never be made one. Our service animals are doubtless improved by the methods we now use with them, and experts could probably improve them more—

A confession that we have no experts—> but a great many can never be made saddle horses.

> Our foreign friends consider it "noteworthy" that with our reputation for intelligence, energy, progressiveness, and school learning, and with schools of application for mounted officers at Forts Leavenworth and Riley, provision is nowhere made for giving our field artillery and cavalry officers a course of military riding and driving, of judging harness and saddle horses, of breaking them and of training them so as to get the most out of them. If such a course were ever established, we should, in the beginning, probably have to go outside of the Army to find competent instructors.

I wonder what they teach at Forts Leavenworth and Riley!

During the civil war our great cavalry forces consisted of hastily raised bodies of men and horses, sent to the front without giving them any previous training or maneuvering. Our cavalry under these circumstances certainly did great work; but unquestionably if they had had previous training and maneuvering, their work would have been better and might have exercised an extraordinary influence in the earlier campaigns. Upon its maneuvering power depends the efficiency of cavalry. The greatest factor in maneuvering power is the training of the men and horses. If we propose to continue not to train our men and horses, we might at least give our cavalry a flexible modern organization; but we have not done so, and there does not appear to be any disposition in Congress to do so. Experience has shown that the cavalry regiment should be much smaller than the infantry regiment.

Our regiment consists in time of war of 12 troops of 100 men each, making the regiment 1,200 strong; on a peace footing 2 troops are skeletonized in direct violation of law, the regiment consisting of 10 troops, making it about 600 strong, very nearly the strength of most European cavalry regiments. In Europe, however, the cavalry regiment consists of three, four, five, or six squadrons of about 150 each, the squadron being in practice the tactical unit. In our cavalry regiments the drill regulations provide for a fictitious squadron organization, combining for the purpose two or more troops. This obviates some of the difficulties of our awkward organization, but in time of war would lead to endless confusion, for, as I say, on a war footing the regiment would theoretically consist of 1,200 men divided into 12 small units, nearly double the number of men that can be readily handled as one regiment. It would require no additional expense, no increase in officers or enlisted men, to reorganize our cavalry so as to conform with modern methods and so as to conform with actual practice. While a reorganization may not be necessary in time of peace, it would be absolutely essential in time of war; but if we wait until war is declared before we reorganize, we may find that our reorganization had come too late.

THE PRICE OF HORSES.

Mr. STEELE. Before the gentleman proceeds to a new branch of the subject, I wish to ask him what he would propose as a remedy for the evil he has named in connection with the purchase of horses?

Mr. McCLELLAN. If I were in a position to legislate all by myself, which I am not, I would suggest that horses be purchased by a board of officers detailed from the branch of the service for which the horses are intended. Such officers know something about horseflesh; or if they do not, they ought to. But under the present practice we permit a so-called staff department, which, from its training and make-up, can not be expected to know anything about horses, to make these purchases and then turn the animals over to the cavalry and artillery, who have to stand the consequences of the poor grade of horses which they thus receive.

Mr. STEELE. My information is that although the Quartermaster-General pays for the horses, a board of officers of the class the gentleman refers to is called upon to inspect the horses.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I understand that under the law or regulation the Quartermaster-General's Department has absolute jurisdiction of these purchases. I am told that during the last few years one particular officer has been making all the purchases, that the department has been relying entirely on him to attend to this business.

Mr. STEELE. That may be the fact; and I am quite sure that the class of horses now being used can be bought in my part of the country for $65 to $85 apiece.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I wish my friend would tell us where these purchases have been mainly made.

Mr. McCLELLAN. During the past year most of our remounts have been bought in Kentucky. I saw something about this matter in the hearing of the Quartermaster-General before the committee; he mentions that matter incidentally.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I was going to suggest that Tennessee can furnish right good horses. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCLELLAN. The Quartermaster-General, who appears to be of a bright and cheerful nature, remarks as follows:

We are getting horses for less money. There is not much difference in the price of cavalry horses as compared with ordinary horses, because we want a peculiar kind of horse.

They certainly do get "a peculiar kind of horse."

We are buying horses in Kentucky this year. The cavalry has never been in as good condition as it is now.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Are the horses inspected where they are bought?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes; as I understand, by the Quartermaster-General's Department.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I should like to make a suggestion. I understand that representatives of European nations, particularly Germany, are coming here to buy cavalry horses.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes; Germany is buying some here.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. That is pretty good evidence that we have the best horses.

Mr. McCLELLAN. We have, unquestionably.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. And, I will add, a large number of those horses are being bought in Kansas.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Unquestionably; and they are paying at private sale about the price that we are paying for horses bought by contract. Theirs are, however, picked horses in good condition and partially broken.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I will say further that in Kansas City you can get the best horses—picked horses—for $70 to $75 apiece.

Mr. DINSMORE. All over the West, so far as I have been able to observe—and I have had my attention called to the matter—you can buy horses of the class used in the United States Army for anywhere from $50 to $60; and that has been the case during the last eighteen months.

Mr. CLARDY. Allow me a single word on this question. Of course, gentlemen know that if they want good horses, they must go to Kentucky to get them.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Certainly.

Mr. CLARDY. We breed a class of horses in Kentucky, and to some extent in Missouri——

Mr. McCLELLAN. A "peculiar" class?

Mr. CLARDY. A class of horses peculiarly suited for saddle purposes—a special breed of horses, bred for saddle purposes. These are really saddle horses, and they can travel 30 miles a day with more ease to both horse and rider than these ordinary horses can travel 15 or 20. Japan, a nation rapidly coming into notice by reason of its highly enlightened policy, sent a board of officers to Kentucky to buy horses, and they have been buying them there. The United States Government can do the same thing. If it is willing to pay $100 to $150 apiece for horses, it can get good horses, precisely adapted to its uses.

Mr. McCLELLAN. It is paying that price now.

Mr. CLARDY. But not getting good horses.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Kentucky thoroughbreds are all right; but they are not so hardy as horses bred on the plains.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I trust that this incidental discussion will not come out of my time.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. On the Western plains—for instance, in North Dakota—instead of paying $150 for a saddle horse, you can get the finest actual working saddle horses in the world for $10 apiece. Why, sir, a man not long ago went to Spokane and bought 4,000 horses for $7 apiece. He shipped them to Hamburg, Germany, where 10 per cent of them were sold as draft horses and the rest for conversion into Hamburg steaks. [Laughter.]

THE ARTILLERY.

Mr. McCLELLAN. We have 5 regiments of artillery, each composed of 12 batteries, of which 10 are—I was going to say equipped, but they are not equipped—of which 10 serve as fortress artillery and 2 are equipped and serve as field artillery.

The designation of the batteries serving as field artillery is changed from time to time. This composite, and, to say the least, this most extraordinary organization of our artillery is defended on the ground that all our battery officers, if they be so fortunate as to live long enough and have the misfortune to remain in the lower grade of the service long enough, may, in the course of an unknown number of years, serve a tour of duty both in the field and in the fortress artillery,

It is certainly a great compliment to the junior artillery officer to assume that he may become, in time, an expert in these two absolutely different branches of military science. Our fortress artillery is, or ought to be, a seacoast artillery, and will eventually be used for the purpose of manning the great guns which are to be mounted on those modern fortifications, which are to be completed, it is to be hoped, at some time in the future. The duties of seacoast artillerymen are really the duties of mechanics, and are as absolutely different from the duties pertaining to the field artillery as is the science of the seacoast battery from that of the field gun in action.

The distribution of troops for seacoast batteries is purely arbitrary. European armies use the battalion and battery as a unit merely for the convenience of organization, as the number of men assigned to each work varies according to the needs of each particular case. The fortress artilleryman is not unlike a mechanic serving a great gun. It is possibly a closer comparison to say that he is a man-of-war's-man serving a gun upon a ship at anchor. This is not as farfetched as it may seem, for it has been seriously proposed in several countries of Europe to turn the seacoast defenses over to the navy.

While the navy is the first line of defense, the seacoast fortifications are the second line, and many authorities believe that better results may be obtained from having both first and second line under one head. In England many of the seacoast batteries are manned by the royal marine artillery, while in France the marine artillery performs the same service. It has been estimated that when that bright dream of the distant future, our seacoast defenses, has been realized it will require to serve the great guns in time of war at least 26,313 men; in time of peace, 7,200 men; and, further, that in time of peace the present strength of our fortress batteries, 50 in number, a total of 3,275 enlisted men, will be barely sufficient to act as fort keepers, a peaceful and possibly a pleasant pursuit, but scarcely calculated to make them gunners, and leaving very little time for their education as light-battery men.

Field artillery is usually divided into light batteries and horse batteries. In our Army we have no horse batteries. The horse battery, and for that matter the field battery, performs a great part of its work in time of war in connection with the cavalry. Like the cavalry, it is impossible to make good artillerymen in a very short time. Our total field artillery consists of 10 batteries of 4 guns each in peace and 6 in war, or a total of 40 guns in actual use. There is, moreover, a reserve of about 100 steel field guns of calibers of 3.2 inches and 3.6, and also about 20 3.6-inch steel field mortars, which would permit the organization of a further force of about 18 batteries, making 28 batteries in all, which is about the number of guns we should have in our Army to-day.

It will be seen that on a peace footing our fortress artillery is not one-half as strong as it should be; that our field artillery is about one-third as strong as it should be; that our officers and men are not encouraged to become experts in one branch of the artillery, but are expected to become masters of both branches.

WE HAVE NO GENERAL STAFF.

One of the greatest defects, if not the greatest defect in the organization of our Army, is the lack of a properly instructed and capable staff corps. Under our present system the so-called staff departments number 12 in all.

Including post chaplains of the rank of captain, there are in our Army 528 staff officers as against 1,619 line officers; in addition to which 323 line officers are absent from their regiments on staff detail, or a total of 851 staff officers, leaving only 1,296 officers serving with troops—a number of staff officers ridiculously out of all proportion to the size of our army and to the work performed by them. The staff as at present organized is cumbersome, wasteful, and inefficient, and made up as it is, by the appointment in many cases of officers having no fitness for the duties to which they are assigned, it is necessarily incompetent, untrained, and ignorant.

No provision is made for the training of officers to act as chiefs of staff of army corps and divisions in case of war, or of aids-de-camp and recruiting officers. One of the greatest handicaps of our general officers during the civil war was an entire absence of competent and trained staff officers.

The Engineer Corps is in the habit of calling itself the brains of the Army. If one branch of the service should be the brains more than another it should be the staff, as is the case in all civilized armies but our own. In the modern meaning of the term we have no staff; that is, we have no general staff. The general staff of a European army supervises the discipline, the organization, the equipment, and the recruitment of the army. It educates and furnishes staff officers to the various subdivisions of the army, and military attachés; it proposes plans of campaign and of mobilization.

It is charged with the duty of being familiar with the resources and the topography not only of its own country, but in so far as it is possible of every foreign country with which it is liable to come in conflict. It outlines plans of fortifications and supervises their construction. It is, in short, theoretically supposed to be omniscient and is in fact almost omnipotent.

Our staff is recruited in many cases by the appointment of officers from civil life, or it has been in the past, officers who are utterly unfit, and from their experience can not be supposed to know anything whatever about military matters. In many other cases it is recruited by the appointment of line officers, whose only apparent recommendation is the fact that they have influence. They are commissioned at once to the department of the staff in which they are to serve for the remainder of their career, and are never again given an opportunity either to serve with troops or to learn the necessities and needs of troops.

It speaks badly for the morale and the professional instincts of so many of our young line officers that their one all-consuming ambition seems to be not to become good line officers, not to serve with troops, but to obtain transfers, either permanent or at least temporary, to one of the various staff departments. The duties of several of our staff departments are purely clerical, and the work performed by the officers in these departments could be as well and probably better performed by civilian clerks at $800 or $1,000 a year.

AT THE MERCY OF PRIVATE MANUFACTURERS.

The infantry is now armed with the Krag-Jurgenson magazine rifle. The Springfield Armory has, at the present time, a capacity of 180 magazine rifles and carbines a day, or a total of about 54,000 a year, were the appropriation sufficient. The Chief of Ordnance states that an appropriation of $265,000 would be sufficient to increase the capacity to the emergency point of 320 a day, or nearly 100,000 a year. With the present capacity, were hostilities declared to-morrow, we could arm an army of 250,000 men with the new rifle in about five years after war had been declared.

The allowance for target practice per annum for each infantry soldier is about 220 cartridges, and for each trooper about 220 carbine and 120 revolver cartridges.

We have at the present time only 2,000,000 rounds of reserve ammunition for the new magazine small arm. The present capacity for its manufacture is 32,000 per day, or about 9,600,000 per year. An expenditure of $62,000 would be sufficient to so enlarge the cartridge plant that the capacity would be large enough to meet emergencies.

We now have on hand enough reserve ammunition for the new rifle to keep our regular infantry, at its present strength, supplied for about six hours in a hot action, and, with the present output, in five years' time we will have sufficient to keep our regular infantry, at its present strength, supplied for about two battles. It may be noted that the cost of manufacturing ammunition at the Frankford Arsenal is $18 per 1,000. Private manufacturers are charging, in the open market to-day for the same cartridge, between $22 and $24 per 1,000, and it has been said, and, I do not doubt, said truthfully, that an agreement has been entered into by the cartridge manufacturers of the country to raise the price of ammunition in the event of war to $50 per 1,000.

In other words, because of our unwillingness to spend $62,000 to make the United States, in this respect, at least, absolutely independent of the whole of the rest of the world, we will find ourselves, in case of war, at the mercy of the private cartridge manufacturers, who will be in a position to charge anything they may see fit when we need the cartridges. Of course the present state of affairs would necessitate our arming a volunteer army almost entirely with the old Springfield .45, of which we have 245,000 in very fair condition on hand. We have a reserve of 4,000,000 rounds of ammunition, or an average of about 16 rounds to each rifle, which ought to keep the 245,000 rifles actively employed in action for, say, a quarter of an hour. And, moreover, the result of using two rifles, one scarcely accurate at 600 yards and the other absolutely deadly at 2,000, with two different kinds of ammunition, would only lead to the most horrible disaster.

It is hoped that eventually a sufficient reserve of field guns may be manufactured to meet the requirements of possible war. The capacity of the Watervliet Arsenal is 160 field guns per annum, or 100 field and 50 siege guns, working eight hours. An appropriation of $27,000 would increase the capacity sufficiently to meet emergencies, so that working sixteen hours the output would be 500 field guns, or 320 field and 140 siege guns. The allowance for target practice to each field gun is now 25 rounds per annum. That for the coast-defense guns has not yet been determined.

We have practically no reserve ammunition for our field guns. If war were declared to-morrow, we would have to send our batteries to the front without a single round of ammunition, unless we bought it from private manufacturers.

The suggested appropriation of $62,000 includes an increase in the capacity for the manufacture of additional ammunition for field guns. The Chief of Ordnance in a letter makes the statement that with this $62,000, in addition to the use of what might be made by the private manufacturers, he thinks that we should have a sufficient supply to meet the necessities of a possible war. The inference is, plainly, that without this appropriation it is doubtful if the private manufacturers could supply our needs.

MANEUVERS.

The purpose of an army is to fight the battles of its country. Armies are maintained in time of peace for the purpose of training troops and forming a nucleus for war. As a state of actual warfare can not exist in time of peace and as actual warfare is the only perfect school for the training of troops, the nearest approach to its conditions must be found in time of peace. This substitute in all European armies, and a very good substitute it is, is the great maneuvers. The course of training of all troops of the same arm is uniform. The course of each year is divided systematically into periods from the training of the individual soldier up to the great combined exercises, care being taken to have all arms and troop units ready for war at all times.

At the termination of each exercise period the training of the troops and corresponding branches must be complete. For this the immediate commanders are responsible. They are granted great freedom of action as to the method of training, the results obtained being considered of greater importance than the methods by which they are obtained.

While the battalion is the tactical unit, the company is the real battle unit. Each captain is allowed as much latitude as possible, is to a great extent left to his own resources, and is held personally responsible for the conduct, the efficiency, and the discipline of his command. Owing to the loose order of modern tactics and to the great precision of the modern arm; owing also to unforeseen incidents and accidents of battle, individualism and decentralization are cultivated to the highest possible point.

Recruits join the colors shortly after the termination of the autumn maneuvers. They are first, of course, put through a rigorous training in the awkward squad, and when sufficiently instructed take their places in the ranks. After the individual instruction has been completed the second period is divided into company drills, after which follow battalion and regimental drills. The amount of work performed in the open, as it is called—that is, on ground not specially prepared for parade purposes—would surprise many of our soldiers.

When the time arrives for brigade and divisional maneuvers, the various regiments taking part have been thoroughly exercised in the tactical evolutions and the circumstances which they will meet in actual warfare. Brigade and divisional maneuvers are followed in many armies by maneuvers confined to the separate army corps. Then follow the grand autumn maneuvers, which take place after the crops are harvested, and last from ten days to three weeks. Usually two or more army corps take part.

In some cases as many as four corps take part at once. The maneuvering force is sometimes employed as a whole against a marked enemy, but more frequently is divided into two opposing armies, each under a general of high rank. A general problem is set to be worked out, as, for instance, that one army is an invader and will on a certain day be found to have occupied certain territory, while the other army is an army of defense, whose purpose is to drive out the invader. Beyond this the solution of the problem is left entirely to the commanding generals.

A large force of umpires decides all disputed points and awards victory or defeat to the various units engaged. All the environments and circumstances of the campaign are as much as possible like actual warfare, the only difference being that blood is not actually shed and that in assaults with the bayonet or cavalry charges the assailant halts without coming into actual contact. In all other respects the maneuvers are actual warfare, the similarity being even carried to the extent that the men bivouac on the field or quarter themselves upon the inhabitants, for which, of course, compensation is paid, the commissariat and supply trains being handled exactly as in war.

Each officer, whether of the line or of the staff, whether of the combatant arms or of the train, must rely upon himself exactly as though in the field, and must be prepared to meet the unexpected when it occurs. These autumn maneuvers not only furnish the real instruction of the troops, but form the most useful part of the education of the officers, and are in effect a species of annual examination of their efficiency, for any man who proves himself at the maneuvers unfit for the position which he occupies is transferred either to civil life or to another position for which he is more fitted.

The maneuvers are the culminating point in the annual course of instruction. When they are over, the men who have served their three years with the colors are sent on furlough, the new recruits are drafted to their regiments, and another year of instruction begins. Besides the grand maneuvers, various special maneuvers take place in the several arms of the service. Cavalry commands are from time to time sent on practice journeys, and at least once a year there are what are called "grand staff practice journeys," in which officers of the general staff perform their duties as staff officers as though upon the march in the presence of an enemy. Of course the grand maneuvers are expensive, but they are considered to be of such vital importance that every financial sacrifice is made rather than not hold them.

It is not pleasant to contrast in this particular our Army with those of Europe. With the exception of our officers who saw service in the civil war, and they are becoming fewer and fewer as the years go by, hardly any of our officers have ever served, except possibly in some street parade, with a larger body of troops than the corps of cadets at West Point. Those of our officers who did see service in the civil war must in thirty-three years have lost much of the benefit derived from that experience.

In the days in which the Indian was the problem to be considered it was necessary to scatter our little Army in small detachments far and wide in the West to serve as an Indian police; but fortunately the Indian has ceased to be the one main purpose for which our Army is maintained. Of late years the policy has been pursued of giving up the useless and unnecessary posts and concentrating our troops at fewer posts in larger numbers. This policy, however, has not been carried far enough. We have not a post to-day where more than 800 men serve together, except at the Presidio in California—scarcely a European battalion. Congress never permits that our troops be brought together temporarily in large numbers for the purpose of grand maneuvers.

The best theorists in the world will never become men of affairs unless they have opportunity of putting their theories into practice. Well educated as our officers undoubtedly are, they will never be as good as they ought to be until they are permitted to have practical experience in their profession. Stationed in small garrisons, never taking part in the drill of a larger body of men than a battalion, the natural tendency is to restrict the horizon of our officers' vision, to make them insistent upon details at the expense of the great essentials, for during their lives as officers they are never brought face to face with the great essentials of warfare, while the petty details of a one or two company post are always present.

Promotion is slow, fearfully slow. Up to the rank of colonel it depends upon seniority and not on individual effort, and after that to a great extent upon political influence. We have no general staff, the hope of possible promotion to which acts as a constant stimulus to the ambitious officer, and the door of entrance to our staff departments is closed to all officers without influence. The officers of the United States Army are as fine a body of men as can be found anywhere in the world. They are Americans, and what is more, when they leave West Point they are well-educated Americans, and yet all that education is, nine cases out of ten, almost wasted at our small posts.

We educate a man at West Point in the theory of commanding an army corps or an army, and when he graduates he knows that the best part of his life will be spent in commanding a corporal's guard. Small blame to our officers that many of them become petty and exacting, that many of them become martinets, and that many of them in whom ambition is dead lose all interest in their profession.

CIVIL INTERFERENCE IN ARMY MANAGEMENT.

I would be the first to oppose any suggestion that the Army should be independent of Congress or that it should not be under civil control, but I am sometimes forced to very seriously question whether there is not too much civil interference in the management of the Army and whether the Major-General Commanding is given a free enough hand. It is an open question with me whether Congress is fit to actively command the Army, for Congress does actively command the Army in all essential matters and in details as well.

You and I may criticise this department and that department, as I have very freely criticised to-day, and yet every criticism we make, every word of censure we utter is really made and uttered against ourselves. Only one member of this House of Representatives is a graduate of the Military Academy; I refer with all honor to my colleague on the Committee on Ways and Means, General WHEELER of Alabama, than whom no more gallant nor talented officer ever drew saber.

Several of you have done brave and gallant service for your country in our volunteer armies, but, with the exception of a few gentlemen, we are a lot of absolutely ignorant laymen, as unfit to meddle with the details of army organization as we would be to manage the Naval Observatory. We are too much inclined to think of our Army as a political machine. We have encouraged a feeling of dependence upon Congress on the part of our army officers. It is our fault that the methods of the primary—let us be frank—that politics have crept into the Army; so much so that we are getting to believe that the first requisite for a good army officer is not that he should be familiar with his profession, but that he should be a good politician.

Article I, section 5, of the Regulations of the Army is in part as follows:

> Efforts to influence legislation affecting the Army, or to procure personal favor or consideration, should never be made except through regular military channels; the adoption of any other method will be noted in the military record of those concerned.

And yet since I have been in Congress I have seen officers of almost all ranks, from high to low, from all arms and branches of the service, persistently haunting the lobbies and committee rooms, and even the floor of this House before its meetings; I have seen them using all the influence, political and social, at their command for the purpose of either obtaining legislation which will benefit them personally, or favors, or assignments, or promotions which will be for their own individual good.

No proposition to reorganize any one branch of the service has ever been made that it has not been opposed desperately by every other branch of the service, from the fear, apparently, that the officers of the reorganized branch may obtain some possible advantage over their less fortunate comrades. I have never heard of any proposition for a reduction of any one or for the consolidation of any two or more of the staff departments that has not been opposed, and opposed successfully, in Congress through the efforts of the officers personally interested.

In the management of an army the best interests of the nation at large should be served and not those of the individual. Personal predilections and private friendships should be forgotten, and not, as is too often the case, remembered to the detriment of the whole service.

One of the arguments used in all seriousness against any change in existing conditions involving a reduction or a consolidation is that "General So-and-so or Colonel So-and-so, who is a very good fellow, will be forced out of the service."

The pension roll is an honor to the nation, but the active list of the Army should not be a pension roll. If officers are unfit for the duties which they are supposed to perform, whether from ignorance or from old age, unfeeling as it may seem to say so, they should either be retired or dismissed.

We have reserved to ourselves the command and the control of the Army, and at the same time we have tried to shift the responsibility for its efficiency or for its inefficiency to the shoulders of the Secretary of War and of the Major-General Commanding. We have almost always been fortunate in the men who have filled these two great offices; we are especially so to-day. Their shoulders are broad enough and they are strong enough to bear any responsibility we may place upon them; but in common honesty and in common justice if we propose to continue to hold them responsible for the efficiency of the Army we should at least give them the power to make the Army efficient.

WE ARE ABSOLUTELY UNPREPARED FOR WAR.

What I am going to say is said in all seriousness and with a full conviction of its truth, and no denial on the part of any official interested will shake my belief in its accuracy. No department of the staff of the Army is charged with what is the all-important duty of preparing for war. There exists in the War Department to-day not a single plan of campaign with a possible enemy; not a single skeleton order looking to the mobilization of troops, the enlistment of volunteers, or the enrollment of the militia; not a single plan for the formation of camps of instruction for volunteers; not a single plan for the movement of troops or for their supplies. In fact, we are as absolutely unprepared for war in so far as is concerned the expanding of the Army in time of war as we are unprepared for war in so far as is concerned the organization of the Army in time of peace.

The organized militia of the country would be of very little service to us; no reliable data exist as to its organization or discipline. The publication issued by the military information bureau of the Adjutant-General's Office, entitled The Organized Militia, which is practically all the information which we have upon the subject, is of small value. Many of the reports upon the condition of the militia of the various States are written by officers of the militia of those States, who naturally report in the most glowing terms on the condition of their own troops.

The United States officers who are sent to inspect the militia of other States and who report upon them have very evidently, with but few exceptions, been influenced more by a desire to be courteous to the national guardsmen, whose guests they have been, than by a desire to state plain, unvarnished, and possibly uncomplimentary facts. It is safe to assume that certainly not more than 50,000 of our organized militia is well organized and fairly well disciplined, and these are armed with rifles of various patterns and various calibers. In case of mobilization but a small part of our militia would be of more service than raw recruits, and in many instances they would not be as serviceable, for they would have to unlearn what they had been improperly taught.

It is needless for me to say that in the 50,000 serviceable militia is, of course, included the magnificent National Guard of my own State, than whom no finer body of men of the kind exists in the world. While we may be better off for war to-day than in 1861, it is doubtful if we could put an army into the field now in less time than we could then. It is doubtful if we could put an army of half a million or a quarter of a million men in the field capable of marching on Canada in less than six months.

IN TIME OF PEACE PREPARE FOR WAR.

Although our Army is utterly unprepared for war, it has become the fashion to assume that the United States is invulnerable both on sea and land. Our experience in the past is great justification for this assumption, despite the fact that in the Revolution we had the aid of France and the indirect aid of Spain; that in the war of 1812 we had the indirect aid of France; that in the war with Mexico we fought an enemy greatly our inferior, and that in the civil war the South was as unprepared for war as we were. God forbid that we should go to war again in our lifetime. But if we should, we will have to face not some country with its hands full elsewhere, or that is our inferior in strength, but some great European nation, strong in the power of a compulsory military system, powerful in the strength of modern organization and experience.

I am afraid that some of us are reaching the same condition of mind in which the French were in 1870. Some of us speak as lightly of going to war as if we had never had any experience of its horrors. We seem to forget that war is never beautiful, that victory is never easy, that no nation can be conquered without the loss on the part of the conqueror not only of hundreds of millions in treasure and in property, but of the lives of many of the best and noblest in the land.

And so our jingoes go on clamoring for war—ready to declare war to-day with this country and to-morrow with that—ignorant of the fact (I do them the justice to assume that it is ignorance) that we are utterly unprepared for war. It is an old saying, and possibly a trite one, but it bears repetition again and again, and it bears repetition especially to-day, that the greatest guaranty of peace is preparation for war. Our republican institutions will never permit of large standing armies in time of peace. Our people would never submit to a compulsory militia like that of Switzerland.

Our preparation for war in time of peace must be a small standing army, perfect in its organization and capable of great expansion in case of need. You gentlemen on the other side have the majority at both ends of the Capitol. You have the President. The responsibility is yours; but not more yours than it is ours. This is not a party question; this is not a factional issue. It is the duty of Congress, representing not any one party or any one section, but representing the whole American people, to see to it that our Army is, for its size, as nearly perfect as human experience and human knowledge can make it. [Loud applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD, in connection with my remarks, certain tables and statements.

There was no objection.

APPENDIX A.

SKELETONIZATION OF COMPANIES.

The Adjutant-General of the Army, in a letter dated December 3, 1897, says:

"Two companies of each regiment of infantry and two troops of each regiment of cavalry were skeletonized by the authority of the Secretary of War, published in General Orders, Nos. 70 and 79, from Headquarters of the Army, Adjutant-General's Office, series of 1890."

The orders are as follows:

[General Orders, No. 70.]

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, July 21, 1890.

By direction of the Secretary of War, the enlisted men of Companies I and K of each regiment of infantry will be transferred to other companies of the same regiment, the noncommissioned officers being attached for duty until vacancies occur, when they will be permanently assigned to the companies where such vacancies then exist.

These transfers will be made by department commanders and duly reported to the Adjutant-General of the Army. As far as practicable the transfers will be made to companies serving at the same post, and, in any event, so as to involve the least practicable cost for transportation.

All instructions heretofore given limiting the number of enlisted men for a company of infantry are hereby suspended until further orders.

Officers on duty with Companies I and K will be transferred to other companies from which officers are absent, either on detached service or on prolonged leave, and officers so absent will be transferred to Companies I and K. These transfers will be made in orders from the Adjutant-General's Office.

The records of Companies I and K will be sent to the respective regimental headquarters for preservation, and in order that they may be kept complete.

In the execution of this order department commanders will also order such movements of troops as will result, so far as practicable, in the withdrawal of garrisons from posts heretofore ordered to be abandoned.

By command of Major-General Schofield.

SAML. BRECK,
Acting Adjutant-General.

[General Orders, No. 79.]

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, July 25, 1890.

By direction of the Secretary of War the enlisted men of Troops L and M of each regiment of cavalry will be transferred to other troops of the same regiment, the noncommissioned officers being attached for duty until vacancies occur, when they will be permanently assigned to the troops where such vacancies then exist.

These transfers will be made by department commanders and duly reported to the Adjutant-General of the Army. As far as practicable, the transfers will be made to troops serving at the same post, and, in any event, so as to involve the least practicable cost for transportation.

All instructions heretofore given limiting the number of enlisted men for a troop of cavalry are hereby suspended until further orders.

Officers on duty with Troops L and M will be transferred to other troops from which officers are absent, either on detached service or on prolonged leave, and officers so absent will be transferred to Troops L and M. These transfers will be made in orders from the Adjutant-General's Office.

The records of Troops L and M will be sent to the respective regimental headquarters for preservation and in order that they may be kept complete and continued.

The respective department commanders will give the necessary orders for the transfers of horses, equipments, and arms.

In the execution of this order department commanders will also order such movements of troops as will result, so far as practicable, in the withdrawal of garrisons from posts heretofore ordered to be abandoned.

By command of Major-General Schofield.

CHAUNCEY McKEEVER,
Acting Adjutant-General.

The above orders are in direct violation of the following sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States:

"SEC. 1102. Each regiment of cavalry shall consist of 12 troops. * * *

"SEC. 1103. Each troop of cavalry shall consist of 1 captain, 1 first lieutenant, 1 second lieutenant, 1 first sergeant, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, 5 sergeants, 4 corporals, 2 trumpeters, 2 farriers, 1 saddler, 1 wagoner, and such other privates, not exceeding 78, as the President may direct.

"SEC. 1106. Each infantry regiment shall consist of 10 companies. * * *

Mr. LEWIS of Washington addressed the Chair.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. If I have any time remaining, I yield it to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEWIS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCLELLAN] has two minutes and thirty seconds remaining. The Chair was informed, however, by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX], who had control of the time of that side of the House, that he would yield his time to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEWIS]. That gentleman is now recognized.

[Mr. LEWIS of Washington addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, we have listened to two speeches on the other side of the House this afternoon that it seems should be reconciled one with the other. The distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCLELLAN] arraigns the committee for not proposing legislation to increase the Army——

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Oh, no; I was not arraigning the committee, but arraigning Congress—both parties equally.

Mr. HULL. Well, Congress, then. But he said he was disappointed that the bill did not suggest some change in the Army.

The Committee on Military Affairs takes its share of that. The gentleman from Washington seems to attempt to arraign Congress and the committee for an effort to increase the Army and to promote its efficiency.

Now, sir, the gentleman from New York discusses the Army question from a standpoint that I can most heartily indorse. His speech was not only well conceived and well delivered, but was full of valuable information for Congress and for the country. But he realizes from his service on the committee and his familiarity with the rules of the House that the Committee on Military Affairs have no power to bring in the measure he wants Congress to act on with an appropriation bill; and the gentleman from Washington, in his discursory flight of eloquence, has arraigned the committee for bringing in some of the very measures that the gentleman from New York would seem to commend. So far as the bill is concerned, neither gentleman is right.

There is not a single line in the bill, not a single sentence, proposing in any way to increase the Army of the United States. When, therefore, the gentleman in his closing remarks arraigns this committee for attempting to increase the military force of the Government, he is simply talking outside of the record, without a knowledge of what the bill contains. This seems an unfair method of discussion and makes the remarks of the gentleman from Washington out of place, if not absurd.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman from Iowa probably forgets that he wrote that before the bill was brought in at all. [Laughter.]

Mr. HULL. That may be very true. At least there is no relevancy in his remarks as applied to this bill.

I believe, and I think the majority of the people of this country believe, that the Army ought to be reorganized and enlarged. I believe that every patriotic American thinks that at least the artillery branch of the service should be increased to a size amply sufficient to take charge of our seacoast defenses. Very few people are fearful that an army of even 100,000 could overawe 70,000,000 people. But this is no bill where such a proposition can be introduced or entertained. The Army has always been the conservator of law and order; never the disturber of the peace.

That we should have a reorganization I do not think anyone will seriously question. The conditions are such that this reorganization seems absolutely essential, even if no increase is made. If we had war to-morrow it would be impossible for the Government of the United States to line up our troops under the present organization. Modern firearms make it impossible to successfully fight battles with our present organization. We have on our statute books a provision that in case of war the militia organization of the country shall conform to the Regular Army; while as a matter of fact the militia organization of the United States to-day is infinitely better than the organization of the Regular Army. It, at least, has the three-battalion system, the long line with three majors, while we have the old obsolete system which has been discarded all over the world except China.

We have letters from officers of the National Guard of different States asking that we change the law providing that the militia shall conform to the Regular Army organization in time of war, and asking us, on the contrary, to report a bill to change the law so that in case of war the Regular Army of the United States shall conform to the National Guard organization of the States.

Now, we can discuss the bill fully under the five-minute rule, and I have no desire to take up other points which have been raised by my friend from Tennessee, my colleague on the committee. When we reach them—those to which he has referred—in the consideration of the bill, as we proceed under the five-minute rule, I will take them up in their order, and for the present will ask the Clerk to report the first section of the bill, in order that we may proceed under the five-minute rule for amendment and debate.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill by paragraphs, read as follows:

Pay of enlisted men:
For pay proper of enlisted men of all grades, $4,290,000.
Additional pay for length of service, including Hospital Corps, $671,172.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs if there are any provisions of this bill that change existing law?

Mr. HULL. Yes; the report calls attention to two or three of them. Points of order are also reserved.

Mr. BAILEY. I reserved all points of order against the bill.

Mr. HULL. I will say to the gentleman that there are no provisions in this part of the bill which change existing law. In regard to the pay of the Army, there is a new provision which changes the regulations of the War Department, and I am inclined to think it would be subject to a point of order. There is another place in which we provide for the admission, free of duty, of articles necessary for the manufacture of artillery sacks. There is another provision for the using of money received from the States for ordnance and ordnance stores sold to the States, so that the War Department may replace the articles so sold.

Mr. BAILEY. I withdraw the formal amendment.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

The Corps of Engineers: For pay of officers in the Corps of Engineers, as now authorized and provided by law, $239,500.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, either I misunderstood the Clerk or the copy of the bill from which he is reading does not conform to the one which I have in my hand. I ask the Clerk to read the last paragraph again.

The Clerk read the paragraph again.

Mr. COX. That is all right.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Additional pay to officer in charge of public buildings and grounds at Washington, D. C., $1,500.

Mr. CLARDY. I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if this provision for additional pay to the officer in charge of public buildings is in addition to the regular pay which he receives as an army officer?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. CLARDY. Does that mean that it is worth $1,500 more per annum to take charge of affairs around this building than to serve as a regular army officer?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the general law authorizing the detail of an officer to take charge of the public buildings and grounds provides that while serving as such officer he shall have the rank and pay of a colonel. There is a captain detailed to this duty now, and this appropriation, in accordance with the general law, must make his salary equal to that of a colonel. When the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds is a colonel, then there is no extra pay given him.

Mr. CLARDY. What is the pay of a captain without this increase?

Mr. HULL. In round numbers it is, I suppose, about $2,200, depending on whether he is a captain mounted, or a captain of artillery, or a captain of infantry, and dependent also upon the length of his service.

Mr. CLARDY. This makes, then, nearly $4,000 in all.

Mr. HULL. Yes; but the general law provides for that. The Committee on Military Affairs have nothing to do with it except to appropriate for it.

Mr. CLARDY. That is what I wanted to have explained.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For commutation of quarters to commissioned officers on duty, without troops, at stations where there are no public quarters, $200,000.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to that section.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out "$200,000," in line 24, page 7, after the word "quarters," and insert in lieu thereof "$100,000."

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this appropriation of $200,000 to pay the hotel bills and such expenses of officers who have no quarters, or who are on duty without troops at stations where there are no quarters, is excessive, or else we have an extraordinarily large number of officers who are on duty without troops or quarters. It seems to me that $100,000 would be sufficient almost to maintain all the officers of the Army at the very best hotels in the United States.

Now, I am informed that many of these officers are distributed around among the different colleges of the United States, and in many cases at colleges where they have not twenty scholars to instruct in military tactics. I think this appropriation is excessive, and I should like to have some explanation from the chairman of the committee upon this item in the bill.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, as you will all see by looking at the Book of Estimates, the War Department submitted estimates for $210,000 for commutation of quarters. When officers are serving with troops they have quarters assigned them, provided by the Government. If on duty without troops, it would be unfair to ask, or rather compel, them to serve and pay room rent in addition to their other expenses. In some places this extra expense would take a large part of the salary of line officers.

A lieutenant, I think, has two rooms; a captain, three rooms; a major, a certain number; a lieutenant-colonel and a colonel so many, and when rooms are not furnished, they get $12.50 per month for each room. The War Department report to the committee was that $200,000 would not furnish the officers the quarters that they are entitled to where the officers are not serving with troops. When an officer serves with troops he gets his quarters furnished to him, but this is the provision for those not serving with troops. The estimate was $210,000. We refused to increase the amount.

I think there is one thing that is fair, and you yourself must admit it, that, taking into consideration the army officers of the Engineer Corps, where they are scattered all over the country, looking after the river and harbor work—take the officers that are on detail in any other line of duty, and they must hire their quarters, and if you compel them to do so, they must, out of their own salaries, furnish the quarters that the Government agrees to give them. You take the amount allowed them, if I recollect right, $12.50 a room; if you increase the amount, you may give them all the rooms they are entitled to have under the law when serving with troops free.

At Fort Myer we built quarters for officers, and there they are furnished free. At every other post in the country we build quarters and they are furnished to officers free when they are serving with troops. Now, when serving without troops, if this compensation is not given to them, it would simply mean that the officers of the Army would be compelled to pay for quarters out of their salaries which the Government has promised to furnish them.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Does the gentleman know how many officers are serving now without troops?

Mr. HULL. No; I do not. That would have to be obtained from the War Department. There are many in Washington. We had officers before the committee urging us to increase the amount; and they gave as the reason that there are a number of officers kept here without troops, and if they were to receive the $12.50 a room, it would not be sufficient to furnish quarters for the officer and for his family. I think my friend's amendment is altogether ill advised and hope it will be voted down. We refused to give more than $200,000, and the recommendation of the Department was to increase it, but the committee refused to do that.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Of course they are always clamoring for bigger appropriations, and as they are asking for this $200,000, it strikes me that a majority of the officers of the Army must be on service without troops and having their quarters furnished them.

Mr. HULL. I must say to my friend that a great many of them are serving without quarters being furnished them.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. The chairman of the committee has no knowledge of the number?

Mr. HULL. Not of the actual number. We would have to have the rank of each one to determine the number of rooms. We have placed the amount at $200,000, and the officers of the Army who are serving without troops will be given the number of rooms and the accommodations that the law and the regulations of the Army provide for officers of different rank, so that they will be given those free as they would have them when serving with troops.

[Mr. WHEELER of Alabama addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The amendment was again read.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For travel allowance to enlisted men on discharge, $180,000; retained and detained pay to enlisted men on discharge, $20,000; clothing not drawn due to enlisted men on discharge, $400,000; and interest on deposits of enlisted men, $85,000; in all, $685,000.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, in line 5, on page 8, I offer this amendment: Insert, after the word "dollars"—

This money shall be held and disbursed by the Treasury Department, and a complete account kept showing the value of interest accumulated on the fund and the disbursement thereof.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one moment there——

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Clerk report the amendment.

Mr. HULL. I reserve the point of order, as I could not hear what the amendment was.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 8, line 5, after the word "dollars," insert:

"This money shall be held and disbursed by the Treasury Department, and a complete account kept showing the value of interest accumulated on the fund and the disbursement thereof."

Mr. COX. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment just read, on which the gentleman from Iowa raises the point of order.

Mr. HULL. I raise the point of order that it is an entire change of law. The act of 1872 prescribes exactly how this money shall be received and paid out, and this changes the entire statute. This is new legislation, and, in addition to that, it is an absolute change of the existing statutes.

Mr. COX. Now, Mr. Chairman, I concede the proposition at once that if it is a change of existing law it is subject to the objection. The point is, and that is the only point, whether or not the law has been administered as provided by the act of 1872. There is no question of increasing the amount or of depreciating the amount; but I contend that under the act of 1872, which creates this matter, it is the duty of the Treasurer of the United States to hold this fund and disburse it. The policy of it we have discussed, and I need not refer to that.

Now, Mr. Chairman, not to prolong debate, section 1305 of the Revised Statutes is the one which creates this fund, and upon an examination of that act the Chairman will find that this money "shall be disposed of and shall be accounted for in the same manner as other public funds." Now, it is not accounted for in the same manner as other public funds under the practice that prevails now. What I desire to do by the amendment is to bring this money into the Treasury and let it be accounted for as other public funds are. At present we have no report whatever in the Treasury in regard to this fund.

The difficulty lies in separating it from any other fund, because it is in a totally different place; and I insist that this act does contemplate that the money should be carried in the Treasury just exactly as other "public funds," and should appear in the reports of the Treasurer. I will state to the Chair, if he needs any light upon the subject, that I have the act before me and will send it to the Chair for his perusal.

Mr. HULL. Is the Chair in any doubt?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. MARSH. Will the gentleman permit me to make a statement?

Mr. COX. Certainly.

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Chairman, the $85,000 of interest that was provided for in line 5, page 8—the page to which the gentleman from Tennessee has offered his amendment—is money that is now in the Treasury.

Mr. COX. That is so.

Mr. MARSH. It belongs to the United States Government. It never was put there by any soldier, but it has been collected in the ordinary mode of collecting taxes. This provision is simply a provision to pay interest upon deposit money that has been deposited by the soldier under the act of 1872.

So that the gentleman's amendment can not apply to this $85,000. This $85,000 has not been put into the Treasury by any soldiers, but as money not otherwise appropriated, and which this clause proposes to appropriate. It is in the Treasury, accounted for by the Treasury Department, and when paid out will be accounted for by the Treasury Department. It can not be otherwise.

Mr. COX. In answer to that proposition, I will simply say it is an appropriation of $85,000 for the purpose of paying money that belongs to the soldiers.

Mr. MARSH. It is to pay interest on the money belonging to the soldiers.

Mr. COX. So much the more important, in my view of it, whether it be interest or principal. The act creating that fund provides that it shall be held and disbursed "as is other public moneys." Now, then, is it a proper way to disburse it at the paymaster's office, in violation of the act that provides that it shall be disbursed "as is other public moneys"?

Mr. MARSH. I will answer the gentleman from Tennessee, because I am certain that he is laboring under a misapprehension. There is deposited by the soldiers in the hands of the Government in the neighborhood of a million and a half of dollars, which is a part of their savings. The Government pays 4 per cent interest on these soldiers' deposits, and pays them at the time the soldiers are discharged.

Mr. COX. That is correct.

Mr. MARSH. This appropriation has nothing to do with those deposits; it makes provision only for the payment of the interest. The deposits made by the soldiers are one thing, and the 4 per cent which the Government agrees to pay on those deposits is another thing, and that is the thing provided for here in this item of $85,000. This $85,000 was never in the hands of the soldiers. It is not money that they deposited, but money that belongs to the Government, which this bill, by this clause, proposes to appropriate and pay. And when that $85,000 has been paid it will have to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, and there will be an accounting of it in the Treasury of the United States. The Treasury Department no doubt will disburse this interest money through the agency of the paymasters, a very appropriate agency through which to disburse the money which is due from the Government to the soldiers.

Mr. COX. Now, will the gentleman permit me? We are trying to get at what is right here.

Mr. MARSH. Certainly,

Mr. COX. Suppose the position is correct, that it is money due the soldiers. Should not that appear on the books of the Treasury Department?

Mr. MARSH. I will say to the gentleman that it will appear there. This money is the interest on the deposits amounting to $85,000. Now, that $85,000 is in the Treasury and this bill appropriates it, and when this appropriation passes, the Treasury Department will pay it out to the paymasters and it will appear upon the books of the Treasury Department.

Mr. COX. That is what the law says shall not be done.

Mr. MARSH. My friend from Tennessee confounds this interest fund that never did belong to the soldiers with the deposit of a million and a half now in the hands of the Government that does belong to the soldiers and is payable to them at the termination of their enlistment. I sympathize with my friend from Tennessee in regard to the deposits of this million and a half of money that belongs to these soldiers. I think with him that that money ought to remain in the Treasury until it is paid out to the soldiers at the termination of their enlistment, and that it should not be used up by any department.

But that proposition is not embodied in this clause that is covered by his amendment. That is an entirely different thing from the subject now before the House. This is simply an appropriation of $85,000 out of money already in the Treasury to pay the interest upon the debt which the Government owes to these soldiers, and it is estimated that during the next year, inasmuch as there are two enlistments of soldiers, it will require $85,000 to pay that interest. At the same time that interest is paid to these discharged soldiers. The money which they had deposited with the Government will also be paid. It is said that no appropriation for that under the law has been made, but under the practice that money remains in the hands of the Government as money belonging to the soldiers, and, as I understand it, they pay it out without an appropriation.

In other words, the money deposited by the soldier is received, and at the termination of his enlistment is paid back to him.

But that is not what is included in this provision. This, as I have said, is simply an appropriation of money in the Treasury to pay interest upon a debt which the Government owes to these soldiers.

Mr. COX. Pardon me a moment. I ask gentlemen to observe the language of the bill making this appropriation of $85,000. It is to pay the interest on a fund held by the Government and belonging to the soldiers. That we agree about. I agree with my friend and colleague on the committee that this bill reaches that far.

But the point to which I especially call the attention of the Chair is this: This fund upon which this large amount of interest, $85,000, has accumulated ought to appear in the books of the Treasury Department. I insist that the law whence the authority is derived for the Government to hold this fund provides that it shall be held and disbursed as any other public fund. Now, is the Government holding it and disbursing it as any other public fund when the money is being paid out by the Paymaster-General while there is nothing on the books of the Treasury showing the amount of the fund and the interest which has accumulated upon it? When the act creating this system provided that the fund should be held in the Treasury and disbursed as any other public fund, it was a wise provision and one which should be carried out. That is my point.

Mr. MARSH. Will the gentleman allow me one moment?

Mr. COX. With pleasure. Let me say before the gentleman proceeds that I have here the act which created this system; it is at the service of the chairman or any other gentleman who may wish to see it.

Mr. MARSH. I have before me the amendment which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] has offered. It is to come in after the word "dollars," in line 6. It provides:

> This money shall be held and disbursed by the Treasury Department—

My friend ought to know that this money is now held by the Treasury Department; nobody else has ever held it since the taxpayer paid it in.

A MEMBER. That refers to the original fund.

Mr. MARSH. It does not refer to the original fund.

A MEMBER. That is what the gentleman means.

Mr. MARSH. I am trying to get at the meaning of the proposition before the House.

> This money shall be held and disbursed by the Treasury Department and a complete account kept, showing fully the interest accumulated on the fund and the disbursements thereof.

Now, that amendment, if it applies to anything, applies to the $85,000 appropriated in this bill to pay interest upon these deposits of the soldiers. I suggest to my friend from Tennessee that he has offered a very good amendment, but he has offered it in the wrong place.

Mr. COX. I shall be thankful to the chairman of the committee if he ever finds a place where I can get it in. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRIFFIN addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the question.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I feel, Mr. Chairman, that a few words ought to be offered in vindication of the practice of the Paymaster-General's Bureau in reference to this fund.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. GRIFFIN. My colleague, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Cox], claims that this money ought to be paid out and disbursed as any other public fund; but he failed to read that portion of the section which controls the custody and handling of this fund. I think that the intention of Congress in the enactment of this law will be better understood by reading the entire section than by reading a part of it; and without questioning the wisdom of the provision or the motive which prompted its enactment, I say the Paymaster-General's Department is fully justified in establishing and maintaining the practice which has grown up under this statute with reference to this fund.

Section 1305 of the Revised Statutes provides that—

> Any enlisted man of the Army may deposit his savings, in sums not less than $5, with any army paymaster, who shall furnish him a deposit book, in which shall be entered the name of the paymaster and of the soldier, and of the amount, date, and place of such deposit.

There is no reference there to the money going into the Treasury of the United States, although, as a matter of fact, it does go into the Treasury of the United States; and the Treasurer of the United States takes care of that fund, but it is placed in the Treasury as a trust fund which can be drawn out on the order of the Paymaster-General without any appropriation by Congress.

The section goes on to provide:

> The money so deposited shall be accounted for in the same manner as other public funds, and shall pass to the credit of the appropriation for the pay of the Army—

There is where the appropriation is made, so that this money may become a part of the fund provided for the pay of the Army without any further action of Congress—> and shall not be subject to forfeiture by sentence or court-martial.

Under that statute the Paymaster-General and his department have been in the habit of receiving these deposits, holding them in trust until called for by those making the deposits, and then paying them out without any restraint on the part of Congress or any department of the Government. And the policy is a wise one, because if this fund were not under the control of the Paymaster-General's Department an act of Congress making an appropriation would be required to make repayment to the soldiers when demanded by them.

Why may it not be in a continuing appropriation, as this, so that it may be paid out without repeated acts of appropriation on the part of Congress and properly accounted for when the soldiers call for it?

Hence there is no violation of the statute on the part of the Pay Department of the Government in dealing with these deposits in this manner. We should not, as my colleague from Illinois on the committee [Mr. MARSH] has indicated, lose sight of the distinction between the principal of the deposit and the $85,000 proposed to be appropriated by the bill for interest on such deposits as is estimated will be drawn out this year, and, in that respect, the amendment proposed by my colleague from Tennessee is not germane to the proposition before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of saying a word. I did not desire to occupy the floor when this matter was under discussion, but the House may have entertained the impression that the Government does not take proper account of the deposits of the soldiers, and I therefore ask the Clerk, for the information of the committee, to read a report from the Paymaster-General submitted to the committee, showing the amount of money on deposit and the interest paid upon the same.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, PAYMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, January 11, 1898.

SIR: In reply to your inquiry of the 8th instant, I have the honor to submit the following statement in regard to soldiers' deposits, United States Army, under act of May 15, 1872:

Total amount deposited from date of act to June 30, 1897	$9,735,003.65
Total amount repaid during same period	8,453,614.02
Amount remaining on deposit July 1, 1897	1,281,389.63
Amount of interest paid on above deposits (repaid)	706,642.40
Total number of deposits (not depositors), 135,149.
Average amount of deposit	52.74
Total number of deposits (not depositors) repaid, 157,711.
Average deposit repaid	53.79
Average interest paid on each deposit	4.48

Average length of time deposits have run, about two years one month.

An annual appropriation is made in the Army bill for payment of interest on deposits, repaid.

Very respectfully submitted.

T. H. STANTON,
Paymaster-General, United States Army.

Hon. JOHN A. T. HULL,
Chairman Military Committee, House of Representatives.

Mr. HULL. Now, I did not desire to say anything as to the merits or to take part in the discussion when the question of order was before the committee. But I do wish to say that if the amendment had been in order, I think—and I believe that it will commend itself to the members generally—that the present system is better than the one proposed.

If the money ought to be covered, under the law, into the Treasury, it could only be paid out under a special act of Congress, and the soldier would simply, in that case, get a claim against the Government, which he would have to present to Congress, instead of getting the money to which he would be entitled.

This is designed to encourage the saving, on the part of soldiers, of a part of their pay, to be used when they are discharged from the service. The Paymaster-General has what you might call pass books, which are given to the soldiers, and enters in them each time the soldiers desire to deposit their savings just as is done in the case of a savings bank. If anything happens to the soldier, an accident by which he is discharged, he goes to the paymaster, the amount due him is ascertained, and it is paid over to him. By this means he is encouraged to deposit a portion of his money to accumulate a sort of savings fund. It constitutes a sum similar to a bank deposit, that he can call upon at any time he needs it or on the completion of his term of service, and for that reason I think it is better than the system which has been suggested.

So far as the Government keeping the accounts is concerned, they are kept just as a savings bank does.

Mr. MARSH. Will my colleague allow an interruption?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. MARSH. I understood my colleague to say that if the soldier met with a mischance or misfortune of any kind, he could draw his money out at any time. As I understand it, he can not draw it out except upon the expiration of his term of service or on his discharge.

Mr. HULL. What I think I said—or what I intended to say, which is about the same thing—was if he met with an accident by which he was discharged at any time he could receive, on demand, the accumulated savings that he has deposited, instead of receiving a claim against the Government, which he would have to present here for payment.

Mr. COX. By the statement which has been reported the Government owes to the soldier something over a million dollars; and this proposition is to pay the interest upon it. Now, I ask the chairman if, in any statement made by the Secretary of the Treasury, this appears as an indebtedness of the United States to anybody?

Mr. HULL. The appropriation asked for is not to pay the interest on all this money, but only upon that belonging to soldiers to be discharged during the current fiscal year we are appropriating for. We appropriate as near as we can for the soldiers whose term of enlistment will expire during the year.

I ask the Clerk to proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For mileage to officers when traveling on duty without troops, when authorized by law, not to exceed $130,000, to be allotted by the Secretary of War to the War Department and to the several military departments, and not more than three-fifths of said amount shall be expended during the first half of the fiscal year and not more than one-half of the remainder during each of the remaining quarters: Provided, That hereafter the maximum sum to be allowed and paid to any officer of the Army shall be 4 cents per mile, distance to be computed over the shortest usually traveled routes, and in addition thereto the cost of the transportation actually paid by the officer over said route or routes, except as hereinafter provided, exclusive of parlor car or sleeping car fare or transfers: And provided further, That when any officer so traveling shall travel in whole or in part on any railroad on which the troops and supplies of the United States are entitled to be transported free of charge, or over any of the bond-aided Pacific railroads, or over the railroad of any railroad company which is entitled to receive only 50 per cent of the compensation due such company for transportation services rendered to the United States, he shall, for any and all journeys involving travel over such road or roads, be furnished with a transportation request for such travel, by an officer of the Pay Department.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to raise the point of order on this provision of the bill that it is contrary to existing law and is new legislation.

Mr. HULL. I referred, Mr. Chairman, in my explanation of the bill, to this provision. I wish simply to say to my friend from Texas and to the Chair that it is a change only in the method of disposing of the pay for officers' transportation. Under the present law we separate the items and give the Paymaster-General control only of the 4 cents a mile authorized by law, and leave the Quartermaster-General to furnish transportation.

We took out of that appropriation for the Paymaster's Department last year $60,000 and transferred it to the Quartermaster's Department. The committee believed that it was better to place it back in the present form, for the reason that you could keep a better account of it, better track of it, and get a better report of it than in the other way. They believed, further, that this is simply a detail of how this money shall be expended; that it is a limitation on these officers, and that it is not new legislation. I do not care which way you put it. The Chair can rule on it, on this statement.

Mr. SAYERS. Does the gentleman insist that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. HULL. I do not believe it is well taken, but have already called attention to it as possibly subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Texas to what part of the present paragraph does his point of order apply?

Mr. SAYERS. To the entire paragraph. I will read the existing law:

For mileage to officers when authorized by law, $80,000: Provided, That hereafter the maximum sum to be allowed and paid to any officer of the Army shall be 4 cents per mile, the distance to be computed over the shortest usually traveled routes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the reason why I have raised the point of order is this: I have been informed that if the language in the bill under consideration be adopted, the expense to the Government of an officer traveling from Washington to San Francisco, for instance, will be much greater than if he were traveling between the same places under the present law.

Mr. HULL. That is not the information of the committee.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, that is the information I have.

Mr. HULL. How can it be so?

Mr. SAYERS. I will state to the gentleman.

Mr. HULL. Very well; I should like to hear the reason.

Mr. SAYERS. I will state the reason, as given me. For instance, suppose an officer is ordered from Washington City to San Francisco. Under the present law he is given an order, say, to the Pennsylvania Central. The Pennsylvania Central then gives to the officer transportation to San Francisco. Now, this transportation may be in part over a road which can not charge the Government anything for army transportation, and also over another road from which the Government is authorized to deduct 50 per cent. The officer goes to San Francisco. The Pennsylvania Central presents the order to the War Department for payment. Remember that upon it has been sold to the officer a through ticket, and therefore costing less than if it was a broken ticket.

When this order is presented at the War Department, I am informed that it deducts from what may be due for the cost of the ticket, say $100, the proportional share of the roads, which furnish army transportation without cost and for 50 per cent of the ordinary cost. So the Pennsylvania Central only gets its proportional share of the reduced rate on account of buying a through ticket, and there is a saving to the Government in the expense of the transportation of the officer from Washington to San Francisco.

This policy, I have been informed, has obtained within the last two years. Prior to that time my information is that the provision which is now in the pending bill was the law, and that if an officer was ordered to San Francisco from Washington the Pennsylvania Central Railroad, for instance, would not give a through ticket, but would give a broken ticket. That is to say, it would give a ticket reaching to the point where the officer would begin to travel over the free route or the route from which 50 per cent would be deducted.

Then this officer would secure transportation over the free route, not under the law which makes his transportation free, but as any other passenger, and in the same way along the route which was only allowed to charge 50 per cent, and the Government thereby paid largely more for the transportation of that officer than it would under existing law. That is my information.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman has stated a hypothetical case that does not exist.

Mr. SAYERS. It is necessary to state a hypothetical case in order to make myself understood. Officers are ordered from Washington to San Francisco.

Mr. HULL. Oh, yes.

Mr. SAYERS. They have been so ordered.

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. SAYERS. And I am told that this very thing which I have stated to the committee has actually occurred.

Mr. HULL. The reason, I think, why the War Department last year wanted us to change over to the Quartermaster's Department the furnishing of the transportation was with the idea that they would get in sleeping-car fare.

Mr. SAYERS. That is not my understanding.

Mr. HULL. And under this system they do not. They have all put in their bills for it, and the Treasury Department has held them up.

Mr. SAYERS. Let me ask the gentleman one further question. If the statement made in regard to the sleeping-car fare be true, why has the Secretary of War made regulations under existing law now outside of it and allowed sleeping-car fare to officers? Is that a fact?

Mr. HULL. The officers of the War Department held that under the amendment we made last year they were entitled to sleeping-car fare. There is a difference between the Treasury and War Departments as to whether that is true or not under the law we passed last year.

Mr. SAYERS. The Treasury Department, I understand, says the officer is not, and the Comptroller of the Treasury, Mr. Bowler, held it up?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. SAYERS (continuing). Notwithstanding it was allowed by the regulations of the Secretary of War, and that necessitated the existing legislation upon this subject.

Mr. HULL. The trouble of holding it up comes from that law, and the Department is trying to restore the law as it was, because I am satisfied that an officer ordered to a place must have transportation. Under the law as it exists there has been allowed an officer traveling on duty without troops 4 cents a mile for sleeping-car fare, hotel bills, and expenses; and in addition to that the Government has always given transportation to an officer traveling on duty without troops.

If the gentleman looks at the law, under the head of "Transportation of the Army, Quartermaster's Department," he will find what the law has been with reference to officers traveling without troops for at least twenty-five years until we changed it in the Fifty-fourth Congress.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman allow me here?

Mr. HULL. Let me explain. A gentleman can not understand himself unless he can finish his statement. The Pay Department also furnished transportation when an officer was on duty traveling without troops, in addition to the 4 cents per mile. We separated the two accounts in the Fifty-fourth Congress, and we propose here to put them back together again; and in each case, whether it be furnished by the paymaster or by the quartermaster, if they obey the law, they will furnish the transportation over the nearest usually traveled route.

There is no difference in that provision; so that it can not be that, under the Pay Department, a man can go outside and take a line that would suit him and make the Government pay if that is not economical. They have the same regulation in that respect in both cases.

Mr. SAYERS. Now, will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. SAYERS. If the provision in the pending bill should become law and an officer were ordered, say, from Washington to San Francisco, how would his transportation be paid—in what way?

Mr. HULL. His transportation would be paid. He would get his 4 cents a mile over the nearest usually traveled route. There is no discretion in that part of it. Now, in addition to that, he must apply to the Pay Department and be furnished with a "transportation request" on which to travel. That would be furnished by the Pay Department in place of the Quartermaster's Department.

Mr. SAYERS. In order to secure his transportation, is he required to get the request for transportation over each road, say, going from here to San Francisco?

Mr. HULL. He must get it over the nearest usually traveled route of travel.

Mr. SAYERS. Does not the officer pay for his transportation?

Mr. HULL. The law says not.

Mr. SAYERS. Did not he do so under a former law?

Mr. HULL. This is practically the same law.

Mr. SAYERS. Would not an officer in the Pay Department pay for his transportation and be reimbursed by the Government?

Mr. HULL. The officer will be furnished the transportation, and the road will send the bill to the Department and it will be paid. He can not get the transportation without a request. The officer has to make a transportation request. He must have that and take that with him to the road and they furnish the transportation at the request from the Department.

Mr. SAYERS. The road issues the transportation?

Mr. HULL. And the road issues the transportation at the request of the Quartermaster-General under the present law and at the request of the Paymaster-General under this provision.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a confusion about this matter. At least I do not understand the practice under the law as the gentleman does, and I trust he will let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. HULL. I will.

Mr. SAYERS. I want to see if we can not get a correct understanding of the matter.

Mr. HULL. Now, I want to call your attention to this fact, if the Chair should hold your point of order well taken. The amendment is a desirable one to change it back. It was considered by the gentleman from Tennessee and all others in the committee, and there was no objection to it. Then you will have to provide the $80,000 for the 4 cents, and the $50,000—that is all we allowed; we cut it down $10,000 from what they had—to the Quartermaster-General to pay for their transportation, as provided in here.

Now I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEWIS] have leave to extend in the RECORD his remarks, which he had not concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the remarks of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEWIS] be extended in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HULL. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HULL, from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that they had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6546) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and had come to no resolution thereon.

JOSEPH H. JOHNSON AND OTHERS.

Mr. ODELL. I am instructed by the Committee on Accounts to submit the following resolution for immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House the sum of $780 to Joseph H. Johnson, Thornton S. Alexander, and J. M. Saltsman for services performed under the direction of the Clerk, in the Clerk's document room, from June 24, 1897, to November 30, 1897, both dates inclusive; and the Clerk is hereby authorized to continue the employment of two folders in the Clerk's document room during the present session of Congress, to be paid out of the contingent fund at the rate of $75 per month.

Mr. BAILEY. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Accounts if this is a unanimous report.

Mr. ODELL. It is a unanimous report.

Mr. DINGLEY. Does it provide for any enlargement of the force?

Mr. ODELL. Not over that of the Fifty-fourth Congress. These two men have been employed by the Committee on Accounts during the special session, and this is the only case where this compensation is asked for by the employees in this way, and it is absolutely necessary that they should be there.

Mr. DALZELL. How many are there?

Mr. ODELL. Two.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ODELL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL FOLDERS.

Mr. ODELL also, from the Committee on Accounts, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House be, and is hereby, authorized to employ fifteen additional folders in the folding room of the House, at a compensation at the rate of $75 each per month, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House: Provided, That all such employees shall be dropped from the rolls of the Doorkeeper at a period not later than one month from the expiration of the present session of Congress.

Mr. ODELL. I ask that the report accompanying the resolution be read.

The report was read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred resolution No. 88, beg leave to recommend the adoption of the following:

"Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ fifteen additional folders in the folding room of the House, at a compensation at the rate of $75 per month, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House: Provided, That all such employees shall be dropped from the rolls of the Doorkeeper not later than at the expiration of one month from the end of the session of the House."

Strike out in line 2 the word "fifteen," and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight," thereby making it read, "authorized to employ eight additional folders," and as thus amended the committee recommend its adoption.

Mr. BAILEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if this is an increase of the number of employees of the House?

Mr. ODELL. I would say that during the Fifty-second, Fifty-third, and Fifty-fourth Congresses it has been usual to authorize the employment of fifteen additional folders; but the committee have substituted for fifteen the word "eight," so that it is a reduction of seven. The resolution has always been adopted at the long session of Congress.

Mr. BAILEY. I would like to ask if they have provided for the other seven in any other resolution? [Laughter.]

Mr. STEELE. Not yet.

Mr. ODELL. No, sir; the committee has not.

Mr. CANNON. Is there less work to do now than in the former Congresses?

Mr. ODELL. No; but we think eight men can do this work.

Mr. CANNON. Then the work has not been increased by the printing bill passed under the lead of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON]?

Mr. LOUD. The employment has not increased either, I would say to the gentleman.

Mr. BAILEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. ODELL] if it is customary to pass this resolution thus early in the session?

Mr. ODELL. I think it is. I know it was done in the Fifty-fourth Congress.

Mr. BAILEY. Inasmuch as it reduces the number of folders, I am perfectly willing.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ODELL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting report of the operations of the Bureau of Animal Industry for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897—to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, calling attention to certain specified facts in connection with recent dealings of the Government with the Sisseton, Wahpeton, and Medawakanton and Wahpakoota (now Santee) bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians—to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, as required by act of Congress approved June 7, 1897, a report concerning the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians, with map illustrative thereof—to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SILVER COINAGE AND COIN REDEMPTION.

Mr. VEST. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred a concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], to report it favorably without amendment. I ask that it may be read and that it lie on the table for the present. I give notice that at an early date I shall call it up and press for a vote upon it by the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. TELLER January 5, 1898, as follows:

Whereas by the act entitled "An act to strengthen the public credit," approved March 18, 1869, it was provided and declared that the faith of the United States was thereby solemnly pledged to the payment, in coin or its equivalent, of all the interest-bearing obligations of the United States, except in cases where the law authorizing the issue of such obligations had expressly provided that the same might be paid in lawful money or other currency than gold and silver; and

Whereas all the bonds of the United States authorized to be issued by the act entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," approved July 14, 1870, by the terms of said act were declared to be redeemable in coin of the then present standard value, bearing interest payable semi-annually in such coin; and

Whereas all bonds of the United States authorized to be issued under the act entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved January 14, 1875, are required to be of the description of bonds of the United States described in the said act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt;" and

Whereas, at the date of the passage of said act of Congress last aforesaid, to wit, the 14th day of July, 1870, the coin of the United States of standard value of that date included silver dollars of the weight of 412½ grains each, declared by the act approved January 18, 1837, entitled "An act supplementary to the act entitled 'An act establishing a mint and regulating the coins of the United States,'" to be a legal tender of payment, according to their nominal value, for any sums whatever: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That all the bonds of the United States issued, or authorized to be issued, under the said acts of Congress hereinbefore recited, are payable, principal and interest, at the option of the Government of the United States, in silver dollars of the coinage of the United States containing 412½ grains each of standard silver; and that to restore to its coinage such silver coins as a legal tender in payment of said bonds, principal and interest, is not in violation of the public faith nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut subsequently said: I understand that before I came into the Chamber a report was made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], from the Committee on Finance, upon a certain concurrent resolution which was referred to that committee. I desire to say that that was not a unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. MORRILL. I wish to say that I was not present when the Senator from Missouri submitted the report. The statement of the Senator from Connecticut is correct. The report was not unanimous.

MRS. BETHIAH H. ROLLINS.

Mr. KYLE. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3179) granting a pension to Bethiah H. Rollins, to report it favorably without amendment. In view of the fact that the applicant is very poor and now 86 years of age, I should like the Senate to take immediate action upon the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Bethiah H. Rollins, at $12 per month.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator from South Dakota that the words "an army nurse" should be inserted after the name of the beneficiary.

Mr. KYLE. I accept the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask for the reading of the report in the case.

Mr. KYLE. I will say to the Senator from Alabama that the report consists of letters from Colonel Ainsworth, Chief of the Record and Pension Division of the War Department, giving her record as an army nurse, which is in accordance with the law in the case.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think if I make a brief statement the Senator from Alabama will not ask for the reading of the report. Under the general law army nurses are pensioned if they served a period of six months. This old lady, now 86 years of age, served a little over five months, and under the general law is barred because of that fact. She had two services under the law, and the committee simply waives the technicality of her not having served quite the full time. I think the Senator will not object to the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 3276) granting a pension to Mary Ellen Lauriat; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 3277) to authorize appointment of a military storekeeper in the Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3278) for the relief of Horace Brown; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FRYE introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 86) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the succession to the Presidency in a certain contingency; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FRYE. A statement of the reasons for the adoption of the proposed constitutional amendment is given at the end of the joint resolution, which I ask may be printed and referred to the Judiciary Committee with the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, that will be the order.

Mr. DEBOE. I introduce a joint resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration and passage.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read by title.

The joint resolution (S. R. 87) for the improvement of the Big Sandy River and its tributaries in Kentucky and West Virginia was read the first time by its title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair asks the Senator from Kentucky whether he desires the immediate consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. DEBOE. Yes, sir; I do.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without reference to a committee?

Mr. DEBOE. Yes, sir; if there be no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read at length for information.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to prepare and submit plans and estimates for the improvement of the Big Sandy River and Tug and Levisa forks of same, in Kentucky and West Virginia, by a system of locks and dams, and especially that portion between Louisa and the Ohio River.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky asks for the present consideration of the joint resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. FRYE. Where does that resolution come from?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is now introduced by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. DEBOE].

Mr. FRYE. I think a joint resolution involving so much as that does should go to the Committee on Commerce. Has the Senator from Kentucky any objection to a reference of his resolution to that committee?

Mr. DEBOE. I have no objection, if the Senator desires to have it referred.

Mr. FRYE. It is rather an important joint resolution, and I think it should go to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DEBOE. Very well; let that reference be made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENT TO THE NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLATT of New York submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. 467) for the regulation of cemeteries and the disposal of dead bodies in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (S. 468) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to accept the bequest of the late Peter Von Essen for the use of the public white schools of that portion of said District formerly known as Georgetown.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 6161) for the protection of fish in the District of Columbia, for the maintenance of a permanent spawning ground in the Potomac River in said District, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1258) to regulate, in the District of Columbia, the disposal of certain refuse, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HALE. If the morning business is concluded, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of what is known as the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 6251, known as the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLEN. I shall object to that until the morning business is transacted.

Mr. HALE. This is what is known as the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, and I gave notice yesterday that at the conclusion of the routine morning business to-day I should move to take it up. I have waited until I supposed the morning business was disposed of.

Mr. ALLEN. The morning business is not yet transacted. One or two orders of morning business have not yet been called.

Mr. HALE. I do not want to go on with the bill until the morning business is concluded. If there is any further morning business to be presented, I do not now press the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order, and then the Chair will state that there are two resolutions upon the table to be laid before the Senate.

MESSAGES AND PAPERS OF THE PRESIDENTS.

Mr. WARREN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed of the compilation known as Messages and Papers of the Presidents, by JAMES D. RICHARDSON, a Representative from the State of Tennessee, 30,000 copies, of which 10,000 copies shall be for the Senate and 20,000 copies for the House of Representatives.

SELLMAN K. HANNEGAN.

Mr. GORMAN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Duncan Hannegan and Mathilde N. Hannegan, son and daughter of Sellman K. Hannegan, deceased, late a messenger on the rolls of the Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary, at the rate per annum allowed by law to the messenger aforesaid, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

KILLING OF FRANK EPPS.

Mr. DANIEL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with any information which the Department of State may possess respecting the killing of Frank Epps, a sailor of the U. S. S. Olympia, by Japanese subjects in the harbor of Nagasaki, Japan, in December, 1897, and to inform the Senate if any steps have been taken looking to reparation.

INTEREST DUE BY PACIFIC RAILROADS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution yesterday submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS] directing the Secretary of the Treasury to inform the Senate by whose order the item as to certain moneys alleged to be due from the bond-aided Pacific railways has been dropped from their accounts.

Mr. HARRIS. That is the resolution which went over yesterday under objection, asking the Secretary of the Treasury for certain information in regard to the accounts of the bond-aided Pacific railroads. I should like to have the resolution read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution is now before the Senate and will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. HARRIS, as follows:

Whereas in the annual reports of the Secretary of the Treasury up to and including the year 1880 in the statement of the bond account of the several Pacific railway companies there was an item under the head of "Balance of accrued interest due the United States on interest account," and also an item of the total amount of interest due the United States from Pacific railway companies, including as on July 1, 1880, the amount of $11,006,214.03; and

Whereas in the subsequent report for the year 1881 the item referred to of "Balance of accrued interest due the United States on interest account," as well as the total amount of interest, which includes the amount above referred to, was omitted and has not since been included in the statements of the amount due the Government by the Pacific railway companies: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate, That the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to inform the Senate by whose order the item referred to, being the "Balance of accrued interest due the United States on interest account," was dropped from the account, and the reason therefor.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President, on yesterday morning this resolution was read amid so much confusion that I did not understand the purport of it, and I therefore asked to have it go over until this morning. I think it is an entirely proper resolution to be passed, and I have no objection to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

APPLICATIONS FOR INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution yesterday submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] which was laid over. Does the Senator desire to have the resolution read?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution yesterday submitted by Mr. ALLEN, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be, and they are hereby, directed to inquire and report by what authority the Secretary of the Interior refuses to examine and pass on applications for increase of pension until the expiration of one year after original pension has been granted.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to modify the resolution by inserting in the second line, after the words "Secretary of the Interior," the words "or the Commissioner of Pensions;" and at the end of the resolution to insert the words "or rejected."

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the resolution be read as proposed to be modified.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution as modified by the Senator from Nebraska will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution as modified, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be, and they are hereby, directed to inquire and report by what authority the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Pensions refuses to examine and pass on applications for increase of pension until the expiration of one year after original pension has been granted or rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. I made an objection yesterday to the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska simply for the purpose of looking into the matter a little before we acted upon it. I think the resolution is an entirely proper one, and I am quite in favor of its passage. I am sure that the Senator will get a courteous answer from the officials he calls upon for that purpose.

Mr. ALLEN. The resolution calls for an investigation by the Committee on Pensions and a report from that committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand that, but of course the committee will submit the statement they receive from the officials on that point.

Mr. ALLEN. I did not know but that the Senator from New Hampshire would be prepared to state this morning whether there is any authority for a rule of the kind referred to in the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not prepared to make any statement, but will say that the committee will give the resolution careful consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the passage of the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

BIMETALLIC NEGOTIATIONS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to have a slight change made in the order adopted yesterday for printing the "Correspondence respecting the proposals on currency made by the special envoys from the United States." I ask that the document I presented may be numbered and printed as a miscellaneous document, and that then the 5,000 additional copies asked for by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] may be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request made by the Senator from New Hampshire? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6161) for the protection of fish in the District of Columbia, for the maintenance of a permanent spawning ground in the Potomac River in said District, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Fisheries.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. Now I ask that the urgent deficiency appropriation bill may be considered.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6251) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the first formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read through and all committee amendments acted upon as they are reached in the reading—the customary course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That will be the order, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, at the top of page 2, to insert:

Nicaragua Canal Commission: To continue the surveys and examinations authorized by the act approved March 2, 1895, entitled "An act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes," into the proper route, the feasibility and cost of construction of the Nicaragua Canal, with the view of making complete plans for the entire work of construction of such canal as therein provided, $100,000; to continue available during the fiscal year 1899.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 20, after the word "inclusive," to strike out "one clerk" and insert "two clerks;" and in line 22, before the word "dollars," to strike out "and sixty-nine" and insert "eight hundred and fourteen;" so as to make the clause read:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Office of Auditor for State and other Departments: For the following additional clerks from February 1 to June 30, 1898, inclusive: Two clerks of class 4, and two clerks of class 3; in all, $2,814.40.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the clause making appropriations for the completion of the post-office building at Washington, D. C., on page 3, line 15, after the word "follows," to strike out:

So much of the basement as may be necessary by the heating, hoisting, ventilating, and electric-light plants, the remainder of the basement and the first and mezzanine floors by the city post-office, and so much of the remainder of the building as is necessary, from the second to the eighth floors, inclusive, shall be assigned by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster-General to the Post-Office Department, including the money-order office and the office of the Auditor for the Post-Office Department, including the records of said office now in the Union Building, and the office of the topographer. That the space in said building on the floors other than that to be occupied by the executive offices of the Post-Office Department and the executive offices of the Auditor for the Post-Office Department shall be assigned as aforesaid on the basis of and average of not exceeding 100 square feet to each clerk, which space is also to accommodate current files. Upon the completion of the assignment as aforesaid, if sufficient space remains available, the same shall be assigned by the Secretary of the Treasury to some office or bureau of the Government now occupying rented quarters in the city of Washington, on same basis as to square feet of space indicated above as to Post-Office Department and Auditor's office; and that so soon as said assignment of the entire available space in said building shall have been completed, said building shall be under the custody and control of the Post-Office Department.

And insert:

All of the first floor, including the mezzanine floors, and so much of the basement as may be necessary and convenient in the opinion of the Postmaster-General, by the city post-office; the second, third, fourth, and fifth floors, and one-half of the sixth floor, by the Post-Office Department, the entire force of which shall be removed thereto; one-half of the sixth floor, the seventh and eighth floors, and the ninth floor for files, by the Auditor for the Post-Office Department, the assignment of said space for the use of the force of said Auditor to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury. That all the space in said building above the first floor, other than that occupied by the executive officers of the Post-Office Department and the executive officers of the Auditor for the Post-Office Department, shall be assigned as aforesaid on the basis of an average of not exceeding 100 square feet to each clerk, which space is also to accommodate current files. Upon the completion of the assignment as aforesaid, if sufficient space remains available, the same shall be assigned by the Postmaster-General to some office or bureau of the Government now occupying rented quarters in the city of Washington, on the same basis as to square feet of space indicated above as applied to the Post-Office Department and Auditor's Office; and said building, immediately upon its occupation as before indicated, shall be under the custody and control of the Post-Office Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Mints and assay offices," on page 5, after line 18, to strike out:

That hereafter, in addition to the charges now imposed upon deposits of gold bullion at any of the assay offices or mints, the cost of transporting such bullion to the mints where the same is to be coined shall be collected from the depositor of the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "District of Columbia," on page 7, after line 16, to insert:

The unexpended balance of the appropriation of $14,000 for rent, fuel, light, care, and repair of armories, militia of the District of Columbia, made by the District appropriation act for the fiscal year 1898, may be applied by the general commanding the militia of the District of Columbia, under the authority of the Commissioners of the District, to contingent expenses of the said militia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Fish Commission," on page 8, after line 14, to insert:

For the purchase of land and buildings for a fish-cultural station in the State of California, at a suitable point on Battle Creek, to be selected by the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 18, to insert:

For the purchase of the steamer Senator for the Green Lake station, Maine, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers," on page 10, after line 9, to insert:

For the Marion Branch, namely: For electric-light plant (provided such amount of the appropriation for repairs for the Marion Branch for the year ending June 30, 1898, as may be spared is made available), $3,500; for barn, $1,130; and for lodge and gateway, $34; in all, $4,664.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Geological Survey," on page 14, after line 12, to insert:

For the geological and topographical surveys in Alaska, $20,000, to continue available until the close of the fiscal year 1899.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 9, to insert:

SENATE.

For fuel, oil, and cotton waste, and advertising for the heating apparatus, exclusive of labor, $9,671.60.

For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. HALE. From the Committee on Appropriations I offer an amendment to be inserted after line 13 on page 15.

The amendment was read and agreed to, as follows:

To pay Henry A. Du Pont the amount expended by him in prosecuting his claim to a seat in the Senate from the State of Delaware, $1,855.45.

Mr. HALE. I also offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted at the end of the bill.

The amendment was read and agreed to, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

For miscellaneous items and expenses of special and select committees, $20,000.

Mr. HALE. There are no further amendments from the committee.

Mr. FRYE. I offer an amendment to come in on page 12, after line 2.

The SECRETARY. After line 2, on page 12, it is proposed to insert:

Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, Medical Department, 1898: To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for "Medical Department" for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, for surgeons' necessaries for vessels in commission, navy-yards, naval stations, Marine Corps, and Coast Survey, and for the civil establishment at the several naval hospitals, navy-yards, naval laboratory, and department of instruction, museum of hygiene, and Naval Academy, $10,000.

Mr. FRYE. I simply desire to state that this is estimated for. I have a letter addressed by Surgeon-General Van Reypen to the Secretary of the Navy, in which he says:

I have the honor to transmit herewith a deficiency estimate for an additional appropriation under "Medical Department" for the current year of $10,000, the amount shown by the records of this Bureau and the books of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts to be deficient.

The items of the deficiency are given. There is also a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, which may be printed, but it is not necessary to read it.

The letter referred to is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 8, 1898.

SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith, for transmission to Congress, to be included in the urgent deficiency bill, an estimate of an appropriation of $10,000 required by this Department under the head of "Medical Department, 1898." A copy of a letter from the Surgeon-General of the Navy in connection with this estimate, together with a memorandum showing the condition of the appropriation referred to, is herewith inclosed.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully,

JOHN D. LONG, Secretary.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

MEMORANDUM.

Estimated cost of semiannual requisitions already received from United States naval laboratory for medicines and surgical instruments and appliances required for issue during the remainder of the fiscal year 1898	$13,236.30
Appropriation, Medical Department, 1898, remaining available January 1, 1898	2,557.07
Probable deficiency under Medical Department, 1898	10,679.23

Mr. FRYE. Of course there is no objection to the supplying of this deficiency.

Mr. HALE. I will say to my colleague that the committee have considered this amendment and several others of the kind and have not put them on the pending bill because it is an immediate, urgent deficiency bill; but they will be taken care of in the next bill.

Mr. FRYE. When is the next bill likely to come before the Senate?

Mr. HALE. I can not tell, but I think pretty soon. We have only put on the present bill pressing items, and the amendment of my colleague, with other matters of the kind, will be taken care of in the next bill.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator will see that this item is taken care of?

Mr. HALE. Yes, I will see to it.

Mr. FRYE. Under the circumstances I will not press the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

HARRY K. SPRING AND CHARLES W. NELSON.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

In response to the resolution of the Senate dated December 18, 1897, relative to the arrest in Colombia of Harry K. Spring and Charles W. Nelson, I transmit a report from the Secretary of State and accompanying papers showing the action taken by the Department of State in the case.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, January 13, 1898.

LYNCHING OF LUIS MORENO.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, touching the lynching in 1895 at Yreka, Cal., of Luis Moreno, a Mexican citizen, and the demand of the Mexican Government for an indemnity for his relatives on account thereof.

Following the course adopted in the case of the lynching of three Italian subjects at Hahnsville, La., on August 8, 1891, I recommend the appropriation by Congress, out of humane consideration and without reference to the question of liability of the Government of the United States in the premises, of the sum of $2,000, to be paid by the Secretary of State to the Government of Mexico, to be by that Government distributed among the heirs of the above-named Luis Moreno.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, January 13, 1898.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me for a moment?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I desire to call up for present consideration the bill (S. 3203) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, under certain conditions, to purchase the Kansas Pacific Division of the Union Pacific Railroad, reported from the Committee on Pacific Railroads. This is a matter urgent in its nature. There will be no objection to the bill, and it can be speedily disposed of. If there should be objection, and any discussion ensues, I recognize the right of the Senator from Minnesota, of course, to insist upon his motion.

Mr. DAVIS. I am willing that the bill shall be considered if it leads to no debate. If it does, I shall have to object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be stated by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3203) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, under certain conditions, to purchase the Kansas Pacific Division of the Union Pacific Railroad.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. THURSTON. When the bill is up for consideration, I shall most earnestly press an amendment to it such as I suggested some time since in the Senate. I must oppose the conferring of any authority upon the President of the United States to purchase a railroad for this Government without giving him at the same time authority to dispose of the property.

Mr. DAVIS. As it seems that the bill will lead to debate, I shall have to object.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Nebraska says he desires to propose an amendment and discuss it, and under the circumstances I can not ask the indulgence of the Senator from Minnesota further.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I renew my motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, in this behalf I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to a notice given yesterday evening that immediately after the disposition of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill this morning the Committee on the Census would insist upon the Senate considering the pending measure, the regular order being Senate bill 94, providing for the preliminary work looking to the taking of the next census.

This bill, in the natural order of events, should not occupy more than a few hours' time. The main question, the series of questions to be involved in the taking of the census, will properly come up for consideration in the Senate when the bill presenting the regular order of operations in connection with the census is submitted by the director and the other officers provided for in the pending bill. It is very important that this preliminary measure shall receive early attention.

From the published statements ascribed to leading Senators upon the Committee on Foreign Relations it must be manifest that the opinion exists amongst well-informed Senators on this subject that the proposition so near to the heart of the Senator from Minnesota, the consideration of the treaty of annexation, can not be disposed of inside of thirty days. It will not answer, if we desire to pay due regard to the public interests, to allow the preliminary census bill to be delayed for that length of time. The attention of the Senate was called on a former occasion to the unusual cost to the Government which resulted from the tardy action of Congress in providing for the taking of the Eleventh Census. It is the earnest desire of the committee to avoid the mistakes of the past. The pending bill is but preliminary in its character, and we can not look upon a delay of thirty days with any degree of favor.

I sincerely hope that the Senator from Minnesota, considering all the circumstances and conditions, will for the time being waive his motion to go into executive session, and allow the census bill to be taken up for consideration this morning. I do not think it will lead to a lengthy debate. I believe it will be disposed of during the day, and I have no doubt whatever that the Senator will make much progress in the consideration of the treaty by allowing this, which seems to me to be an imperative piece of legislation, to pass by and be disposed of.

Mr. DAVIS. Under some arrangements which have been made I very much regret that I feel unable to accede to the request of the Senator from Montana. I have no doubt that within a very few days a very propitious moment will present itself for the consideration of the bill which he has in charge. There is no prospect that thirty days are going to be consumed by way of obstacles in the consideration of the treaty. I do not feel at liberty this morning to accede to the request of the Senator, and I insist upon my motion.

Mr. CARTER. I will at this time, then, ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that a final vote be taken on the census bill and the pending amendments at, say, 3 o'clock next Wednesday afternoon.

Mr. BURROWS. To-morrow?

Mr. CARTER. A week from to-morrow—Wednesday of next week.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that on the 26th day of January, at 3 o'clock p. m., a vote shall be taken on the bill (S. 94) to provide for the Twelfth and subsequent censuses.

Mr. CARTER. And pending amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Montana to modify his suggestion by allowing one or two other amendments to be offered.

Mr. CARTER. I say amendments then pending.

Mr. ALLISON. Then pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana?

Mr. ALLEN. What is the request?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request is that on January 26, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, a vote shall be taken on the bill (S. 94) to provide for the Twelfth and subsequent censuses.

Mr. CARTER. And on amendments then pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. And on amendments then pending.

Mr. ALLEN. Will any bill be pending as the unfinished business in the meantime?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The census bill is the unfinished business of the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. That will be the only business subject to amendment and debate up to that time?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is now.

Mr. CARTER. It is subject to debate in the meantime. The matter will be subject to the disposition of the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. Suppose appropriation bills should interfere with debate?

Mr. CARTER. I do not know that any appropriation bill will be taken up. Yesterday evening there was some discussion concerning that matter between members of the Appropriations Committee, and I believe it was tacitly understood that appropriation bills should not be considered until next week.

Mr. ALLEN. I understood the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to say that the appropriation bills would be pressed. It is possible he can inform us. I speak of it because I have an important amendment to the census bill which I wish to present quite fully.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the bill in charge of the Senator from Montana ought not to require very much longer debate, and I suggest to him that he modify his suggestion by proposing that at 2 o'clock the bill shall be taken up, and that a vote on the bill and the pending amendments shall be taken at 4 o'clock or 4.30.

Mr. CARTER. On the 26th of January?

Mr. ALLISON. Then no appropriation bills will be presented on that day to interfere with it.

Mr. ALLEN. That hardly answers the question, Mr. President. The question is whether appropriation bills will be pressed from this time up to the hour when the vote is to be taken, and if so, how much of the time of the Senate will be consumed in the discussion of appropriation bills, to the exclusion of the census bill.

Mr. ALLISON. There is no appropriation bill to be taken up until Thursday, when the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] desires to call up the pension appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLEN. This is Tuesday.

Mr. ALLISON. I think there will be no other appropriation bill offered this week from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLEN. That will be day after to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. No other appropriation bill will be presented during this week, so far as I know.

Mr. ALLEN. What proportion of the time will probably be consumed with appropriation bills up to the hour when we are to vote on the census bill?

Mr. ALLISON. In my judgment it will be very little, although it is impossible to say or know.

Mr. FAULKNER. As some of the leading members of the Committee on the Census on our side of the Chamber are not present at this time, I suggest to the Senator from Montana that he suspend making any request on the subject until to-morrow morning, and by that time I think there can be an agreement which perhaps will be satisfactory to all parties.

Mr. CARTER. I will say to the Senator from West Virginia that the Committee on the Census is in perfect accord with reference to the early disposition of the bill and such amendments as may be pending at any time fixed for a vote. The chairman does not speak without knowing that the members of the committee are unanimously in favor of the early disposition of the bill.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will state to the Senator from Montana that there are some amendments which we on this side of the Chamber expect to offer to the bill, and I would prefer that he let the request go over until to-morrow. Meanwhile I will see the members of the committee representing this side of the Chamber, and I think it can all be satisfactorily arranged. We can do it better in that way than by the Senator insisting upon his request now.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Nebraska kindly allow me to say a word?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. It has reference to his inquiries about the census bill and the appropriation bills.

If the request of the Senator from Montana, the chairman of the Committee on the Census, is granted, I understand that it is his duty to see to it that in the meantime there is ample opportunity for debate. If any Senator desires to speak or to have the bill called up during the intermediate period, in order to speak upon it or in order that there may be debate on it, it is the duty of the chairman to get it up, and if he can not succeed in doing that, to ask to have a vote deferred until a later day. I understand that to be the duty of every chairman who obtains a leave of this kind.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator will permit me, how can the chairman of the Committee on the Census do that if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations under the rule insists upon the Senate taking up appropriation bills?

Mr. CHANDLER. Then, I say, it is the duty of the chairman of the Committee on the Census himself, being unable to comply with the request of Senators for opportunity to debate, to ask for a delay in voting upon the census bill.

Mr. ALLEN. This bill contemplates the establishment of a permanent census bureau.

Mr. CHANDLER. The bill does not provide for the establishment of a permanent bureau.

Mr. ALLEN. I know, but that is its ultimate purpose, which is very questionable, in my mind. I do not think it ought to be pushed with any great speed. Those of us who are engaged in other work ought to have ample time to investigate this matter and to debate such amendments as are proper.

Mr. CARTER. Out of deference to the suggestion of the Senator from West Virginia, I withdraw the request for unanimous consent, and will present it to-morrow morning.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agree to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three hours and thirty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 19, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 18, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ELECTION CONTEST—CLARK VS. STALLINGS.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I present the report of the Committee on Elections No. 1 on the contested-election case of Clark vs. Stallings, from the Second district of Alabama. The report is very brief, and I ask that it be read. When it has been read I shall ask the adoption of the resolutions presented in the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Contested-election case. Second district of Alabama.]

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio presented the following report:
Thomas H. Clark, contestant, vs. Jesse F. Stallings, contestee.

The Committee on Elections No. 1, to whom was referred the contested-election case of Thomas H. Clark vs. Jesse F. Stallings, from the Second Congressional district of Alabama, respectfully report that the contestant took no steps after filing his notice of contest, and appeared before the committee on January 14, 1898, and stated that he had no desire to further press his contest.

Your committee therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, That Thomas H. Clark was not elected a Representative to the Fifty-fifth Congress from the Second district of Alabama, and is not entitled to a seat as such Representative.

Resolved, That Jesse F. Stallings was elected as a Representative to the Fifty-fifth Congress from the Second district of Alabama, and is entitled to his seat as such Representative.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. This is a unanimous report. I ask the adoption of the resolutions just read.

The resolutions were adopted.

BOARD OF REGENTS, SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Library be discharged from the further consideration of House joint resolution No. 121, and that it be now considered and put on its passage.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 121) to fill vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, of the class other than members of Congress, shall be filled by the appointment of Alexander Graham Bell, a resident of the city of Washington, in place of Gardiner G. Hubbard, of the city of Washington, deceased; and by the reappointment of John B. Henderson, a resident of the city of Washington, and of William Preston Johnson, of Louisiana, whose terms of office expire on January 30, 1898.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. DINGLEY. Before consent is given, I wish to ask whether this joint resolution has been favorably reported by the appropriate committee.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. It has not been reported; it was only introduced yesterday. My reason for asking unanimous consent to have the committee discharged from further consideration of the resolution, and that it be now acted upon, is that the annual meeting of the Regents takes place next Tuesday, and unless the resolution is acted upon very promptly it will be very difficult, if not impossible, to get a quorum.

Mr. DINGLEY. Has the resolution been examined by the committee having such matters in charge?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I do not think it has been.

Mr. DINGLEY. I do not like to see a resolution of this kind passed without having been examined by some committee.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I regretted the necessity for asking for the passage of the resolution without the approval of the committee, and would not have done so had it not been important to have prompt action.

Mr. DINGLEY. This matter may be all right, but generally it is best that matters of this kind be reported upon by a committee.

Mr. ADAMS. Permit me to say that it is very important this matter should go through promptly. The annual meeting of the Board of Regents is to be held on the 26th of this month, and these names have been considered very carefully——

Mr. DINGLEY. By members of the committee?

Mr. ADAMS. No; it has not been referred to a committee.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is a bad precedent to pass a resolution of this kind without examination by a committee. This may be all right, but I do not like the precedent.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I looked for the members of the committee, and I could not find any of them. No member of the committee has been present to-day.

Mr. ADAMS. As a matter of fact, these resolutions always go through. This is simply a matter of routine.

Mr. DINGLEY. That may be. I do not desire to make any objection except to the precedent which would be established. We have a committee that ought to consider this matter and report upon it. I have no reason to doubt that in this case the action proposed is all right.

Mr. PAYNE. Probably in a day or two the resolution could be reported in the regular way.

Mr. DINGLEY. It might be reported immediately.

Mr. ADAMS. Technichally, I think the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] is perfectly correct; but this is a mere matter of form, and as the meeting takes place on the 26th, it is very important that these vacancies be filled.

Mr. DINGLEY. Can the gentleman state to us that the members of the committee have considered the matter and that they agree to this method of disposition?

Mr. ADAMS. I can not.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Two of the gentlemen whose names are mentioned, Mr. Henderson and Mr. Johnston, were appointed six years ago, and they were then considered by the committee; but one of the gentlemen proposed is a new member, and his name has not been considered. I know that the resolution conforms to the wishes of the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution. I will state further that Mr. Bell, one of the nominees, is a son-in-law of Mr. Gardiner G. Hubbard, and the inventor of the Bell telephone.

Mr. DINGLEY. Who are the members of the committee?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Angell, now in Turkey; Mr. White, now in Germany——

Mr. DINGLEY. I mean the members of the House committee.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. HITT, Mr. ADAMS, and myself.

Mr. DINGLEY. I understand, then, that two members of the House committee, constituting a majority, assent to this proposition. If so, I have no desire——

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I misunderstood the gentleman. I now see that he meant to inquire who are the members of the Committee on the Library. They are Mr. HARMER, Mr. QUIGG, and Mr. CUMMINGS. I first understood him to inquire the names of the House Regents.

Mr. DINGLEY. Then, if the House committee has not examined the subject, I think the resolution, as a matter of precedent, should go to the committee to be reported on in the regular way.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. HULL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

SECTION 2234, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Iowa, my colleague, to yield to me for a moment for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to take up and dispose of a matter which should be acted upon promptly.

Mr. HULL. What is the bill? Is it, in the opinion of my colleague, absolutely important that it should be considered to-day?

Mr. LACEY. Well, it is a matter of very considerable importance and will take but a few moments.

Mr. HULL. I will withdraw the motion for the present.

Mr. LACEY. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5493) to amend section 2234 of the Revised Statutes, which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2234 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2234. There shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a register of the land office and a receiver of public moneys for each land district established by law, who shall have charge of and attend to the sale of public and Indian lands within their respective districts, as provided by law and official regulations; and receivers shall be accountable under their official bonds for the proceeds of such sales, and for all fees, commissions, or other moneys received by them under any provision of law or official regulation."

Mr. LACEY. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. DINGLEY. Has unanimous consent been given to the consideration of the bill?

The SPEAKER. It requires unanimous consent, which has not yet been given.

Mr. BAILEY. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker, until I can hear some statement from the gentleman as to the necessity for this legislation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will see that the rights of members are reserved in that regard.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced at the request of the Treasury Department, and also of the Interior Department. At present the receiver of the land office receives the public moneys arising from all sources relating to homesteads and other entries of various kinds, and he also receives the money for the sale of Indian lands; but as the law now is, the sureties on receivers' bonds are not liable or responsible to the United States if their principals fail to pay over or account for the proceeds arising from the sale of these Indian lands. We do not protect the Indians, therefore, in the sale of their lands under such circumstances, and some cases of defalcation have been complained of, while an attempt to collect from the bondsmen has developed the fact that they are not liable. This bill proposes to correct that defect, and hold the bondsmen of the receiver liable on the bonds of this official for money received from the sale of Indian lands.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Do you increase the bond?

Mr. LACEY. That is a matter of detail——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Is a special bond provided in the bill?

Mr. LACEY. No, there is no difficulty about that. That is not the point. The only thing is that the money has not been applied as it should have been applied with reference to these sales.

Mr. CANNON. You do not propose to increase the number of receivers?

Mr. LACEY. Not at all. The same receivers have to give bond for the duties they are performing.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to suggest to the gentleman, as this is a short section, to have the House informed just what the law is at present.

Mr. LACEY. It is simply to take the statute as it now reads and insert the words "and Indian lands."

Mr. LOUD. That is all?

Mr. LACEY. That is all. It simply brings these Indian lands under cover of the statute for protection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I desire now to renew my motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of further considering the Army appropriation bill.

The pending proposition is the point of order raised by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS].

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word or two on the point of order without reference to the merits of the question at this time.

Mr. SAYERS. If the gentleman will allow me, I wish to state my point of order fully, and then he can answer it.

Mr. HULL. Allow me to make this statement first.

Mr. Chairman, in the discussion of the point of order yesterday it was suggested this changes existing law. The law of last year provided for the maximum sum to be allowed and paid to any officer of the Army as mileage, in the following words:

Four cents per mile, the distance to be computed over the shortest usually traveled route.

The law of last year provided that "hereafter" the maximum sum to be allowed and paid to any officer of the Army "shall be 4 cents per mile," the "distance to be computed over the shortest usually traveled routes." The proviso in the bill before the House is as follows:

Provided, That hereafter the maximum sum to be allowed and paid to any officer of the Army shall be 4 cents per mile, distance to be computed over the shortest usually traveled routes, and in addition thereto the cost of the transportation actually paid by the officer over said route or routes—

And so on. We reenact not only the law of the Fifty-fourth Congress, a law enacted in the various Congresses, session after session, in regard to the mileage, since I have been a member here, but the remainder is simply a transfer or restoration of the fund in the Department from the Quartermaster's Department to the Paymaster's Department.

The contention of the committee is that the only thing in the nature of new legislation in this amendment is simply the proviso as to whether the transportation shall be furnished by the Quartermaster's Department or the Paymaster's Department, whether the Quartermaster's Department or the Paymaster's Department shall have jurisdiction of the funds provided for the transportation of officers traveling on duty without troops.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to inquire of the gentleman from Iowa if, under existing law, a traveling officer would be entitled to transportation?

Mr. HULL. Under existing law and under the law for a large number of years, since the mileage was cut down to 4 cents a mile, transportation has been furnished by the Government in addition to the 4 cents a mile. It does not change the law in regard to the fact that the officer is entitled to transportation in addition to the 4 cents per mile. I call the attention of the Chair to the last appropriation bill, where, under the head of "Transportation of the Army," under the Quartermaster's Department, the words were inserted:

Including officers traveling on duty without troops.

We struck that out of this bill in order to reenact the proviso that has prevailed for so many years.

Now, as to the merits of the matter, I have no desire to detain the committee at all. If it is held that this provision is not in order, that ends it. If it is held that it is in order, and that we have the right to make this separation, then the question of the merits of the amendment will come up.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, the legislation is new not only as respects the transfer of this work from the Quartermaster's Department to the Pay Department, but it also changes the present law in respect to the transportation of officers.

Mr. HULL. That is all that is involved—the transportation of officers on duty without troops.

Mr. SAYERS. I understand the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. HULL] to acknowledge that it is a change of law, and I insist on my point of order.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not say that I acknowledge it is a change of law. It is a change of the distribution of the fund.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, that is a change of law, and I will say further, Mr. Chairman, while upon the floor, that there is a controversy between the gentleman and myself in regard to the correctness of a certain statement I made yesterday afternoon. I am fortified in that statement by two officers, whom I introduced to the gentleman this morning and with whom he conversed. I am told there was a letter transmitted by the Quartermaster-General to the Secretary of War with the expectation that it would be sent to the House, and it shows that if the proposed change is made there will be an increase of about $50,000 a year because of it. I will also say, and I state it upon the authority of officers connected with the Pay Department, that it will require the establishment of another division of from 12 to 25 clerks in that Department, and not lessen by a corresponding number the clerical force in the Quartermaster's Department.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, in reply to that, although it is not upon the point of order, I will say that I heard that statement, but I will say to the gentleman from Texas that I know nothing as to the power of these men to pass upon the question. I will say that the Committee on Military Affairs had the Paymaster-General of the Army before it, and that officers much higher in rank than the gentlemen he has conversed with this morning, and who ought to know as much about it as anyone, have given directly the contrary testimony before us.

Mr. SAYERS. Did the gentleman say the Paymaster-General was before the committee?

Mr. HULL. The Paymaster-General; and if you will turn to the hearings on this matter you will see his statement. He said he thought it was better to keep it all under one head; and I will say, further than that, that I think when the committee wants to hear from the War Department it should hear from the chiefs of the bureaus instead of from subordinates, who are not responsible to anybody.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to inquire of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] if, under the present law, these payments are made by the Quartermaster's Department, and if under the change that he proposes they would be made by the Pay Department?

Mr. HULL. Transportation is furnished by the Quartermaster's Department under the law passed last session, and under this law it will be furnished by the Pay Department—not the 4 cents a mile.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. PAYNE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President of the United States in writing was communicated to the House of Representatives, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Chairman, one word. Under the law, before last year, the moneys that were appropriated by Congress to defray the railroad fare and expenses of officers traveling without troops were disbursed through the Pay Department, and under the appropriation bill last year it was provided that that money should be disbursed through the Quartermaster's Department. It was simply, I think, a question of providing for the channel through which the money should pass. It seemed to the Committee on Military Affairs, your present committee, that that change that was made last year does not work well, and we have provided in this bill simply for a return to the practice that obtained previous to last year.

We have done that for the reason that when these moneys were disbursed by the Pay Department your committee was enabled to keep track of every dollar of it, and that under the provisions and practice of the bill of last year, authorizing the Quartermaster's Department to disburse this money, we have been unable to keep track and ascertain from the Quartermaster's Department how or where and for what purpose that money has been used. A lump sum of several hundred thousand dollars is appropriated to the Quartermaster's Department, not only to pay for the transportation of those officers when traveling without troops, but to pay for the transportation of officers when traveling with troops. The returns of the Quartermaster's Department are made in a lump, and we propose in this bill to go back to the administration of this fund that obtained for years previous to last year. I think it is not a change of law. I think it is a change, so far as Congress is concerned, as to who shall administer this fund, this appropriation, for the transportation of officers when traveling without troops. It does not change the amount appropriated, and does not change in any degree the object of the appropriation.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. But it does the manner.

Mr. MARSH. It does not, except that in this bill we have reduced the appropriation $10,000 from what it was last year. It does not change the law providing for this appropriation; it does not change the law authorizing these expenses of army officers traveling without troops being paid for; but it simply provides, in the administration of this sum of $50,000, that instead of being administered by the Quartermaster's Department it shall be administered by the Pay Department. I think that is a subject that is exclusively within the power of this House, and exclusively and properly belongs to an appropriation bill, and that it is not new legislation in the sense that new legislation is referred to in the rule in this House which has been invoked by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I ask the gentleman one question? Is the proposed method more or less expensive to the Government?

Mr. MARSH. Well, I have no reason to believe that it is any more expensive under the one head than under the other. I can not conceive where it will be any more expensive if it is restored to the Pay Department, where it has been all these years until last Congress, than it would be under the existing system.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Let me suggest, was it not changed in the last appropriation bill for the reason that it would be less expensive for the Quartermaster's Department to disburse this fund? I am not a member of your committee; I ask the question for information.

Mr. MARSH. I will say to the gentleman that the reason why your committee reported the change at the last Congress can probably be better stated by the chairman of the committee, and I have no doubt he will be willing to give an explanation to you. One thing, Mr. Chairman, we are satisfied that last year there was $60,000 appropriated to pay the traveling expenses of these officers who were traveling without troops, and your committee have been unable to find where or how that money was disbursed, and for that reason we have provided in this bill, not a new law upon the subject as to whether these officers shall have transportation, not an increased appropriation to that fund, but a decreased one; but we have provided for its distribution and execution by the Pay Department, which during all the years that that distribution was under the Pay Department was correctly and intelligently given, and was so rendered that your committee were enabled to understand it and enabled to know what had been done. I think there is no change in the law; it is simply a direction as to who shall disburse this money, who shall furnish this transportation and the order for transportation.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Rule.

The CHAIRMAN. In the Fifty-fourth Congress it was held, the House having the right to make certain appropriations, a provision as to the instrumentalities to be used in applying this fund was a limitation and not a change of existing law. Apparently this is a case in point with this precedent. No change is made in the existing law; simply a change in the instrumentality to apply it, which has been held was simply a limitation and was no change of law. So the point of order is not sustained.

Mr. SAYERS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the letter be read from the Assistant Quartermaster-General, as we are to take a vote upon the proposition.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, January 17, 1898.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to that portion of H. R. 6516, a bill "making appropriation for support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899," which proposes to change the existing law in the manner of providing transportation of officers traveling without troops. See pages 8 and 9 on copy of bill inclosed herewith.

In the report from the House Committee on Military Affairs, copy also inclosed, it is stated: "The committee, after full investigation, has restored the mileage account and transportation of officers without troops to the Pay Department, believing that the account can be better guarded in this way than by having part of it under the Quartermaster and part of it under the Paymaster. The Quartermaster is limited by this bill to the transportation of the Army proper."

The payment of mileage to officers has never been taken away from the Pay Department; therefore it can not now be returned.

The portion in italics is the first intimation this office has had that the interests of the Government were not fully protected under the existing law. I think the committee has been misinformed in regard to this matter.

As it is now administered, the Pay Department pays to the officer 4 cents per mile for the shortest usually traveled route, and the Quartermaster's Department furnishes transportation requests for a continuous journey over the route having the greatest mileage of free travel, bond aided or land grant, thus securing to the Government the lowest rates obtainable.

It is not thought that this duty can be satisfactorily performed by the Pay Department without greatly augmenting the present force of that corps. It consists at present of 25 officers; 3 of this number are on duty in the Paymaster-General's Office, and 2 are not rendering service with the department. This leaves but 21 officers, stationed principally at the several department headquarters and in the larger cities, 11 stations in all, remote from the greater number of officers who will require transportation, and who would be obliged to apply to them for transportation requests.

It is proposed in the bill herein referred to that payment shall be made to the troops by the paymaster in person.

This will take a paymaster away from his station from one to two weeks. The annoyance and delay to which an officer would be subjected, if ordered from any frontier post, to secure his transportation requests from a paymaster can readily be understood.

The Quartermaster's Department has 50 officers belonging to the regular corps on duty outside of Washington, besides 89 acting assistant quartermasters stationed at the several military posts, arsenals, depots, etc., throughout the country, any one of whom is prepared and authorized to furnish transportation when called upon.

Section 1133 of the Revised Statutes provides that transportation for the Army shall be furnished by the Quartermaster's Department.

An officer traveling without troops is as much a portion of the Army as an officer traveling with troops.

The present method of providing transportation to officers traveling without troops was recommended so as to comply with the views expressed by the Comptroller of the Treasury and to enable the Government to secure the benefit of the lowest through rates. The Assistant Comptroller, in a letter dated May 22, 1896, addressed to the Secretary of War, estimates that the failure to take advantage of through rates was costing the Government at that time from $50,000 to $75,000 annually.

It is presumed that a considerable sum is now being saved under the existing law.

It is believed the present law is satisfactory to the Army. It is entirely satisfactory to all the railroads throughout the country, and they willingly accept the through rates, as they now have the evidence that the journey over the respective portion of each road is a continuous one.

In view of the harmonious and economical working of the existing law and the extremely doubtful practicability of the Pay Department being able to carry out the proposed change, and for the reason that the Government would be denied the advantage, in many cases, of through rates which it now obtains, I recommend that Congress be asked to prevent the enactment of the proposed change, and the reenactment of the existing law.

Very respectfully,

JAMES GILLISS,
Assistant Quartermaster-General, United States Army,
Acting Quartermaster-General.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the objection to the bill in that letter can largely be obviated by striking out the latter part of this provision on page 9, and if those of the Committee on Military Affairs who are present do not object, I will move to strike out the whole paragraph and insert the law they have acted under since the mileage was reduced. I will say to the Committee of the Whole House that a great many of the officers have been anxious to secure a provision that would enable them to get, in addition to the 4 cents a mile transportation, sleeping-car and transfer fees, and the old law absolutely cut that off. I will have that read by the Clerk for information in a moment; but in addition to that, this does not change the law any more than in its administrative feature.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman send up to the desk his amendment?

Mr. HULL. I will ask the Clerk to read the proviso marked for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That in disbursing this amount the maximum sum to be allowed and paid to an officer shall be 4 cents per mile, distance to be computed over the shortest usually traveled routes, and in addition thereto the cost of the transportation actually paid by the officer over said route or routes, exclusive of parlor-car or sleeping-car fare and transfers: And provided further, That when any officer so traveling shall travel in whole or in part on any railroad on which the troops and supplies of the United States are entitled to be transported free of charge, or over any of the bond-aided Pacific railroads, he shall be allowed for himself only 4 cents per mile as a subsistence fund for every mile necessarily traveled over any such railroads: And provided further, That the transportation furnished by the Quartermaster's Department to officers traveling without troops shall be limited to transportation in kind, not including sleeping or parlor car accommodations, over free roads, over bond-aided Pacific railroads, and by conveyance belonging to the said Department.

Mr. HULL. I will not offer the amendment at this time because the committee has not authorized anything of the kind, but I will suggest that that is the law acted under, so far as the disbursement of the fund is concerned, from the time the Government reduced the mileage of officers, and I think my friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] will agree with me that what the officers of the Army would really like to have would be an increased amount of mileage——

Mr. SAYERS. What I am after is to prevent an increased expense to the Government.

Mr. HULL. That is what the committee is after.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not doubt that. I do not call in question the motives of the committee, but if the information I have received be true, and since last evening I have seen officers who seem to be very intelligent, who have been long in the service, and who say that under the operations of this clause, if it be enacted into a law, the expenditure of the Government will be largely increased. I am acting simply on the information that they give me, for personally I know nothing about it.

Mr. HULL. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that the evidence before the committee was not in line with what the gentleman from Texas has received from the officers of the Army.

Mr. SAYERS. There will be no question between the gentleman from Iowa and myself as to the motives of the committee.

Mr. HULL. No; I think not. The idea the committee had was simply to reduce the cost for transportation of officers absolutely to transportation only, and let the 4 cents a mile cover all other expenses. That is the object of the 4 cents a mile. I would like to pass over this section without prejudice, so that the members of the committee can examine the proviso of the old law, and we can pass upon it afterwards.

Mr. SAYERS. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that this section be informally passed. Is there any objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

All the money hereinbefore appropriated shall be disbursed and accounted for by the Pay Department as pay of the Army, and for that purpose shall constitute one fund: Provided, That the money herein appropriated for the payment of troops shall be paid to them by the paymasters of the Army in person, except that small posts and detachments may be paid by check sent by registered mail or currency sent by express.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to raise a point of order upon that proviso.

Mr. HULL. I concede that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. SAYERS. I would like to state the reason why I raise the point of order. I am informed that under the law which the clause in the bill would restore, the expenditure for the fiscal year 1895 was $15,402.23; for the fiscal year 1896—that is when the present law began to operate—it was $6,902.20; and for the fiscal year 1897, $765.25. The present law is a great saving over the old law, and saves the traveling expenses of paymasters and their clerks, and also expedites the payment of the amount due the officers and soldiers.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, while I make no contention as to the point of order, I want to state that the Paymaster-General claimed that in justice to his department, charged with the duty of paying the Army, the money should be disbursed by the paymaster, who is a responsible and bonded officer. If gentlemen will remember my opening remarks, I stated that it would increase the expenses about $11,000. The Paymaster-General now, under rules of the Department, has to send the money by express. The express company is responsible only for the safe delivery of the package, sealed and unopened. The package is opened and the money found short, and how are you going to settle it when the man who receives it is a man not responsible and is not under bond?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Does the Secretary of War recommend the change?

Mr. HULL. No, he prefers the other way. There was another suggestion which we agreed to, that the payment of the Army in time of peace should be substantially as in the time of war.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order will be sustained.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, but before doing so I desire to make a brief statement.

Mr. HULL. What is the nature of the amendment?

Mr. LITTLE. It does not propose to change any part of the bill, but to insert a new paragraph among the miscellaneous provisions.

As all members of the House are doubtless aware, on the night of the 12th of the present month a disastrous storm visited the city of Fort Smith, destroying much property and many lives, and seriously wounding a great number of people. The storm or cyclone seems to have visited a large portion of its fury upon the national cemetery at that city—a beautiful park. As I understand, but one of the walls which have surrounded the cemetery is now left intact, the others being almost entirely swept down by the storm. The lodge or buildings pertaining to the cemetery were totally destroyed—absolutely swept off the face of the earth. The park was covered by large and beautiful forest trees, which had been allowed to remain for purposes of shade and ornament. The storm uprooted nearly all these trees, throwing them about among the monuments of the dead, leaving the cemetery a complete wreck.

I will read the amendment which I propose to offer. It is to insert the following after the word "fund," in line 19:

And there is hereby appropriated the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the repair and improvement of the national cemetery

at the city of Fort Smith, Ark., and for rebuilding the lodge and restoring the monuments in said cemetery, said sum to be immediately available and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. HULL. My only objection to the amendment is that it belongs to the Committee on Appropriations——

Mr. LITTLE. Of course, I understand that the regular place for appropriations of this character is the sundry civil bill; but that bill will not be considered by the House for some weeks—possibly months. It is one of the bills which pass Congress late in the session.

The entire grounds at that cemetery are now left exposed. The superintendent is entirely without quarters. The walls on the east side of the cemetery have been completely swept away, and two sections of the remaining wall have been blown down. The place is as much a complete wreck as it is possible for a storm to make of an improvement of this character. There are 2,000 veterans buried in this cemetery. These repairs must necessarily be made; and if provision for them be made now in this bill, we not only expedite the work on these improvements which the Government in justice to its soldiers must make, but we give employment to many persons whose homes and other property have been swept away by this disastrous storm. Besides, Mr. Chairman, as the trees and shrubbery have been so completely destroyed, it is important that these improvements be begun in the early spring. I am informed by the War Department that no part of the funds now on hand can be used for this purpose.

Mr. HULL. How much does the amendment propose to expend?

Mr. LITTLE. Not exceeding $15,000; and the expenditure of that amount is not made imperative.

Mr. HULL. The amendment has not yet been read at the desk. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. LITTLE. I will send it to the desk. I do not wish to gain any improper advantage by discussing the amendment before it has been read. The amendment proposes that $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be expended under the supervision of the Secretary of War and be immediately available. The lodge itself, which was destroyed—I believe it is commonly called "the lodge"—cost between $4,500 and $5,000.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Has there been an estimate by any officer of the Department as to the amount of money required?

Mr. LITTLE. There has been no estimate. I have framed the amendment from the information I have of the complete destruction of the property and from my knowledge of its value. An estimate can be obtained hereafter. What I want to accomplish is to have an appropriation promptly made. The amendment does not provide that any definite amount shall be expended, but only so much as may be necessary, not exceeding $15,000. The superintendent reports to the War Department that the cemetery is an absolute wreck. The repairs are a matter needing immediate attention. As this appropriation will give immediate employment to numbers of suffering people, and as the work is one which the Government will be compelled to do, there seems to me every reason why the appropriation should be made immediately.

The city of Fort Smith suffered, as I have said, great destruction of property and loss of life. More than half a hundred of its citizens were killed and hundreds of others were seriously wounded. The storm cut a complete lane through that city almost three blocks wide. The citizens by their own liberality have undertaken to care for the wounded and to provide for the pressing wants of those who have suffered by the storm. They have asked nothing from outside sources, although they have received a number of benefactions from various portions of the country. They have taken the position that they are able to care for their suffering people themselves, and they desire to do so. They are putting their hands in their pockets, and they are opening their own doors to the suffering. They feel that it would be but just on the part of the Government to begin at once the improvement of this public property, and in that way assist them by giving employment to a number of their people. Her people will not only provide for the wants of her distressed citizens, but at once turn their attention to replacing the damage done that city.

Not only that, Mr. Chairman, but the national cemetery at this point is a place where our people love to assemble, not only the citizens or the members of any one political party, but Republicans and Democrats alike. All of the people gather there with loving hands and patriotic hearts and cast flowers upon the graves of the dead soldiers who sleep there, among whom are 1,150 whose names are unknown, but they are not neglected by our people.

And I only wish to say that I hope in this case, under existing conditions and necessities, as I have endeavored to show you, that the strict rules of the House will not be enforced, but that in a case of this character, where urgent haste is demanded, we will overlook technicalities and make concessions to conditions over which we have no control.

I ask for the reading of the amendment from the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, after the word "fund," in line 19, page 9, the following:

"And there is hereby appropriated the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the repair and improvement of the national cemetery at the city of Fort Smith, Ark., and for rebuilding the lodge and restoring the monuments in said cemetery. Said sum to be immediately available and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War."

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that while this is doubtless an exceedingly meritorious appropriation there ought to be some evidence from the Department as to the immediate necessity for it. I concede all that the gentleman from Arkansas says, but we have no jurisdiction.

The proposition I was about to suggest is that this bill will go to the Senate for full consideration; and it will be time enough when the matter gets before that body to consider, after a careful review of the facts, and provide for the amount necessary.

Mr. LITTLE. I have already applied for the estimates. Of course the Department can not now give them. But I know the cost of the improvements originally; and it is now a complete wreck. I desire to put the appropriation in here; and while the bill is on the way to its passage through Congress, I shall gladly consent to have it placed at the amount which will actually be shown by estimates that I will hereafter submit to be necessary.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, while I am not in any sense antagonizing the proposition of the gentleman from Arkansas, it seems to me that it is well enough to preserve the bills that should carry these various items. Now, this item has no place on the pending bill. It is purely a deficiency item.

Mr. COX. Oh, no.

Mr. CANNON. Then let the item be read. The gentleman says "Oh, no." I contend that it is.

Mr. LITTLE. I can explain it, if the gentleman will allow me a few moments.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to know exactly what the amendment says. I have just come into the Hall, and may not have accurately caught the reading of it.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman from Illinois is clearly correct.

Mr. LITTLE. But he has been asked to waive the objection.

Mr. CANNON. Then let it be read.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. LITTLE. It makes an appropriation, it will be seen, for repairing and improving the national military cemetery at Fort Smith, which has been damaged and practically destroyed by the recent storm.

Mr. CANNON. This is an appropriation for the current year. You propose to make it immediately available.

Mr. LITTLE. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. If it were not for that language, it would not be available until the 1st of next July.

Mr. LITTLE. My idea was that we could, under the necessity which exists, make the appropriation, and that objection would not be raised to it under the peculiar circumstances. I understand, of course, that this properly belongs to the sundry civil bill.

Mr. CANNON. But it is for the service of the coming year, and if it belongs anywhere, which I am not disputing, it belongs on the deficiency bill, which will be reported later on in the session.

Mr. LITTLE. I am not prepared to combat the proposition of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois or to assert that it is not in every respect correct. But I do hope that he will not enforce his objection under the circumstances in this particular matter.

Mr. CANNON. I am not antagonizing the proposition at all. But let me say that I apprehend, before this bill is enacted into law, the deficiency bill will be presented and acted upon by the two Houses, and will probably become a law quite as promptly as this. I only speak of it now, not to antagonize the matter of the gentleman's amendment, but we must preserve the relation which should exist in these matters. If this proposition is to be thrown in the Army bill for the coming year instead of the deficiency bill, where it properly belongs, another proposition or any other proposition of a similar character could also be thrown into it, and you will not have knowledge when you go to make your appropriation as to what you are doing. It would be impossible to keep track of them. Different committees report them, and they have the responsibility for the different items. It is absolutely essential that they should be kept separate.

Mr. LITTLE. I heartily agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that where there is not an urgency the rule ought to be observed, but in a case like this where there is such an emergency, it seems to me it will not be confusing.

Mr. STEELE. I will suggest to the gentleman that he introduce a special bill after he gets the necessary data, and I do not believe any gentleman in this House will object to it. Or he can go to the Senate, where a deficiency bill is now pending, and get the amount inserted on that bill when he finds out what the amount ought to be.

Mr. LITTLE. If I fail here I shall certainly endeavor to get it appropriated in any way in which I can.

Mr. HULL. In addition to that I would suggest to the gentleman that it will probably be two months before this bill becomes a law.

Mr. LITTLE. I am aware that it will be some time, of course.

Mr. HULL. The result of that will be delay.

Mr. LITTLE. Will it not be much longer before any other bill will become a law?

Mr. HULL. It depends on how long these bills are hung up in conference. If the gentleman could introduce his special bill and have a committee report it, and would make a statement showing this necessity for it, I am certain no member on this side of the House would object to its immediate consideration.

Mr. LITTLE. I will consent to having it stricken out of this bill if I can get a special bill reported sooner than this would become a law.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. HULL. That it is new legislation and not germane to this bill—does not belong to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point is sustained.

Mr. McRAE. It occurs to me that there should be no question about the amendment. As to whether the committee will adopt it or not is another matter, but this is an appropriation bill carrying appropriations for the Army, hospitals, etc., and it seems to me there can be no question but that it is in order to repair a wrecked cemetery for our soldiers.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, it would not have been in the province of the Committee on Military Affairs to report this provision originally, and if so reported it would have been subject to a point of order. If not competent for the committee to report it, certainly it would not be in order if offered as an amendment by an individual member. It is a subject which belongs to another committee and upon another bill.

Mr. McRAE. Of course, if the Chair is correct in stating that it would not be competent for the committee to report it, then it would not be competent as an amendment; but that is where we disagree with the Chair. We insist that it would be competent for the committee to report it, and therefore that it is in order as an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Transportation of the Army and its supplies: Transportation of the Army, including baggage of the troops when moving either by land or water, and including also the transportation of recruits and recruiting parties heretofore paid from the appropriation for "Expenses of recruiting;" of supplies to the militia furnished by the War Department; of the necessary agents and employees; of clothing, camp and garrison equipage, and other quartermaster stores, from army depots or places of purchase or delivery to the several posts and army depots, and from those depots to the troops in the field; of horse equipments and subsistence stores from the places of purchase, and from the places of delivery under contract to such places as the circumstances of the service may require them to be sent; of ordnance, ordnance stores, and small arms from the foundries and armories to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier posts, and army depots; freights, wharfage, tolls, and ferriages; the purchase and hire of draft and pack animals and harness, and the purchase and repair of wagons, carts, and drays, and of ships and other seagoing vessels and boats required for the transportation of supplies and for garrison purposes; for drayage and cartage at the several posts; hire of teamsters and other employees; extra-duty pay of enlisted men driving teams, repairing means of transportation, and employed as train masters, and in opening roads and building wharves; transportation of funds of the Army; the expenses of sailing public transports on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific oceans; for procuring water and introducing the same to buildings, at such posts as from their situation require it to be brought from a distance, and for the disposal of sewage and drainage, and for constructing roads and wharves; for the payment of Army transportation lawfully due such land-grant railroads as have not received aid in Government bonds (to be adjusted in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court in cases decided under such land-grant acts), but in no case shall more than 50 per cent of the full amount of service be paid, $2,300,000.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, in the event of a change in the law under the head of "Mileage to officers" being made, as suggested by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], it would be necessary for us to change this also. I ask that the committee proceed with the understanding that we may go back to it if it becomes necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection that order will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES.

To defray the contingent expenses of the Commanding General's Office, $1,750.

Mr. HULL. In the printing of the bill, after the words "to defray the contingent expenses of the Commanding General's Office," the words "in his discretion" have been omitted. I move to insert, after the word "office," the words "in his discretion."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 24, line 15, after the word "Office," insert the words "in his discretion."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. This ends the reading of the bill. The committee will return to page 8.

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Chairman, returning to page 8, I desire, with the consent of my colleagues on the committee, to move to strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 14, on page 8, down to and including line 10, on page 9, and insert what I send to the Clerk's desk. That restores the law as it was before and fully covers the point made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] as to transportation over bond-aided roads.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Does this leave the law as it was before?

Mr. HULL. As it was previous to the last appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 8, line 14, after the word "dollars," strike out the remainder of said page and all of page 9 down to and including the word "Department," in line line 10, and insert the following:

"Provided, That in disbursing this amount the maximum sum to be allowed and paid to an officer shall be 4 cents per mile, distance to be computed over the shortest usually traveled routes, and in addition thereto the cost of the transportation actually paid by the officer over said route or routes, exclusive of parlor-car or sleeping-car fare and transfers: And provided further, That when any officer so traveling shall travel in whole or in part on any railroad on which the troops and supplies of the United States are entitled to be transported free of charge, or over any of the bond-aided Pacific railroads, he shall be allowed for himself only 4 cents per mile as a subsistence fund for every mile necessarily traveled over any such railroads: And provided further, That the transportation furnished by the Quartermaster's Department to officers traveling without troops shall be limited to transportation in kind, not including sleeping or parlor car accommodations, over free roads, over bond-aided Pacific railroads, and by conveyance belonging to the said Department."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out of the bill what is called the appendix. It was put in simply for the information of members, and would naturally go out before we report the bill. I suppose it would really go out without a motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, pages 27 and 28 will be stricken from the bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL. I move that the committee arise and report the bill and amendments to the House with the recommendation that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HEPBURN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 6546 and had adopted certain amendments thereto and had directed him to report the bill as amended, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The question was taken on the amendments in gross; and they were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

VACANCIES IN THE BOARD OF REGENTS IN THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the Library has directed me to favorably report a joint resolution and to ask consent for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 121) to fill vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

Resolved, etc., That the vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, of the class other than members of Congress, shall be filled by the appointment of Alexander Graham Bell, a resident of the city of Washington, in place of Gardiner G. Hubbard, of the city of Washington, deceased; and by the reappointment of John B. Henderson, a resident of the city of Washington, and of William Preston Johnston, of Louisiana, whose terms of office expire on January 20, 1898.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to hear some explanation.

Mr. QUIGG. There is no explanation other than that contained in the resolution. The resolution reappoints two of the regents, Mr. Henderson and Mr. Johnston, of Louisiana, and appoints Mr. Bell, a resident of this city, in place of Mr. Hubbard. The House Committee on the Library has unanimously reported the joint resolution, and the object of this resolution is to fill these vacancies.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I have no objection, if the committee has considered the matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. QUIGG, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of appropriation bills, with a view to consider the bill (H. R. 6449) providing for the consular and diplomatic service.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I want to know if all points of order have been reserved? If not, I desire to reserve them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that all points of order were reserved on the filing of the report.

The motion to go into Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill H. R. 6449. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6449) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I move to dispense with the first or formal reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, before that is granted, I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois if he has in his mind at this time any limitation upon this debate—when he expects to attempt to close general debate?

Mr. HITT. The bill, I will answer the gentleman, is one that is unanimously reported by the committee.

Mr. BAILEY. Most appropriation bills are.

Mr. HITT. I desire very little time myself. I do not see the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] who usually represents the minority, and I would be very glad to make any agreement as to the limitation of time.

Mr. BAILEY. I am disposed, of course, to permit the formal full reading of the bill to be dispensed with if I do not understand that there is any purpose to close the debate to-day. A number of gentlemen on this side desire to speak upon matters relating to our foreign relations.

Mr. HITT. There is no wish to preclude fair and reasonable debate, of course; and I would like to make an agreement with the gentleman, if he will speak for his side, as to such limitation as he would think a reasonable time.

Mr. BAILEY. I very much prefer that that be held open until the Democrats on that committee are here to make an arrangement. I would not want to take it out of their hands—the gentleman from Kentucky, a member of the committee, rises.

Mr. BERRY. I am a very young member of the committee, and I do not feel like taking the responsibility of saying what would be the desire of the Democratic members.

Mr. BAILEY. I am very frank to say that there will be no objection to closing debate in a reasonable time; but I hope there will be no effort to close it to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HITT. I would like to make an agreement with the gentleman from Arkansas, if he were present.

Mr. BAILEY. I have sent out for the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I think that will be satisfactory.

Mr. BLAND. There can be no effort made to close debate when we have not begun it.

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman from Arkansas will be here in a moment. My whole purpose is this: There are one or two gentlemen, at least, who are not ready to proceed to-day, and who desire to occupy the floor to-morrow; and I simply want an assurance from the gentleman from Illinois, not an agreement, but an intimation, as I am satisfied it can be relied upon, that he would not endeavor to close debate to-day.

Mr. HITT. I myself have no disposition to hamper gentlemen from securing fair debate; but a member in charge of a bill is bound by his duty to find a limitation of debate as brief as possible. Does the gentleman think debate would require the whole of to-day?

Mr. BAILEY. I am not interested except for some gentlemen not members of the committee. I take it that the members of the committee on both sides will want to occupy to-day, and of course there will be no attempt to interfere with that right.

Mr. HITT. I think the gentleman from Texas is mistaken as to the wish of the committee to prolong the debate, and such a suggestion as the gentleman makes would require the committee to rise before the ordinary hour of adjournment.

Mr. BAILEY. The committee would have to rise anyway to limit the general debate. My purpose was to ascertain for the benefit of several gentlemen who want to speak.

Mr. HITT. I see the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] is present, and I will call his attention to the desire that some time should be fixed for closing the debate.

Mr. BAILEY. I want the gentleman from Illinois and the House to understand me. My suggestion does not proceed from a desire that some time shall not be fixed, but from a desire to know that it will not be fixed for closing the debate to-day. I was anxious to have it understood that gentlemen who desire to address the House could do so to-morrow.

Mr. BLAND. There are some very important questions in this bill, and many members of this House have a desire and a right to be heard upon it. It seems to me to be too early to be talking about closing debate on this bill, and I shall certainly object to it until the debate has gone on at least to-day. It seems to me very early to agree on a time for closing the debate.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I would suggest to gentlemen that a great many gentlemen are absent who did not know that the bill was to come up, and I think certainly they ought to have a chance to debate the bill to-morrow.

Mr. HITT. I will go on without any agreement.

Mr. DINSMORE. I was not in when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] made his remarks, and I do not know what he proposes.

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman from Texas made no proposition except to inquire if it was the intention of the chairman of the committee to attempt to close the debate to-day. If that was true, we would demand the full reading of the bill, because we did not desire the debate to close to-day. If that was not the intention, we were willing to dispense with the full reading of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. As nobody seems to be desirous of going on with the general debate, why can not the gentleman proceed and finish his bill and then let debate, by agreement, come up to-morrow?

Mr. BAILEY. As it did on the legislative appropriation bill—finish the bill and have the debate and then make no motion touching the matter after debate on it for ten days. A very excellent arrangement. [Laughter.]

Mr. DINSMORE. I would suggest that the reading of the bill, all the details of it, might proceed with the understanding that it shall be debated afterwards. However, if there is any objection to that by the gentleman from Texas, I should not favor it.

Mr. BAILEY. Not at all.

Mr. HITT. We might proceed to dispose of the bill and afterwards have the general debate.

Mr. BAILEY. If that is satisfactory to all the members of the committee, it is to me. I know that the gentlemen of the committee are fully capable of taking care of themselves. I was only solicitous as to certain gentlemen not members of the committee, who wish to debate it.

Mr. DINSMORE. I would not make any agreement that would not be perfectly satisfactory to the gentlemen on this side of the House. There are a number of gentlemen, I understand—I have just learned it to-day—who would like to speak in a limited way upon this bill.

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest that the gentleman from Illinois do as he was about to do—proceed with his explanations—and probably when he has concluded that, our friends will be ready to take up the matter of limiting the debate and go on with the bill.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, my motion is to dispense with the formal reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The House has already given its consent to dispense with the formal reading.

Mr. HITT. Then I will make some observations about the bill itself. It is in a large part a repetition of the existing law. The committee were restrained by the rules of the House from departing from it, and therefore could not accept a large number of recommendations, many of them excellent, no doubt, made by the Secretary of State, most of which were in the line of increased appropriations.

These increased appropriations were not adopted by the committee nor incorporated in the bill, save a very few, to which I will ask the attention of the House. The whole amount of the increase over last year's bill is $83,700, with a large number of items of decrease from the existing law, amounting to $50,000; so that on the whole the bill carries an increase of $33,700 above the present provision for the diplomatic and consular service.

Some of these items of increase are apparent, but not really increased, appropriations, having been provided for last year, not in this bill, but in other appropriation bills. They are not new expenditures. The first one, $1,500 for secretary of embassy to Italy, was provided for in another bill last year. So, too, with regard to the provision for clerk hire in Spain, $1,200. There is an increase in the amount for contingent expenses from $110,000 to $125,000, urgently recommended by the Secretary of State and granted by the committee. The amount for emergencies in the service, which was for many years $60,000, and was cut down experimentally to $40,000, is restored to $60,000. For the transportation of the remains of officers of our service dying abroad we have increased the amount $2,000. It was found necessary to do this, there not being enough money appropriated to bring home the bodies of those who died within the last year. Two instances of that kind are in point.

There is a new item—for an international geodetic association. The amount is small—$1,500. It is to pay our quota as a member of the association. We propose an increased appropriation of $1,000 for repairs to our legation and consular buildings and premises. We now own a large number of buildings used by our consulates and legations—six in all—and some money is needed to keep them in repair. For the consulate at Barcelona, on account of the large increase of business—especially importations from the United States—the appropriation has been raised to $2,500. So, too, the appropriation for the consulate at Bamberg has been increased $500 because of the extensive business there.

At Dawson City we have established a consulate, entirely new, because of the great number of Americans there, and because there is now no officer of our Government to whom they can resort in case of disorder or trouble. At Vancouver, a post where the business is rapidly increasing, we have made a slight increase—$500. At Pretoria, an entirely new post, the capital of the South African Republic, we have provided for an officer by this bill.

On the Island of Formosa, recently incorporated into the Empire of Japan, we have provided for a consul at the city of Tamsui for the encouragement and protection of our interests and people there. An increase of $5,000 has been found necessary for printing the consular and commercial reports, with which all members are familiar, as they distribute large numbers. In the appropriation for contingent expenses of consulates we have made an increase from $180,000 to $200,000. Four thousand dollars of this, however, is to be regarded as in place of the $4,000 formerly appropriated separately for loss by exchange.

For the Bureau of American Republics, we have, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of State and the accord of the executive committee, made up of the representatives of the five Republics, allowed $36,000, the sum recommended and fixed by the Pan-American Conference. This is the amount that the other Republics are willing to assent to and is in pursuance of the action of the international conference.

The decreases (which I will not go over in detail, as everybody assents to them) amount to $50,000, leaving an apparent net increase of $37,700, from which, as I have said, should be taken the items which were provided formerly in other bills.

This, Mr. Chairman, is in brief the business side of the bill now presented to the House. There are many things that we would have been glad to introduce in amelioration or improvement of the service, but provisions which amend our general laws are barred upon such a bill as this by a rule of the House. There are many inadequately provided posts in our service, which might be improved by better provision, but your committee did not feel at liberty to touch that subject. We submit the bill, all of us having agreed to it, as a just and fair measure. My friend from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE], of the minority of the committee, will make any comments he desires.

Mr. DINSMORE. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee [Mr. HITT] whether it is the understanding that after this statement on his part we are to proceed with the consideration of the bill by paragraphs and afterwards have the general debate.

Mr. HITT. That will be agreeable to me, and I know of no one who objects.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. What effect would such an agreement have upon the rights of members of the committee to occupy their time under the general rule? I ask this question because, without any present expectation of making any remarks myself, I have agreed to make use of the hour which, I understand, will be allotted to me as a member of the committee, by dividing it out among gentlemen on this side who wish to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. The understanding of the Chair is that if postponement of the general debate be agreed upon until after the reading and consideration of the bill, it would apply to members of the committee as well as to members of the House generally.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If that is the case, I think we had better continue for the present under the general rule without any agreement.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Chairman, as the reading of the bill by paragraphs will not occupy more than a half or three-quarters of an hour, and as at the conclusion of that proceeding it would not be time to adjourn, so that the debate would in any event proceed this afternoon, it seems to be immaterial whether the general debate begin now or after the bill has been considered by paragraphs.

Mr. HITT. The present proposition, as I understand, is merely to postpone the general debate until after the reading of the bill by paragraphs is concluded, without interfering with any of the conditions under which general debate would ordinarily proceed.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I may have misunderstood the Chairman. I understood him to say that an agreement of that sort would cut off the general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. No; not the debate as proposed here. The general debate, as the Chair understands it, is to be postponed until after the reading of the bill by paragraphs. Then the general debate will take place as though it were being had before the reading of the bill in the regular order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I did not so understand the Chair at first.

Mr. DINSMORE. I understand it is simply postponing all debate until after the reading of the bill, without losing any of the privileges that we would have for discussion. In other words, that the discussion will take place after the reading of the bill, and its consideration by paragraphs, just as if it had taken place before.

Mr. HITT. That is correct.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Is that understanding correct? I would like to know if the agreement between the chairman of the committee and the gentleman from Arkansas contemplates letting the debate go on, with all the privileges which would be accorded to it now, after the bill has been considered?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will carry out whatever agreement is made by the committee. As the Chair understands it, the request is that the consideration of the bill shall be proceeded with now, and that the debate take place afterwards.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HITT. How does the Chair understand the proposition now?

The CHAIRMAN. That the bill shall be considered under the five-minutes rule, and that the general debate, if any general debate is desired, is to take place afterwards. The members of the committee do not lose any rights in that regard.

Mr. HITT. I ask, then, to have the bill read by paragraphs.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is it in order to offer amendments as the bill proceeds?

Mr. CANNON. I understand that the bill is to be read for amendment and consideration under the five-minute rule, and when completed I understand it will still be open for general debate for as long a time as can be agreed upon by the House.

Mr. DINSMORE. That is correct.

Mr. BAILEY. It simply reverses the condition, and we will have the general debate after instead of before.

Mr. DOCKERY. In other words, we render judgment now and the reason for it afterwards.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and they are hereby, severally appropriated, in full compensation for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the objects hereinafter expressed, namely:

After the reading of the enacting clause,

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment immediately after the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. HITT. Let the paragraph be read first down to line 8.

The paragraph was read as above.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Now I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert immediately after the enacting clause:

The existence of a state of war in Cuba, between the Cubans and the Spaniards, is recognized by the United States.

Mr. HITT. I make the point of order upon that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. DE ARMOND. I would like to be heard on this question.

I am aware of the fact that under the rules of the House many things which ought to be in order in legislation are not in order at a particular point or under certain conditions in the consideration of a bill. I am aware that, owing to the administration of the rules of the House, it is often difficult, if not impossible, to obtain consideration in the House for things pending here the consideration of which is demanded and justified by the judgment of members present.

I am aware also that on a question of order, such as has been raised here, it is in the power of this body to determine whether the close, technical, artificial rules for the bringing of business before the body shall prevail as a hindrance to its transaction rather than as a means of promoting its consideration; whether the general sense and sentiment of the country, the demands of civilization, the rights and the welfare of this Republic, what we owe to our constituents and to the world—whether such things are to be considered or are to be rejected as impossible of consideration under the system in operation.

I know that while the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole may feel constrained, within the narrow limits of the rules prevailing for the guidance of his conduct, to hold that out of order at a particular point which would be held to be in order if the sense and the judgment of the American people could be taken upon it, yet it rests with the people's representatives in the House to assert their individual and representative power and have placed in any bill before them any item, no matter whether technically within the rules or not, if in their good judgment it ought to be there for the welfare of the Republic.

I know that while the Chairman of this committee may be constrained to rule that the amendment offered by me is not in order here and on this bill, it is entirely within the province of this House to say that the subject of which the amendment treats and to which it relates is one on which there ought to be an expression of the full sentiment of the House, and that as to the time and place or manner of expressing that sentiment it is a question on which the American people—the people of the Republic without regard to party—demand a hearing and demand consideration.

I insist that it is in order, in the highest sense of legislation, above and beyond petty little rules, made to suppress, destroy, hamper, minimize, and defeat the desires of the representatives of the people, to put into the bill a provision which is illustrative of their sense of prevailing conditions and needs.

Is this subject worthy of consideration? Is it worth while for the representatives of the American people to declare what they think about the situation in Cuba? Is it worth while for them, when every day's newspapers bring the most harrowing tales of suffering and outrage and wrong, to consider whether anything shall be done?

Should these representatives hold themselves within the narrow, petty limits of little rules; fiddle while Rome is burning; bow here, complaisant and acquiescent, merely because some little rule is invoked, when principles as mighty, principles as glorious, principles as holy as patriots ever espoused or heroes ever defended are involved in the consideration? It would be more orderly, it would be more in seeming with the general performance under the rules, if the resolution looking to the recognition of Cuban belligerency were before us formally, to be acted upon formally and regularly, but it is not here; we are not allowed to have it thus before us. For months the Senate resolution has slept in some of the secret places in the room of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The power that is dominant in the House, the mighty power of the Speaker, and the acquiescence of you gentlemen upon the other side, in the suppression of that which your constituents, as well as mine, desire to have considered, have kept that resolution away from us. What promise have we, what ground of hope have we, that the Representatives upon this floor will be unshackled voluntarily; that the bonds will be broken; that the despotic power exerted over them will be stayed; that graciously they will be permitted to consider here the things which their constituents demand shall be considered, which in the name of humanity and justice and patriotism and right ought to be considered, and which too long have been delayed?

The attitude of the Government with respect to Cuban affairs has been shameful. It is a disgrace to American manhood, an insult to American patriotism. It is contrary to the traditions, contrary to the history, contrary to the impulses and the aspirations of the people of this great Republic. Efforts have been directed for years by this Government and by the agencies which control in it to do what? To give to the people of Cuba, who are struggling for independence, for exemption from tyranny and outrage, something called autonomy.

The Government can interfere when it comes to that. The Government, by the message of its President, can condemn the action of a Weyler who starves and butchers. But what more? The President lends the good offices of the Government to bring about autonomy, to give to patriots who have endured everything that it is possible for mortal man to endure and survive, not the independence which is their right and for which they have struggled, but a mockery, a sham, a delusion, a cruelty called autonomy. The efforts of the Government have been directed to that. The representatives of the people have no opportunity to speak. They have not had an opportunity here to register their judgment upon this great, this burning question, even after the Senate has dealt with it.

The great question before the American House of Representatives to-day is not entirely whether this Government shall stand in hostile attitude to the struggling patriots in Cuba, but also whether the Representatives here shall abrogate their great power and surrender the sacred rights committed to them by their constituents. Part of the question is whether we shall assert ourselves in this House, representing, as each of us does, upon the average, some 200,000 people—whether we ourselves shall be free, or whether we shall be held in the petty shackles of these rules and be crushed under the heavy hand of the man who chooses to use the rules for our suppression. The question can not be dodged or evaded.

It will not do for a man to go back to his constituents and say, "I was in favor of recognizing a state of war down in Cuba. I was in favor of lending something like justice, something like decent recognition, to patriotism fighting a good fight, but the rules of the body of which I was a member hampered me. The Speaker who presided over the body of which I was a member chose not to have this particular question brought up for consideration."

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The gentleman is not discussing the point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is a point of order pending, and you can not have more than one point of order at a time.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HOPKINS). The rule is, of course, that a gentleman must speak to the point of order. The Chair trusts the gentleman from Missouri will adhere to that and confine his remarks to the question before the committee.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Of course no man recognizes better than the Chairman, who is an experienced Representative, that in discussing these points of order there is some latitude allowed, and I have no doubt my friend from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] has observed the same thing.

Mr. TERRY. I suggest to my friend from Missouri that strict adherence to the rule was illustrated the other day by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] in discussing the point of order on the act to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims in the case of The Book Agents of The Methodist Episcopal Church South against The United States.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Well, I hope the House will bear with me for a little time, Mr. Chairman. I believe that when the interruption occurred I was directing my attention to that particular branch of the point of order which relates to the vast importance of the subject to which the amendment I have offered has reference, and to the further question involved, I think, in this point of order, before its final determination, whether the members upon this floor, in this House, shall take their entire course and be guided through their entire legislative career here by some small artificial rule for suppression, or by the great fundamental, underlying rules of right, upon which the structure of the Government itself is built, and upon a due observance and enforcement of which all that is worth anything in this land depends.

The Government, I said, Mr. Chairman, has been guilty of conduct that I think properly can be denominated as shameful, and I use that word, knowing the meaning of the term when I use it—the Government as at present administered and the Government as administered by the President who preceded the one now in the Executive Mansion. The efforts of the Government have been directed not toward the encouragement, as far as would be proper, of those who are battling in a near-by island for principles which lie at the very foundation of our whole structure of liberty, but to the destruction of those people, to the aiding, so far as the Government agencies would permit, of the foes of liberty.

It is boasted in some quarters that this great and mighty Government is using the Navy to hunt down, to drive from the seas, those who would carry supplies to the Cubans. Where the waters were created by God Almighty to roll eternally unchained in performance of their mission; where the winds were let loose from His hand, unpolluted by the breath of tyranny, to blow forever free—there, on God's highway of water, the strength and power of this great Government has been directed and used to aid the oppressor in hunting down the oppressed.

Mr. HITT. Well, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman will not think me captious if I ask him, after an arrangement has been made for general debate and it has been ordered, if, in all fairness and courtesy to another member, it is just and proper for a member who has his experience in discussing a point of order that he should proceed to discuss the whole question? I think the gentleman will concede that we should be allowed to proceed with the bill.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Well, now, if the gentleman from Illinois will permit me, I have great respect for the gentleman and all of his suggestions. I say that in all sincerity, and mean all of it. If the gentleman will think of this in another light, it seems to me that the remarks I desire to submit can be submitted with as little consumption of time right here and now as they can be at a later time and in a different stage of the proceedings. I understand, of course, that in strictness——

Mr. HITT. But that can be done in strict conformity with the rules of the House of which the gentleman is a member, and which he wishes as well as others to sustain in the orderly conduct of public business.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me, I would suggest that there has been an extraordinary and peculiar arrangement already made with reference to general debate.

Mr. HITT. At the request of a member on the gentleman's own side of the House.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The bill, as I understand, is to be read. It is to be considered; it is to be disposed of, and after all that has been done, then, if this House should choose, those who have a desire to do so can fire into the air. I prefer, if I can have an opportunity, to do it now. I do not wish to transgress the rules of the House. And I also understand how a member addressing the Chair on a point of order should confine himself to it. Yet I make the suggestion upon this matter of what now is the point, for it seems to me that when the rules have been laid aside to put in a show day of debate, after all the substance of debate has been disposed of, that there can not be any great violence done to the rules, in letter or spirit, by some discussion at this point as to the general merits involved.

Mr. HITT. But the gentleman ought to know that as a courtesy to those in charge of the bill he should confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I did not make the arrangement.

Mr. HITT. But it was done at the suggestion of himself and his friends.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Not at any suggestion of mine.

Mr. HITT. A gentleman on his side asked for it. It is but fair to ask the gentleman if he desires to sustain the rules of this House?

Mr. BAILEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state to the gentleman from Missouri that the arrangement that he has characterized as peculiar was made at the request of several gentlemen who were not prepared to proceed now, or who at least desire to proceed to-morrow, and if we had declined to accede to that proposition, there being nobody ready to proceed on this side, then the other side, with their majority, would simply, at the close of the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois, have gone back into the House, closed general debate, and our friends would not have had an opportunity to be heard, and while the arrangement is peculiar in that it reverses the usual method, yet it was done at the instance of the senior Democrat on the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. DE ARMOND. If I have been understood as criticising the arrangement or those who made it, I have been misunderstood. I simply suggested, in reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT]—and I believe that no man on this floor is any more courteous than is the gentleman from Illinois—I merely said, in reply to his suggestion, that the order of proceeding had already been changed; that things are not going on in the regular way. I am not finding fault because they are not going on in the regular order, but I simply call attention to the fact as a fact; and it seems to me there would be no serious harm done if latitude were allowed now while this point of order is before the House to digress somewhat and discuss the merits of the main question itself.

That was simply a suggestion, and I renew the suggestion, to the gentleman from Illinois. Now, I do not wish to parade myself here or to appear here as a wanton violator of the rules, but I desire to say a few things on this subject, and it seems to me, having the floor, that I could say them in as little time and say them with as little room for criticism, except in a technical sense, now as at any other time.

Mr. DINSMORE. If the gentleman from Missouri will allow me, I would like to call the attention of my friend to the fact that, owing to the desire of several gentlemen on this side of the House to be heard and not being prepared, there was an agreement entered into between the chairman of the committee and myself on the part of the minority that the general debate should take place after the reading of the bill by paragraphs. The gentleman from Missouri will have ample opportunity to participate in that debate, and it seems to me—without any desire to criticise the gentleman from Missouri—that undertaking to debate the bill generally now is not in keeping with the spirit of that agreement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule upon the point of order now.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Just one moment, Mr. Chairman, upon the point of order. While I should prefer to make my remarks now, I am not contentious about it. I wish to say only a few words upon this point of order, and then I will conclude, deferring until a later time the remarks I was about to make. I should have preferred to make them now, and it is still my opinion that it would not interfere with the solemnity of the proceedings if I were to go on with them.

The amendment I have offered is to incorporate in the bill, immediately after the enacting clause, a declaration of the recognition of the existence of a state of war in Cuba between the Cubans and the Spaniards. That amendment is offered at this time and in this place because, so far as I know, and experience bears me out in it, there has not been, and there will not be during this session of Congress, an opportunity to bring to the attention of the House, so that the House may vote upon it, this question, which to my mind is an important one, and the solution of which I think our constituents demand.

Now, then, as the technical rules may forbid the Chair from entertaining this amendment at this time and in this place, I am not going to contend that it may not be the duty of the Chair to rule the amendment out of order. But I will make the suggestion that if the Chair should rule the amendment out of order, it is in the highest degree in order for the members of this House to respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair and ask the judgment of the House whether there had not better be a vote now on this great question. In that spirit, if the Chair should conclude that this amendment ought not to be submitted at this point, I shall feel impelled by a sense of duty, and not from any other reason, to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a word on this point of order. My judgment is that there are certainly two and possibly three places in this bill at which an amendment on the lines suggested by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] would be in order. It is possibly in order at the point where he has offered it. I feel more than satisfied that it would be in order as an amendment at line 12 on page 12, where we provide for an appropriation of $6,000 for the consul-general at Habana. I have no question of the right of this House, under the rule as well as according to good law and good morals, to couple with that appropriation a declaration of the fact that a state of war exists at the point where this consul-general is to be.

I had intended myself, as an amendment to line 12 on page 12, to offer the Senate resolution recognizing the belligerency of the Cuban patriots. I am also perfectly satisfied that as a conclusion of this whole matter, when all the appropriations have been made, when all the consular and diplomatic positions have been provided for, it will then be competent for this House as a part of this bill to incorporate the Senate resolution recognizing the belligerency of the Cuban people. But I desire to say in addition to what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] has already said—and I am free to say I would not yield so much as he does, and suggest that the Chair might feel impelled under the rules to rule this amendment not in order—if the amendment is germane to the general purposes of the bill, that is all that even the hard and technical doctrines require.

It is a matter for you, it is a matter for me, it is a matter for everyone, with his understanding of the rule and under his sense of duty, to decide for himself—is this amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri germane to the general purpose of this bill, which is to maintain our foreign relations? The whole purpose of spending the people's money is to establish and maintain proper relations with all the other countries of the world. Upon no other theory is a single appropriation in the bill defensible. We do not pay our ministers and ambassadors $17,500 for the mere show and tinsel. We do not have these commissions for their pleasure or their personal gratification. The only theory upon which this expenditure of the public money is justifiable is this, and only this, that it is done to establish and maintain proper relations with all the nations of the earth.

If that be the general purpose of the bill, then certainly it is germane to that general purpose for us to say that so far as our relations to Spain and her revolted colony may be concerned, we recognize the fact to be that a state of public war exists between them. I believe that if it is possible to draft an amendment germane to the general purpose of any bill, an amendment recognizing the belligerency of the Cuban people is germane to the general purpose of this bill; and if it be, then it must be in order at one point as well as another. Whether you would have preferred to propose it at the end or at the beginning or in the middle is a mere matter of taste; it does not go to the point of its admissibility.

The gentleman from Missouri chose, probably wisely, to present it at the first opportunity, because our experience in dealing with this question is that unless we embrace the first opportunity we are never offered the second. I would be willing to refrain from a vote upon the question of order, as the gentleman from Missouri intimates he would, if it were within a reasonable expectation that the naked question of Cuban belligerency would ever be presented to the consideration of this House. And I stand here now on behalf of this side, and we pledge ourselves that we will withdraw this amendment if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] will rise in his place and say that within a reasonable time he will present the Senate resolution. [Applause.]

Will he do it? He is as silent as the Republican party has wanted him to be upon this question. They have promised over and over again that this question should be met. Why, sir, the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, when we were trying to force the consideration of this question during the extraordinary session, assured us, or rather assured the country, with something of dramatic effect, that in his own good time the President would take this matter up and settle it to the satisfaction of the American people. What influence that assurance may have had upon the House I am unable to determine; but I do know that either under that assurance, or under a whip and lash, more powerful with the other side of the House than the assurance of the President's friend from Ohio, in some way Republicans who had professed the friendliest interest toward Cuba were deterred from joining us in procuring her a hearing.

Mr. HITT rose.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the gentleman rise to interrupt me?

Mr. HITT. I again recall to the Chairman's attention the fact that this is not a discussion of the point of order, but an endeavor to have two general debates after one has been agreed upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already intimated his readiness to rule.

Mr. BAILEY. I had intended, and I had attempted, to confine myself to the point of order. I believe I had done so up to the last two or three minutes. I recognize the fact, however, that when a man begins to speak about the outrageous treatment of those struggling patriots he forgets the rules. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the point raised against this amendment by the gentleman from Illinois is that it is not germane——

Mr. HITT. Not germane, and also that it is a declaration of policy not pertinent to a bill providing for the fiscal needs of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is clearly of opinion that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I desired to substitute another amendment for that on which the Chairman has just ruled; but since he has passed upon the question, I move to amend by inserting after the enacting clause of the bill what I send to the desk. I will submit it to the Chair without any argument.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the enacting clause of the bill insert the following:

"That a condition of public war exists between the Government of Spain and the Government proclaimed and for some time maintained by force of arms by the people of Cuba, and that the United States of America shall maintain a strict neutrality between the contending powers, according to each all the rights of belligerents in the ports and territory of the United States."

Mr. HITT. On that I make a point of order——

Mr. DE ARMOND. That, Mr. Chairman, is the Senate resolution with the formal parts eliminated.

Mr. HITT. My point of order is that it is not germane to the bill, and also that it is new legislation. Both points are good.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois is sustained.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I very respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words on the appeal. It seems to me this is a most extraordinary proposition in a parliamentary body. The gentleman who first offered the amendment announced in substance that he had no doubt it was contrary to the rules of this House, and then, having announced what every gentleman on this floor knows—that it was in violation of two rules of the House: first, because it was not germane to the subject under consideration, and secondly, because the rules specifically provide that no legislation shall be in order on an appropriation bill—he then, notwithstanding that fact, proceeded to announce deliberately that he proposed to appeal from the decision which he knew the Chair would properly make.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if there is one thing that is more important than another in a parliamentary body it is to preserve the rules of orderly proceeding, and not to be tempted, merely for partisan purposes, to override the rules; for such proceedings in every parliamentary body are well calculated to hamper and interfere with the transaction of business.

There have been many times in this House when I would have been glad, for merely partisan ends perhaps, if I could have brought myself to such a low view of the consideration of business matters in this House as to endeavor to overturn the rules of the House for the purpose of securing some legislation which I believed ought to be effected, but I was restrained by my obligations to maintain law and order. I believe that gentlemen in this body are not willing to overturn the orderly rules of proceeding here for merely partisan purposes, because the principles of parliamentary law are just as important for the preservation of right and justice to one side as they are to the other; and in attempting to divorce them from their legitimate purposes no advantage is gained by one which is not in a corresponding degree lost to the other, and may come back to plague the inventor. Besides, such trampling upon the rules for partisan ends are beneath the dignity of a member of this body.

Mr. LLOYD. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. DINGLEY. I do not yield.

Is there any gentleman in this House who doubts that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri is out of order as new legislation? Is there any gentleman who doubts that it is a proposition legislative in its character, involving an act of legislation, and therefore clearly and absolutely prohibited by the rules of the House?

Mr. LLOYD. The gentleman would not yield for a question, but we are going to put you on record on that point.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Very well; we are perfectly willing to stand that.

Mr. DINGLEY. But the question here is one of parliamentary law.

The gentleman says he proposes to put somebody on record on some other question. He ought to know that nobody can be put on record in this way. I should have to vote to sustain the rules of the House without the slightest regard as to whether the sustaining of them would be for the purpose of accomplishing one thing or another. There is not a gentleman on either side of the House who does not know that the proposition which has been made here, of new legislation proposed as an amendment to an appropriation bill, is in violation of the rules of the House, and the duty of every member is to sustain the rules.

It puts nobody on record, except on the record that we are unwilling to overthrow the rules of the House in order to accomplish a partisan purpose.

However much I might favor just such legislation as this, I do not propose to violate the rules of the House in order to accomplish either a proper or improper end.

In addition to that the rules of the House provide that an amendment upon a subject different from that under consideration shall not be in order on any pending bill. Is there anything in this bill that relates to the subject-matter to which the amendment relates? This is a bill for what? It is a bill to appropriate for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government. That is all. Does anyone pretend that an appropriation to carry on the diplomatic and consular service of the Government is a subject akin to the declaration of a state of belligerency toward any foreign government? There is no gentleman on either side who believes anything of the kind. And I shall regret exceedingly, Mr. Chairman, if, under this loose sense of responsibility, this low idea of possible present advantage, members of the committee shall be tempted to override the rules of the House, so necessary for the orderly conduct of our business here. It seems to me that no member of the House should be tempted to any such diversion from what is his absolute duty as a member of this body and a member of the Congress of the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I wish, with the indulgence of the House, to address myself to the question which has just been discussed by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY]. The main question is as to whether there is an attempt now, in the amendment offered and disposed of for the time being by the Chair, and by the appeal from the ruling of the Chair, to overturn and abolish orderly proceedings in this body, and to bring in a reign of chaos, or whether the time has come, on the other hand, to free the House for one brief hour, if possible, from that domination so absolute that the House has been powerless to go to the consideration of questions, no matter how important or urgent, so long as the powers that be forbid.

The orderly proceeding of business! It would seem from the suggestions of the gentleman from Maine that our great office here, our loftiest duty here, is to observe the petty, shifting rules of the House, no matter where those rules may bind, no matter what the exigencies of the case may be. Every member upon this floor knows that rulings are made time and time again, not in accordance with the rules of the House, not according to the best conception of the person who makes the ruling, the occupant of the chair for the time being, but in furtherance of the plans laid down by the ruler and governor of the House.

Do gentlemen desire an illustration? When the tariff bill was pending here last summer, and when amendment after amendment, in varying forms, all looking to the same end, were offered, to put into that bill somehow, somewhere, legislation against trusts and combines, to prevent such agencies from violating and defeating the purpose of the law, if the law was not made and designed for the benefit of trusts and combines, points of order were made, and the amendments, which were clearly in order under the rules, in order within the strictest and narrowest and most technical construction of the rules, were held to be out of order, and the House had no opportunity to pass upon them.

It is much the fashion to have in the chair not necessarily those who are well acquainted with the rules of the House or with parliamentary law, but those who have that sort of pride of opinion, or of no opinion, that the ruling can be made beforehand and simply echoed from the chair; that that which would be embarrassing and annoying and contrary to the general purpose may be quietly and easily excluded by the action of the Chair.

Mr. HITT rose.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HITT. I desire again to call attention to the admonition of the Chair to the gentleman, to observe the purpose of speech in support of or against the point of order. The remarks of the gentleman are not in support of or against the point of order, but in support of a proposition to disregard the rules of the House. I hope he will, as such an experienced debater, observe those rules.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois will be observant and reflective for a moment, he will note that the remarks which I am now submitting, though perhaps not so persuasive or so well rounded as those that were made by his colleague, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], are quite as much in order upon the matter now pending before the House; and I am a little astonished that a gentleman as fair and as courteous as the gentleman from Illinois is a stickler for closeness in the discussion of the question before the House when I have the floor, and that he listens with tolerance, if not with approval, to the discursive remarks of the gentleman from Maine.

I am addressing myself to precisely the same question that the gentleman from Maine discussed, and I am sticking as closely to it as the gentleman from Maine stuck to it. His text was that here is an attempt to supplant the rules of the House, to bring chaos where order reigns, to destroy the high character of this as a legislative body, and to lower it to the level of a disorderly town meeting. I am maintaining, upon the contrary, the proposition that there have been such rulings in this body; that it is common for such rulings in Committee of the Whole to be made; that the higher order, the greater devotion to principle and to the correct conduct of business here, is to be found in the sustaining of an appeal like this, rather than in the defeat of that appeal.

Let me suggest another thing, Mr. Chairman. At the assembling of this Congress last spring we adopted, temporarily, as we were told, the rules of the preceding House of Representatives. The question was asked by the honorable gentleman now occupying the chair [Mr. HEPBURN] within what time the committee would probably report new rules for the consideration of the House, and the assurance was given by his colleague, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], who is a member of the Committee on Rules, that certainly within thirty days there would be reported to this House a new code of rules, stamped with the recommendation of the Committee on Rules, for the consideration of this House.

The thirty days rolled away, and another thirty, and another thirty, and another thirty followed. From the middle of March until near the close of July we wandered along in this "orderly" way, with the old rules temporarily adopted, still the rules of the House, and no report from the Committee on Rules. And now, past the middle of January, the House having assembled early in December, we still have the same old rules that were adopted temporarily, the same rules that were put upon the House either with the intention of preventing the House from having a fair consideration of its own rules or being put upon the House, that have been held over the House, so that the House has been denied the opportunity of considering what rules shall govern its conduct here.

And yet there is that respect to be paid to these rules, adopted temporarily; these rules that within thirty days were to give place to other rules—there is to be that respect—I will not say slavish devotion, but that respect paid to these rules that mighty questions, as mighty as ever agitated Representatives in the most trying times of the Republic, questions that go to the very foundation of everything worth maintaining in this country—that such questions are to be swept aside and laid away. And why? Because they do not deserve consideration? Because they are too petty for consideration?

No. Then is it because the House, like another branch of the Government, is devoted to the cause of tyranny and too indifferent to liberty, too much in the power of trusts and combines and one strong man to assert itself? For reasons I care not to state, as the reasons are apparent enough, the rules, the old rules, that were to be laid away long ago if the House had been treated according to promise, are invoked to prevent us from doing what we ought to do.

When the proposition is to rise above some petty rule, to proclaim independence here by showing some regard for justice in Cuba, then the question of the orderly transaction of business is involved, and our effort is characterized as an attempt to bring disorder, to destroy order. Why, I am not one of those who believe that the representatives of the noble people of this Republic, under any circumstances, by any code of rules, should ever be so shackled and tied and bound that they can not do that which the good of the Republic, the honor of the country, humanity, Christianity, and everything that we have been taught to cherish as freemen, demand.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. DE ARMOND. I do.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I suggest to him that during the extra session the Speaker of the House violated Rule X, commanding him to appoint committees, and that side of the House went on record as sustaining that violation of the rules. [Laughter.]

Mr. DE ARMOND. Now, Mr. Chairman, without further discussion, I am willing to submit the question to the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether this has become a lecture hall or the Hall of the House of Representatives. It would seem, however, that my friend from Missouri is never content unless he is lecturing, finding fault, and accusing somebody of bad faith.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, I will yield to you.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I stated, or tried to state, that my friend from Iowa, one of the members of this important Committee on Rules, assured the House, in answer to his colleague, the gentleman who now occupies the chair, that the rules would be reported to the House within thirty days. Am I correct in that statement?

Mr. HENDERSON. I am going to answer you. There is no committee in this House mighty unless this House is back of it; and there is no man so mighty that he can deceive this House without somebody opens its eyes to the fact.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HENDERSON. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The gentleman has not answered my question.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was rising to answer your question; if you will cease talking and let some one else have a chance to talk——

Mr. DE ARMOND. If the gentleman did not desire to answer my question, he need not have yielded to me. He can answer yes or no.

Mr. HENDERSON. I yielded to you for your question, and will answer it in my own way.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Very well. I simply asked the gentleman a question, and he needed not to yield to me unless he pleased.

Mr. HENDERSON. I yield to everybody when I have time, but I do not answer to suit everybody.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The gentleman can not answer any other way than that he offered the assurance which I said he offered, and that there has not been done that which he said would be done. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HENDERSON. That is exactly what I rose to state. Gentlemen, you are clapping very early. It is not the rules that you are clapping about, it is not the Committee on Rules that you are clapping about; but it is your political buncombe that you are trying to clap in attempting to get it before the country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I challenge the RECORD to state when I said the rules would be reported. I only spoke for myself, that I had no doubt it would be done within thirty days. That represented exactly my view at the time. I do not believe that there is a man on this floor, not even the lecturer from Missouri, that will not give me credit for being sincere in the statements that I make to my associates on this floor.

As every member well knows, after the tariff bill was passed by the House, from that time on we had adjournments three days at a time. At that time "the gentleman from Iowa," one of the holy terrors of the gentleman from Missouri——

Mr. DE ARMOND. Not at all. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HENDERSON (continuing). On the Committee on Rules, was lying on his back under the surgeon's knife—the first time in my life that I have publicly referred to it; and no big-hearted man would drive me to the point of referring to it. It has to be a small-bore gun that would fire that kind of shot into me. [Applause on the Republican side.]

When I returned to the Capitol, we found that most of the members were gone. I discussed it with my associates of the Committee on Rules and other gentlemen of the House, who thought it would be unfair to bring in the rules when only a few were here, and it was decided not to attempt it.

Mr. BAILEY. I hope the gentleman from Iowa will say that he discussed it with his Republican associates of the Committee on Rules. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDERSON. I presume that is correct, but I know that if any Democrat said anything to me about it, he got exactly the same statement that any Republican got. I do not play double when I am representing this House. When we came back here in December, that was, to all intents and purposes, the time for organizing the House. If we had had no extraordinary session, the rules would not have been adopted by this time. We should have adopted the old rules temporarily and addressed ourselves to work upon the new ones, as we did when the most of you were at home and we stayed, looking at the different suggestions made by members of the House. We thought it best to let all the appropriation bills go through that were ready, and as soon as they were disposed of to take up the rules and bring them before the House, and it is the intention of the committee to do so, placing the House exactly in the same position we should have been in with respect to time if the extraordinary session had not taken place.

Now, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] has been pleading for new rules. What does he care for any kind of rules? We all know that what he is trying to do is to drive his party against law and against rules, and yet in the same breath he wants new rules. He wants to drag the rules under foot for political partisan advantage, as I believe. He does not want rules of order to guide this body. I stand for fair play, law, and order. If the majority of this body wants to recognize the belligerency of Cuba, the majority of Democrats and Republicans, they will find a way under the rules to make that declaration.

Several MEMBERS (on the Democratic side). How?

Mr. HENDERSON (continuing). If the majority of this House is against it, it will not be done, the fine political play of the gentleman from Missouri to the contrary notwithstanding. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, it seems that a majority are against it, but it is on the other side of the House.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] if, as a matter of fact, the two rules which it is proposed by some gentlemen on the other side to trample upon and overthrow are not rules that came from the Democratic House of Representatives without change?

Mr. BAILEY. They are not; there is a very important modification.

Mr. DINGLEY. There has been no change in the rule as to the amendment being germane, has there?

Mr. BAILEY. It might change existing law if it reduced expenditures, and you have taken out the reduction of expenditures.

Mr. DINGLEY. You do not claim that there is any reduction of expenditure in this amendment, do you?

Mr. BAILEY. Your double objection was that it was not germane and changed existing law, and I say that this rule did not come from a Democratic Congress.

Mr. DINGLEY. But that has reference to expenditures, and you do not claim that this has any reference to expenditures.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I rise to address myself to the point of order exclusively. [Applause.] It would be the acme of impertinence for me to suggest that anything I might say was intended as a comparison of myself to the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], who has thrown out the challenge to this side of the House.

A MEMBER. That is right.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. It is the only time you gentlemen on that side ever admitted that anything said on this side was right. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Maine insists on his point of order that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri is not germane. In order to sustain himself, he asserts that there is not a gentleman on this side of the House who will contend that the amendment is germane or sustained by precedent or justified by any practice of this House. For myself I assert that the amendment is not only germane, but is sustained by a precedent precisely parallel which arose on the floor of this House and was sustained under exactly similar conditions as is the one offered by the gentleman from Missouri, and I accept, deferentially of course, the challenge of the gentleman from Maine.

I invite the attention of the members of the House to the fact that on the 9th of February, 1821 [laughter], an appropriation bill—Mr. Chairman, I do not marvel at this mirth. Everything ancient in liberty and fixed in justice is ever sneered at by the other side. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

I repeat, that on the 9th of February, 1821, upon an appropriation bill presented in this House proposing an appropriation for the consular service and foreign relations, Henry Clay offered an amendment to that general appropriation bill, the nature of which I will now read:

For an outfit and one year's salary to such minister as the President, by and with the consent of the Senate, may send to any government of South America which has established and is maintaining its independency on Spain, a sum not exceeding $18,000.

It failed. Subsequently, to the same bill on the 10th of February, he moved that the House of Representatives participates with the people of the United States in the deep interest which they feel for the success of the Spanish provinces of South America which are struggling for their liberty and independence, and that it will give its constitutional support to the President of the United States whenever he may deem it expedient to recognize the sovereignty and independence of any of the said provinces.

A motion to amend by the proviso "that this resolution shall not be construed to interfere with the independent exercise of the treaty-making power," and another, "that the House approves of the course heretofore pursued by the President of the United States with regard to the said provinces," were negatived.

The resolution was adopted, and a committee appointed to lay it before President Monroe.

There was a motion to amend that amendment, which motion was as follows:

That the resolution shall not be construed to interfere with the independent exercise of the treaty-making power.

To that, Mr. Chairman, a point of order—that is, to lay on the table—was made similar to that now made by the distinguished gentleman from Maine, it being insisted that it was not germane, that it interfered with the rules in that it was foreign to the subject-matter pending.

The honorable Chairman will recall as a part of the history of legislation that that question was debated at great length on the floor, and in that debate a very great man came to the front in this nation—a man who has ever maintained the star of his grandeur in the ascendency—and claimed not only that the amendment was germane, but that during the pendency of the amendment he had the right to discuss liberally and fully all the relations that this Government should bear to any other government within our continent upon the doctrine of intercontinental law; and notwithstanding it has been contended to-day that such a discussion is out of place, the Speaker at that time—a man of distinguished ability—not only sustained that amendment as germane, but held the debate to be unlimited and free; and he neither curtailed nor restricted it.

Upon this precedent, then, which I read from the report of Mr. Henry Winter Davis, made May 2, 1864, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I tender to the distinguished gentleman from Maine a distinguished precedent that may well be followed here, and will justify the Chair in holding that the position of the gentleman from Missouri is well taken. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this is an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and I shall try to confine myself to a legitimate discussion of the question.

Gentlemen are familiar with the rule that an amendment must be germane. I think I need not argue as to whether this is germane. I do not think anybody on either side of the House claims that it is.

Again, this amendment is not in order, even if germane, because of a rule of the House that was substantially adopted in the first instance in the Forty-fourth Congress—a rule unlike any that the House had ever had before in its previous history. That rule was that no legislation changing existing law should be in order on an appropriation bill. Gentlemen understand the propriety of that rule. Everyone understands that even without any constitutional provision the House, when it proceeds to perform its functions, would have power to make rules. But the express power is given to the House in the Constitution to make rules and regulations to govern its procedure. This rule has been adopted from time to time, commencing with the Forty-fourth Congress, and has continued in force till the present time—just as much a rule, a regulation, a law to control the House in its procedure as any other law for its control.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. What existing law will be changed by the adoption of this section?

Mr. CANNON. Why, it is new legislation.

Mr. HITT. That is the point I made, that it is new legislation, contrary to the rule of the House.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. My question is, Does it change any existing law?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly; anything that makes new law is a change of existing law.

Now, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] offers this amendment, and is true to himself when he gives notice to the House that it is not in order under the rules; and then he appeals to the House that in times of great emergency it is our duty to cast aside these weak and feeble rules, to walk over them, to trample them in the dust, and proceed to execute the will of the House.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] says substantially the same thing. Now, without reference to the propriety or impropriety of the proposed amendment—that is a matter about which gentlemen may disagree—you can not set aside a rule of the House without being actuated by that same spirit of revolution by which people are actuated who are not competent to govern themselves. For illustration, take Mexico. It has a constitution similar to ours, yet that is but as a sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal. The people there have an absolute military despotism, notwithstanding their constitution, because under the lead of partisans down in Mexico the constitution is trampled under foot, as the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Texas would have our Constitution trampled under foot for the purpose of trying to secure a fancied party advantage—and it is only fancied, in my judgment.

Let us see where the gentleman's course of procedure would lead us. If it be competent to enact this legislation in the teeth of the rules constitutionally made, as the gentleman acknowledges, then it is equally competent for some other gentleman to rise in his place and offer as an amendment to this bill a provision declaring war against Spain. If it is competent to do that, it is competent to rise here and offer an amendment declaring war against Great Britain. There is no danger of gentlemen doing that, but it is competent and in order just as much as this is competent and in order.

The gentleman on that side, reenforced by that beacon in a storm from the Pacific Coast [laughter], is seeking to unify that side of the House. He wants to get the Populists, the Silver Democrats, and the Hard-Money Democrats all together; he wants to unify that side of the House so as to trample under foot a rule that has been made under the Constitution and exists to-day. I would not believe that the gentleman from Texas would have pursued that course in this House at this time or any other time if he had not so declared here.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. The gentleman practically admits that it would be a party advantage to adopt this amendment [cries of "No!" "No!"]; therefore he admits that the people of the country really want this question acted on here.

Mr. CANNON. Ah, Mr. Chairman, "the gentleman from Illinois" admits no such thing. But I am not surprised at the question coming from the gentleman from Kansas, for everybody knows what he is in favor of [laughter]—he is in favor of nothing.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. The gentleman says it would be an advantage; if not a party advantage, a great advantage to the people, and they really want it; and therefore the gentleman from Illinois wants to stifle the desires and wishes of the people.

Mr. CANNON. "The gentleman from Illinois" says and said nothing of the kind. And I take occasion here and now to say that if that side of the House, the Democracy and the Populists banded together, are prepared to violate the law and the rules, made under the Constitution, it is a sad spectacle, and I do not believe it will advantage them, for the country understands perfectly well their position on these questions.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Would the proposition be admissible on an urgent deficiency bill?

Mr. CANNON. I think not.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Oh, that is strange! [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman comes again, and as long as he comes improperly, whether upon an urgent deficiency or sundry civil bill, or upon this bill or any other, I do not believe that he will succeed.

I do not care further to pursue this discussion. I am prepared to vote upon it myself. I am prepared to say that the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole was, in my judgment, entirely right and that he ruled properly when he said that this amendment is not in order and that the appeal will not be sustained.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BLAND. If the amendment is not now in order, will the gentleman inform me and the House at some point where or at some time when it can be brought before the House? How is it to be got here?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, I am not prepared to state how it can be. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAND. If it is never in order, how can we obtain a vote upon it?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, I will ask the gentleman if under the rules of the House he believes the proposition could be entertained at this time?

Mr. BLAND. I think so, because we can not get it in any other way. [Laughter.] There is no way to get it here except to force it down on some bill like that, and to compel that side of the House to take it.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, a moment ago in the course of the remarks of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], or during his interruption of the gentleman from Iowa, he inquired if the rule under which we are proceeding now, and of which some complaint was made, had not come down exactly in its present shape from a Democratic Congress.

Mr. DINGLEY. Exactly, in so far as this point is concerned.

Mr. BAILEY. I ventured to interrupt the gentleman with the suggestion that there was an essential and important modification, and that statement he disputed.

To settle the controversy I want to read the rule of the Fifty-third Congress upon this subject and compare it with that adopted by the Fifty-fourth Congress. In the Fifty-third Congress it was provided that—

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in course of construction; nor shall any provision, at any such bill or amendment thereto, changing existing law be in order except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number or salaries of the officers of the United States, etc.

The rule as it stood in the Fifty-fourth—and that is the rule under which we are now proceeding—reads as follows:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

To that point the rules are identical. But it goes on:

Nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

Now, the difference is this: Under the rule as it stood in the Fifty-third Congress, an amendment, being germane, which retrenched expenditures would be in order notwithstanding the fact that it changed existing law. But the point which the gentleman from Illinois makes against the amendment is that it "changes existing law." Now, apply that point of order under the two rules. Let us suppose that on page 12, when we come to the item in the bill of $6,000 for "consul-general at Habana"——

Mr. DINGLEY. Why does not the gentleman apply it to the particular amendment that is here?

Mr. BAILEY. It applies equally well here——

Mr. DINGLEY. Not at all.

Mr. BAILEY. As the gentleman will see before I get through.

Mr. DINGLEY. Does the gentleman claim this amendment would retrench expenditures?

Mr. BAILEY. I am going to show the gentleman that he was mistaken in his statement that this rule was identically the same as the rule of the Fifty-third Congress, and the gentleman shall not escape the correction by trying to change the argument.

Mr. DINGLEY. But the gentleman knows that this amendment does not retrench expenditures, and therefore would not be in order under that rule of the Fifty-third Congress.

Mr. BAILEY. But I am going to show you that an amendment which would have been in order under the rules of the Fifty-third Congress is not in order under the rules of the Fifty-fourth Congress. If I do that, I have successfully contradicted your statement that the two rules are the same. That is the whole purpose for which I rose.

Mr. DINGLEY. Not at all. You are shifting the case.

Mr. BAILEY. I will leave it to the House to say who is shifting or who is shuffling, as the case may be. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] Now, Mr. Chairman, if, under the present rule, when we reach line 12 on page 12, I should propose to the provision for $6,000 salary to the consul-general at Habana an amendment to make it $5,000, and then an amendment that changed existing law, under the rules of the Fifty-third Congress, it would be in order.

Mr. DINGLEY. Precisely——

Mr. BAILEY. Under the rules of the Fifty-fourth Congress it would not be in order.

Mr. DINGLEY. It would have been in order under the rules of the Fifty-third Congress if it had been germane.

Mr. BAILEY. But you eliminate all question as to the germaneness under your rules. The amendment, whether germane or not, can not be proposed, because you deliberately omitted the words with reference to germaneness.

Mr. PAYNE. But the gentleman will remember that under the Holman rule, which he has exploited here, it was expressly required not only that the amendment should reduce expenditure, but that it should be germane, and so the amendment which is now offered would not be in order under that rule.

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] has not made the point that it is not germane. He made the point that it changed existing law.

Mr. HITT. I made both.

Mr. BAILEY. I am simply trying to defend the rules of the Fifty-third Congress against the lack of rules of the Fifty-fifth.

Mr. HITT. I made both points.

Mr. DINGLEY. If my friend will pardon me for a moment, so far as this particular amendment is concerned, is not the Holman rule, so called, precisely the same, as affecting this amendment, as the existing rule?

Mr. BAILEY. No——

Mr. DINGLEY. There is no question of expenditure in this amendment.

Mr. BAILEY (continuing). No; because under your rules you will not permit an amendment, even if it be germane and does retrench expenditures, if it changes existing law.

Mr. DINGLEY. But there is no question of expenditure in this amendment at all.

Mr. BAILEY. Will not the gentleman now withdraw his statement that this rule, as it stands to-day, came down to us exactly in this form from the Democratic Congress?

Mr. DINGLEY. So far as it affects this amendment, it is the same.

Mr. BAILEY. If the gentleman from Maine, with his great reputation, is not willing to admit that in the heat of debate he misstated either the rule of the Fifty-third Congress or the rule of the Fifty-fourth Congress, I am willing to leave it with his colleagues here. I believe that he will not be willing to say that the rules are the same.

Mr. DINGLEY. The rules are the same, so far as they affect this amendment. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BAILEY. You did not make that statement. You said this rule had come down to us from the Fifty-third Congress, and the gentleman will admit that it did not come down to us from the Fifty-third Congress in this form.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let me ask the gentleman from Texas, who is candid, is there any difference, in its application to this amendment, between the Holman rule, so called, and the existing rule, there being no question of expenditure in this amendment?

Mr. BAILEY. At this particular place——

Mr. DINGLEY. That is what we are talking about.

Mr. BAILEY. Under the rule, and I am trying now to apply the rule to all cases—under the rules of the Fifty-third Congress, if this amendment were offered, the only question would be, Is it germane?

Mr. DINGLEY. Why, not at all.

Mr. BAILEY. Under the rules of the Fifty-fourth and Fifty-fifth Congresses we have to answer the double question: First, Is it germane? and then, Does it change the existing law?

Mr. DINGLEY. Did you not have to answer precisely the same question under the Holman rule?

Mr. BAILEY. We did not.

Mr. DINGLEY. Precisely the same.

Mr. BAILEY. The rule expressly permits an amendment——

Mr. DINGLEY. Where it reduces expenditures. But you do not claim that this amendment reduces expenditures?

Mr. BAILEY. But I am not discussing this amendment. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. DINGLEY. That is what we are discussing.

Mr. BAILEY. I know; but I am discussing your statement——

Mr. DINGLEY. Not at all.

Mr. BAILEY (continuing). Which you made when you interrupted the gentleman from Iowa, and stated that the rule against which we complained had come down from a Democratic Congress.

Mr. DINGLEY. Did the gentleman misunderstand me? Did he not understand that I was speaking of the application of these rules to this particular amendment?

Mr. BAILEY. Then you ought to have applied it to this particular amendment, and not applied it to the rules, and say it was from a Democratic Congress.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Texas allow an interruption?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Perhaps we can arrange this very troublesome difference. Everybody upon the floor knows the gentleman from Maine did not say what he now claims to have said, but under the rule of "many and most" we can make him say it, and with the kindly permission of the Chair I will give notice that I will move, at the proper time, to correct the RECORD. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAILEY. I want to say that it is as correct as the correction which they did not make on my friend from Ohio.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman from Texas what relevancy the heated controversy between the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Maine has to the matter now before the committee?

Mr. BAILEY. I wanted to set the gentleman from Maine right.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I should like to hear the gentleman on one of the lines that I have not heard the gentleman on. I want to ask the gentleman if he really insists that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri is germane under the rules on this bill? Now, I would like to hear him a minute on that proposition, which is one that he has not been addressing himself to. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. PAYNE. That is the proposition that the gentleman wants to get away from.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. That is the point.

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman from Indiana did not happen to be in the Hall of the House when I addressed myself to that question in a brief speech before this.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I just wanted to set the gentleman from Texas right, or afford him an opportunity to set himself right as to this matter, instead of him attempting to set the gentleman from Maine right, because I can not conceive it possible that a gentleman with the parliamentary knowledge of the gentleman from Texas would seriously argue for a moment that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri is germane. I think it is due to the gentleman himself to have that matter cleared up. [Laughter on the Republican side.] That is the reason I tendered my good offices to the gentleman.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, the only reason I am constrained to decline the tender of my friend's good offices is that I am entirely satisfied with my position on that question; but I know that Republicans on that side will rise and say that they have been satisfied with their position from the beginning. [Jeers on the Republican side.] Well, I was crediting them with some sympathy for the struggles of a brave people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DINGLEY. No; that is not the question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I have tendered my kindly offices to the gentleman. I deeply regretted that he got himself into the mire, and I further regret that in his efforts to get out he has let himself still deeper into the mire.

Mr. BAILEY. It is very difficult to keep out of the mire when you get in a mess with Republicans; but, Mr. Chairman, on this point of order, and on the question of the rules, it is a question in which the House and the country feel an interest, and I was not willing to permit the gentleman from Maine to insist before the country that the rule which they invoke to prevent the introduction of this amendment had come down to them from a Democratic Congress, and if he is not willing to make a statement before the House that he [laughter] has made his statement too broad, then I leave him to his own conscience and the judgment of his colleagues.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, no one on the other side of the Chamber thus far has seriously claimed that this proposition is in order. We have had the claim made indirectly, but no one has claimed it seriously except my friend from Washington [Mr. LEWIS], and he has cited an authority and coupled with it the great name of Henry Clay. It is well in examining questions of this kind to go to the original source. Now, you will find in the House Journal of 1822, page 351, where the rule was first adopted, this language:

> No motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

This rule was first adopted in Congress March 13, 1822. Now, the motion made by Henry Clay, cited by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEWIS], was made on the 9th of February, 1821. So that the gentleman's reference happens to be unfortunate so far as its chronological order is concerned. And further, the amendment offered by Mr. Clay was not objected to, no point of order was made against it, and the Democratic party voted it down by a vote of 86 to 79. [Laughter.] The proposition made by Henry Clay was as follows:

> Mr. Clay then moved to add to the said first section the following item, viz: "For an outfit and one year's salary to such minister as the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, may send to any Government of South America which has established and is maintaining its independency of Spain, a sum not exceeding $18,000."
> And on the question so to amend,
>
> It was also determined in the negative,
> By a vote of 79 yeas and 86 nays.

Now, I want to call the attention of the minority in this Chamber to one thing. This is a proposition declaring that if the majority want to defy the rules of the House, it is their privilege and duty to do so, and if the minority party can get enough of the majority to vote with them to ignore the rules of the House, it is their duty to do so. A minority can never afford to do that. The rules of the House are for the protection of the minority. Take, for instance, the little Populist contingent, a little handful of patriots in this House. When an amendment is made in this body or when an attempt is made to put upon an appropriation bill something which is new legislation, have they not the right to invoke the rules of the House and raise a point of order?

What would my friend from Kansas think if some Republican should rise and say, "We want to carry a certain proposition, and therefore we will overturn the rules of the House," and then they should go on and ignore the rules simply because they had the power of members to do it?

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Does the gentleman want to know what I would think about that matter?

Several MEMBERS (on the Republican side). No; we do not care to know what you think about it.

Mr. LACEY. What he would say about it might depend on how the gentleman thought it would strike the Populists.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. The gentleman from Iowa thought I was of enough importance to quote what he thought I would think. I want to say that I think I should have the same opinion of that, of an attempt to violate the rules of the House, as I did when the Speaker decided and the House violated their own rules in the extraordinary session of this Congress.

Mr. LACEY. I commend this question to the careful consideration of the minority, for I believe it is a matter that rises above partisan duty at this moment. It is a proposition that the rules may be overturned with impunity simply by the brute force of any majority. The minority in the House of Representatives need the orderly enforcement of the rules more than the majority do, for a majority can take care of itself.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, the bill pending before the House is one providing for appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] has offered an amendment to that bill recognizing the belligerency of the Cuban insurgents. That amendment has been objected to on a point of order on two grounds—first, that the amendment is not germane, and second, that it is specially violative of one clause of Rule XXI. The gentleman from Washington has suggested to the House an instance where such an amendment, possibly parallel to this, was upheld by the Chairman. The question whether an amendment is germane to the subject-matter of the bill is always one that can be stretched. It is like a rubber blanket; you can stretch it almost to suit yourself—the presiding officer can—and no man can undertake the task of reconciling the decisions of the various Speakers of the House as to whether certain amendments were germane or not germane. There is no absolute rule that can be laid down for it. Each case must be governed by the circumstances under which it arose.

But now, as to the other point, the rules of the House which we have adopted, and which are just as binding on us as if the Committee on Rules had made their report and their new rules had been adopted, read as follows:

Nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

I can not conceive how anyone can read the title of the pending bill and read this amendment, and hold that the amendment is not violative of that rule. [Applause on the Republican side.] Furthermore, whenever the presiding officer is placed in the chair every member of the body over which he presides is under obligation to uphold him when he decides according to law and order. The Chairman of this committee has made his decision, and an appeal has been taken from that decision. If the House fails to uphold him, it is in some measure a reflection upon the presiding officer of the House, because the House would to some extent say that he had made an error of judgment in making his decision.

Is there a man on the floor of this House who, putting the facts before his mind, will be willing to commit himself to the simple, plain statement that the Chairman of this committee has made an error in ruling that this amendment is not in order? I apprehend not. Therefore, I say that in voting upon this bill we must take into consideration the relationship that every member of this House bears to its presiding officer when he rules correctly. I do not hesitate to say that the present Chairman has made this ruling according to the law adopted by this House for our government; and when I am put face to face with the question of voting to say whether he has ruled right or wrong, and when I know that he has ruled right, I am not at liberty, for the purpose of expressing my opinion on a side issue, to vote contrary to the facts and the law. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say just another word or two. There has never been an hour since I took my oath of office as a member of this House when I would not have voted in favor of this amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri as a separate resolution. I am now in favor, and I have from the beginning been in favor, of acknowledging the belligerency of Cuba. I will vote for it on every opportunity and any opportunity that I can get.

Mr. HAY. I rise to a point of order—that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FLEMING] is not speaking to the question of order before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. FLEMING. I have confined myself entirely to the question of the appeal; and I am simply making an explanation as to my position, because I am not willing, by voting to sustain the ruling of the Chair in this case, as I shall have to do, to leave myself open to the charge of not being in favor of Cuban belligerency. I am in favor of that.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FLEMING. With pleasure.

Mr. COX. Suppose you are convinced in your own mind that you will never get an opportunity to vote for belligerent rights or any other rights in regard to Cuba what are you going to do?

Mr. FLEMING. Then, Mr. Chairman, the fact that other men will not give me my rights on a question of that kind will not justify me in overruling the laws of the House which have been adopted for our government on questions of this sort.

More than that, Mr. Chairman, if I had the opportunity and the liberty, I would denounce the present rules of the House, which forbid so many members—almost a majority—from bringing such a question before us. I say that they are an outrage upon parliamentary rights. But those rules have been adopted by this House; they are the law for our guidance, and I for one will not violate them if I know it. [Applause.]

Mr. OGDEN. Were those rules adopted permanently or were they adopted temporarily?

Mr. FLEMING. They were adopted to continue until other rules should be adopted in their place.

Mr. OGDEN. Were they not adopted temporarily?

Mr. FLEMING. They were adopted to continue until other rules should be substituted for them.

Mr. OGDEN. Have we been fairly treated in the matter of other rules being presented to the House?

Mr. FLEMING. I do not think we have been treated fairly.

Mr. COLSON. Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who believe in upholding the rules of the House. On that point I concur heartily with the gentleman who has just taken his seat. The unfortunate fact, however, it seems to me, is that the rules which we have prohibit or restrain this House from expressing its sentiment upon any question which the committee having that matter in charge does not choose to bring before it. There is no question that this House is in favor of recognizing the belligerency of the Cuban insurgents. [Applause.] There is no question that the great American people are in favor of this House taking some action in the interest of the Cuban insurgents. [Renewed applause.]

Why is it that this House is not allowed to give expression to its sentiments—to give expression to the sentiments of the American people upon this question? We have delayed too long. The history of the war of the Cuban insurgents will forever remain a black page in the history of the nineteenth century. And the fact that the Fifty-fourth Congress took no action and the fact that the Fifty-fifth Congress has taken no action looking to the aid of the liberty-aspiring Cubans will forever remain to the discredit of these Congresses.

When will the Committee on Foreign Affairs allow the House of Representatives to vote upon this question? How long will the leading spirits of this House throttle the will of the American House of Representatives? I shall vote in this instance to uphold the decision of the Chair [applause], but I warn my Republican colleagues that they have deferred consideration of this question too long already, and that the American people will hold us responsible for our failure to take action in this matter. [Applause.]

Mr. SHATTUC. Will you allow me a question?

Mr. COLSON. I will.

Mr. SHATTUC. Have you made a motion to relieve the Committee on Foreign Affairs from the consideration of the bill on that subject? Is it not your province to make a motion to relieve that committee from the consideration of that bill?

Mr. COLSON. I have not made any such motion. I do not suppose that I could get recognition to make the motion.

Mr. SHATTUC. How do you know that without trying? You have not done your duty.

Mr. COLSON. Well, I think I have discharged my duty in this House quite as well and as conscientiously as any other member of it. On that point I will leave my constituents to judge.

Mr. Chairman, I was saying that the American people will hold us responsible for our failure to act on this question; and if we do not take some step looking to the termination of the unholy warfare which for three years has raged in the Island of Cuba—some step looking to the termination of the suffering there, the starvation of men, women, and children—the excuse for the continuation of which, as offered by some, is that the material interests of some of our constituents would be interfered with were we to take action—I say if we do not terminate this unholy warfare, I expect to see the next House of Representatives have in it many faces that we do not see here to-day; and I see here to-day many faces that I do not expect to see in that House of Representatives. [Applause.]

I warn my Republican colleagues that while I shall vote to sustain the Chair in this instance, if the Committee on Foreign Affairs does not give to the House a chance to be heard and to vote on this all-important question, I am one of those who will join in the revolutionary tactics which may be necessary to let expression be given to the sentiment and will of the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, it was not my intention to take any part in the discussion of this question. But the debate, having taken the course it has, leads me to ask the indulgence of the committee for a very few minutes.

From the feeling manifested by the members of the House on both sides it would seem that they regard the question of recognizing the belligerency of the Cuban insurgents at the present time as the all-important question necessary to secure the liberty and welfare of that people. Belligerency under the circumstances, if recognized, would require this Government to maintain the same neutrality that it maintains to-day.

It is not helping the Cuban revolutionists to the final consummation of their wishes. The time may come, sir—although I have taken but little interest in the question of belligerency—when it may be a question for the American Congress to determine not the belligerency, but to recognize the independence of the Island of Cuba. When that time comes, it will be a vital question—one affecting us and the great sentiment of liberty-loving manhood throughout the world.

But the question of belligerency to-day involves many questions pertaining to international law which properly should not apply to the Island of Cuba. International law has been made by kingly governments of the world for the protection of their thrones, and they have regard only to the conditions of a people in revolution to regain their lost rights which have been usurped by the ruling powers.

That in general may be said as to Cuba's case. Here is a little island, about 46,000 or 50,000 square miles, with 1,500,000 people struggling against the power of a great nation—a nation that once sat in the forum of the nations next to Great Britain in all the powers and forms of national greatness. She controlled more land on this continent than any other power, holding west of the Mississippi River to the British possession, including the mouth of the Mississippi River, Florida, and nearly all of South America. But she has lost it all. To-day she stands a feeble, degenerate power, shorn of her ancient greatness.

This country has never had controversy with Spain while these mighty revolutions have swept from her the vast territory once owned by her and held under her flag. All that is left of this mighty dominion, acquired by the right of discovery, has passed from her flag and from her power, save two small islands in the Caribbean Sea.

To-day it is not necessary that we shall hasten into a position of unfriendly conflict with her; for, in the course of human affairs, if we judge the present by the past, Cuba is already lost to Spain forever. It is not, therefore, necessary to hasten our action; but when the time comes, as it surely will in the near future, when it will be plain to the nations of the earth that Spain can not longer hold Cuba, it will then become the duty of this nation to determine its action in reference to the independence of that island.

When that time shall come, let the great Republic pay back to humanity in the name of liberty part of the debt of lasting gratitude it owes the French people for the aid rendered our fathers in the time of their direst need, and which insured the independence of the American colonies.

Until then—until that time comes—I am not greatly interested in any of the questions which seem so important to other members in relation to the conflict between Spain and the last of her possessions on the American continent.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I desire to refer tersely to the suggestions made by the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY]——

Mr. SHERMAN. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHERMAN. My point of order is that the gentleman from Washington has once addressed the committee upon this subject.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I answer the point of order by saying that I think there is no rule which prohibits a member from speaking more than once upon a point of order. I think the rule prohibits a member from speaking more than twice.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the Chair will find in one of the sections of Rule XIV the provision to which I refer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the clause.

The Clerk read as follows:

He shall decide all questions of order, subject to an appeal by any member, on which appeal no member shall speak more than once, unless by permission of the House.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, a suggestion was made by me to the gentleman from Washington, and some reference to the original documents to which he referred, and I will ask unanimous consent that he have an opportunity to reply. I ask that he be allowed five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked by the gentleman from Iowa that the gentleman from Washington may be permitted to address the committee for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I do not understand the decision, Mr. Chairman. Is it that I proceed for five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] asked unanimous consent that the gentleman from Washington might be permitted to address the committee for five minutes, when the Chair asked if there was any objection, and a gentleman made objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I dare say upon the theory that the law of self-preservation is the best for that side.

[Mr. FITZGERALD addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to make this parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEWIS] was taken off the floor under a rule of the House and not a rule of the committee. If the Chairman will look at page 342, he will find this expression in paragraph 23:

The particulars in which these differ from proceedings in the House are the following: 1. In a committee every member may speak as often as he pleases.

Now, I want to suggest to the Chair that the gentleman from Washington was taken off the floor under a rule that applies simply to the House and under a rule that did not apply to Committee of the Whole. He should have been allowed to proceed. I submit that parliamentary inquiry. The Chair will find it on page 342.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to an authority on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I have not yielded the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Georgia yielded the floor?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. No, sir; I am asking an expression of the Chair upon that question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, then, thinks the gentleman has yielded the floor.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. No, sir; I do not. Does the Chair desire to escape from that position?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think it is necessary for him to pass upon that question. The committee has acted under the rule.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It was a parliamentary inquiry, and I thought that every member of the House who had a right to the floor and asked a parliamentary inquiry—that the Chair would, in respect to the gentleman, answer it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has answered.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I move to close debate upon the pending question.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit an authority to the committee upon the question pending.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. HITT, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

A division was demanded by several members on the Democratic side.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I make the point of order that it is not necessary to vote to close debate on a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. This is a matter of appeal.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, I did not know that.

Mr. BAILEY. I submit to the Chair that the gentleman's question is not to close debate on the paragraph, but it is on an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the pending question.

Mr. BAILEY. And I make the point of order that it is not in order to move to close debate in the committee on that question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the gentleman is too late with that point of order, for the committee is dividing.

Mr. BAILEY. I rose to make it.

Mr. BRUMM. Regular order.

Mr. BAILEY. This is the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the opinion of the Chair that the gentleman is too late. The Chair did not see him, or of course he would have recognized him.

Mr. BAILEY. I would appeal from that decision except that only one appeal can be entertained at a time.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 130, noes 112.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. HITT, and the gentleman from Texas, Mr. BAILEY, as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 153, noes 118.

The CHAIRMAN. Accordingly debate is closed upon this question.

The question now pending before the committee is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 136, noes 109.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Missouri will please act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 152, noes 114.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

SALARIES OF AMBASSADORS AND MINISTERS.

Ambassadors extraordinary and plenipotentiary to France, Germany, and Great Britain, at $17,500 each, $52,500.

Ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary to Italy, $12,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 2, after the word "dollars," insert the following:

"Envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the Republic of Cuba, outfit and salary for one year, $5,000."

Mr. HITT. I make the point of order that that is entirely new legislation.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Before I argue the point of order I desire to strike out the word "outfit" as written in the amendment. We have arrived at a place in the bill where it provides for envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to the various countries. I take it, therefore, that the point of order concerning "germaneness" will not lie, nor will it be asserted that this amendment is obnoxious to the rule for lack of germaneness, because it is undoubtedly germane not only to the purposes of the bill at large, but to this particular part of the bill.

I take it, therefore, that the only point of order that will be insisted on is that it is a "change of existing law." I am aware of the fact that it has been held that a new law is, generally speaking, a change of the existing law; but a new law upon a new subject-matter entirely can not be said to be a change of existing law, because the reason why a new law has been held to be a change of existing law is because there existed some sort of law regulating the relations of this country to the subject-matter, or of some citizen to the subject-matter, and an addition to the body of existing law on a subject-matter which had received legislation would necessarily work some change of the existing corpus of the law.

When I offer this amendment it can not be said to change existing law in connection with the diplomatic relations with the Republic of Cuba, because there is no law upon our relations with the Republic of Cuba. It can not be obnoxious to the rule of germaneness, because it is exceedingly germane. It can not be obnoxious to the rule on the ground of its affecting the existing law, because there is no existing law on the subject-matter to be changed. In fact, the subject-matter itself, i. e., the Republic of Cuba as an international entity, does not exist until evoked into the family of nations by this amendment. The change of no law can not be the change of any law. You may as well say that when God created man he changed existing humanity, but as there was no existing humanity he did not change existing humanity.

Now, I noticed this morning some gentleman said it was obnoxious to the rule because it was new legislation. The rules under which we are operating now are not worded that way. There is no such thing as making a point of order of "new legislation." I admit that it is "new legislation." The language of the rules does not say "new legislation." If that rule ever existed, it has been left out of the present body of the rules of the House of Representatives. The present language is "change of existing law." I do not want to say one word about the merits of the proposition. I merely wanted to say that much about the point of order.

Mr. HITT. I do not think the Chair needs any light upon this question. This is a point made frequently. There are half a dozen provisions in the bill similar to this that the gentleman proposes, creating new offices, and every one of them is subject to be thrown out on this very point of order by any member of the House who chooses to make the point of order. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] voted as a member of the committee to put them in, knowing that we took the risk of their being rejected by any member of the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If the gentleman will pardon me, it may be that it was a lack of knowledge on my part; but while I voted to put them in, I did not know that they were subject to this point of order.

Mr. HITT. I beg the gentleman's pardon, then, if he did not know it. It is so familiar a question, and comes up so often with every appropriation bill, that I do not think the Chair needs any further light upon it.

Mr. DINGLEY. It has been held that new legislation is a change of the law as it stands to-day, as everyone understands it may be.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Before the Chair decides upon this matter, I would like to state a case to my colleague on the committee, for whose opinion on diplomatic and parliamentary matters I have the highest regard. Suppose Great Britain were to-morrow to recognize the independence of her colony, Canada, and Canada should become one of the independent nations of the earth, and it should be deemed necessary to send an envoy extraordinary to Canada, would it have to be done in a separate bill providing for relations with Canada, separately from all other nations of the earth?

Mr. HITT. No, we could do it by going over to the Senate and having it put on as an amendment there, because the rules of the Senate allow it, and when brought back here, if passed, it would be law.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then I hope the somebody with more influence with the Senate of the United States than I have may succeed in getting this inserted as an amendment to this appropriation bill in that body.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I would like to be heard upon the point of order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. PAYNE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its secretaries, announced that the Senate had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. R. 82. Joint resolution providing for the printing of the report of the governor of Alaska, 1897;

S. 112. An act to amend the immigration laws of the United States;

S. 3179. An act granting a pension to Bethiah H. Rollins;

S. 2323. An act supplemental to the act of February 9, 1821, incorporating the Columbian College, in the District of Columbia, and the acts amendatory thereto;

S. 2753. An act for the relief of Louis A. Yorke;

S. 2934. An act to amend section 2334 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

S. 2858. An act authorizing the Muscogee Coal and Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory and Oklahoma Territory, and for other purposes;

S. 3053. An act to provide an American register for the steamer Navahoe; and

S. 2781. An act to amend section 4440 of the Revised Statutes, authorizing the licensing of mates on river and ocean steamers.

The message also announced that the Senate had concurred in the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 75) accepting the invitation of the Government of Norway to take part in an international fisheries exposition to be held at the city of Bergen, Norway, from May to September, A. D. 1898.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 6251) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for prior years, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a bill of the House, with Senate amendments thereto, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

H. R. 6251. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for prior years, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session, with Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I wish to address myself to the point of order now before the House. I will go back a little way the better to do it. In the Fifty-first Congress a question of great interest arose which has an important bearing on the question now before the House, and I invite the attention of the House to its consideration. For a very long period of time it had been the construction of the Constitution and was recognized as parliamentary law that upon the roll call of this House, the yeas and nays being taken, only those who answered to that call should be computed as making up the then present membership of the House. That is merely a statement of a historic fact.

The philosophy upon which it rested—and I am not going to discuss its soundness—was for a great number of years unchallenged, and but feebly challenged and strongly defended when the question arose. In that Fifty-first Congress, upon a memorable occasion, to which I merely refer in passing, without discussing anything about its merits or demerits, the Speaker of the House, the same able gentleman who is now the Speaker of the House, departed from that time-honored and well-established canon of parliamentary law and estimated as within and of a quorum of the House for the time being, upon the question then pending, persons in their seats or supposed to be in their seats at some time during the progress of the roll call, but who did not answer upon the roll call; and by estimating them and adding their numbers to the number of those who did answer "yea" or "nay" he ascertained and decided that a quorum was present.

Those who answered "yea" or "nay" being less than a quorum, that number being supplemented by those who did not answer, but were counted by the Speaker, the total was equal to a quorum. The Speaker decided that there were present a sufficient number to transact legislative business. That decision had no support in the parliamentary usage of this body; was an innovation, and a radical innovation, upon parliamentary law as theretofore understood and theretofore applied. It was a revolution in parliamentary law.

When the question arose as to whether the Speaker was warranted in the decision which he made, what was the argument of the Speaker to sustain himself? The argument can be briefly epitomized. I recollect, after I became a member of the House, a time when I had the honor to participate briefly and ineffectually in a debate in which the present Speaker of the House took part, when this matter was the question under discussion. The Speaker, then a member on the floor, the leader of his side and a power then as now, made this point: That the decision having been made and an appeal having been taken, parliamentary law upon that subject was made by the decision of the House upon the question then submitted.

In other words, the Speaker did not rest upon the proposition that according to the usage of the House, according to any rule prevailing in this code which is now so sacred, according to the precedents and practice of the House, there was authority for estimating, in determining the question of the presence or absence of a quorum, those who did not answer to their names upon the roll call; but that when he made the decision, and when the House upon appeal sustained him, then parliamentary law justified and sanctioned his course. In other words, he made the decision of the House upon the question when submitted to the House parliamentary law.

Now for the application. I am not going to discuss the question whether there is authority to make a rule for the counting of those present and not answering when the yeas and nays are taken. I believe there is authority, and I have said so before. But there was no rule; there was a lack of precedent for it. Then it was not parliamentary law, either by virtue of the existence of a rule of this House making it so, or by virtue of the unwritten law growing and springing out of the decisions of those who preside over the House and over Committees of the Whole, which from time to time make parliamentary law of greater or less value. It was a decision without the support of parliamentary law, either within the rules or within the general practice of this great parliamentary body. Then, up to that point, it was a violation and a disregard of the rules and of parliamentary law.

The able gentleman, however, who is at present and was then the Speaker of the House says that when upon appeal the House decides the question whether the decision of the Chair shall stand, that decision of the House becomes parliamentary law. I will not stop now to discuss the question whether it becomes parliamentary law or whether it simply becomes a decision of the House. But I commend to gentlemen who are such sticklers for the observance of the rules, and who are so fearful that bad results may follow from their violation, that by the highest authority known upon your side, by an authority that constitutes one man a majority over there—upon your side it has been decided that the decision of the House makes parliamentary law.

It does not lie in the mouths of those who speak as the honorable Speaker suggests—who vote as he by a nod of his head or the pointing of his finger may indicate that they should vote, who are for things or against things as those things may be decided and directed by that mighty power which sits enthroned in the Speaker's chair in this House—it is not for them, it is not for you, to charge us with revolution or disregard of the rules of the House when we commend to you the philosophy of your own great leader and master. According to that philosophy, it is perfectly legitimate, it is perfectly right, for a majority of this House to sustain or to refuse to sustain a presiding officer; and according to that same high authority that decision of this body is the parliamentary law of the case.

I now come to the amendment offered by my friend from Mississippi. Against it objection is made. The question submitted to this House is whether the law of this body (the rule of this House for the time being the decision of this body) shall be in favor of the incorporation of that amendment, if a majority see proper to incorporate it, or against it. When you decide against it, when you sustain the point of order, when you cut out the amendment, you are sticking within the thin bark of small technical rules construed narrowly, and you are refusing to exert your power—power that has been proclaimed by your leader, your ruler, your master. You are refusing to assert that power by refusing to consider the Cuban question.

You can not escape the responsibility that you are assuming; you can not dodge it. There is involved now, just as there was involved in the appeal decided against us by your votes, the query whether this House will consider this great, important, burning, overshadowing question raised by events in Cuba and our relation to them. Will the House, at the beck and suggestion of its master, and in defiance of the parliamentary philosophy so ably proclaimed by him, disregard great questions and meekly bend under the yoke? If so, then do not pretend that you are standing for orderly parliamentary proceedings in the House, and are constrained by a petty rule, that is a mere bit of straw in your hands, to vote as some gentlemen among you profess that they do not desire to vote.

The question is simply and fairly put, and the country, Mr. Chairman, will understand it. If it be competent—and it is not for you to deny that it was; the greatest among you has proclaimed that it was competent—if it was allowable, because the House sustained the ruling, for the Speaker, in violation of the ordinarily understood rules of parliamentary law and procedure, to estimate as present and constituting a part of the quorum those who on a yea-and-nay vote did not respond, tell me if you will, tell me if you can, where, according to that philosophy—and his philosophy is all you have and all you follow; the will and the direction of the master mind of the master leader of you is your only rule and guide—tell me where is the revolution that you denounce?

Let me assure you that it would not be disorderly for you to break your leading strings and give the country some evidence of your own independence, if you have any. And where can it be found easier than through the adoption of a rule here, by a vote now, for the consideration of that which you profess to be for—justice to the Cubans? Will you still profess to be for that which you dare neither to vote for nor against? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I quote against those who follow blindly the system of McKinleyism, and are bound hand and foot, the philosophy of the "great master" of you all, in whose presence you scarcely dare to think [laughter], and under whose influence you are more plastic than clay in the potter's hands. To you I commend his philosophy, and I ask you, as you have long time and often followed it in its triumphant progress, if your consciences must now be salved? Will you repudiate his teachings? Show sufficient respect for the great ability of the master whose will controls and directs you to give now to suffering Cuba and to liberty everywhere an application of the doctrine which your master has advocated with singular eloquence, with marked ability, and even at times with bitter and stinging sarcasm. Will you act as representatives of the people, or are you content to be swallowed up in your Speaker?

If you do not now assert yourselves for the right, how can you meet on the stump and before the country the outraged constituencies which you will be betraying? This was not a mere party question until you made it one. And still it is a question of the manhood, the integrity, and the justice of the people. It is a question now also whether the American House of Representatives is to be suppressed or whether that House is to assert itself boldly. Let us see what is to be done. [Applause.]

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling on the question of order.

Mr. TERRY. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to a precedent here——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has been recognized.

Mr. HITT. I will not speak further upon the question, but merely call attention to the fact that it has been settled, and I ask a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no doubt of the question at all, and sustains the point of order.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill, and read the next paragraph.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HEPBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

LUIS MORENO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, touching the lynching in 1895, at Yreka, Cal., of Luis Moreno, a Mexican citizen, and the demand of the Mexican Government for an indemnity for his relatives on account thereof.

Following the course adopted in the case of the lynching of three Italian subjects at Hahnville, La., on August 8, 1896, I recommend the appropriation by Congress, out of humane consideration and without reference to the question of liability of the Government of the United States in the premises, of the sum of $2,000, to be paid by the Secretary of State to the Government of Mexico, to be by that Government distributed among the heirs of the above-named Luis Moreno.

THE JAMES CREEK CANAL.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President, I have in my hand a petition from citizens of South Washington. As it is very important, I wish to read it and to have the attention of the Senate for a moment. I shall ask that the petition be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. The petition relates to the health not only of that section of the city, but of all the city, and particularly to the health of members in both Houses of Congress. I doubt whether these facts are known to half the members of the Senate, but they are accurate and demand immediate consideration.

The petition reads as follows:

Whereas there does exist in South Washington an unsightly ditch, known as the James Creek Canal, which has existed for about twenty-five years; and

Whereas said canal is about 7,920 feet long and 60 feet wide, thereby exposing to the effects of the sun a surface of 474,200 square feet; and

Whereas the average depth of sewage, garbage, and filth now deposited in the bottom of this canal on the 14th day of January, 1898, is about 2½ feet by actual measurement taken in eight different places between Virginia avenue and N street, thereby amounting to about 43,900 cubic yards so deposited to fester in the sun during the coming summer and give its death-dealing gases; and

Whereas during the time that the said canal has been in existence no less than 110 human beings have lost their lives therein by drowning; and

Whereas it is estimated that sewage and filth from 150,000 people is daily from year to year allowed to enter this canal; and

Whereas the existence of the said canal is estimated by those most able to judge to entail a damage upon the property along and near its banks of at least $250,000; and

Whereas it is only 5 squares, or about 1,500 feet, from the Capitol building of the United States to the northerly end of the said canal; and

Whereas the wind during the hot or summer months almost always blows directly from this canal to the Capitol building, thereby wafting its deadly vapors directly to the building and its occupants: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the residents of South Washington respectfully ask that Congress may take speedy and prompt measures to secure the removal of this James Creek Canal, which by reason of its long unsanitary condition is now more than ever endangering the health and progress of the entire capital city.

We, the undersigned, therefore respectfully ask that the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia will appoint an early day when we may appear before your honorable body in regard to this matter.

It is signed by a very respectable body of citizens of that section of the city, property owners, who ask that action be taken during this session by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

I will state to the Senate in a word that last summer, during the extraordinary session of this body, the committee of citizens referred to asked me to visit the canal with them. It was in the same condition then that it will be during the coming summer. This is a body of water a mile and a half long, beginning 1,500 feet south of the Capitol building, flowing like a great river of thick, muddy filth; and every now and then, almost over every square yard of surface, bubbles come to the top in the shape of little geysers, and the marsh gas escapes to the atmosphere with such a stench as to compel one immediately to leave the banks of the canal.

I thought of microbes of every description, not microbes in embryo, but microbes with wings, all ready to fly, and of their flocking to the Senate Chamber, and I could imagine ourselves, when we opened our windows to the south to get a breath of fresh air, getting wave upon wave of those microbes from the foul air of the James Creek Canal.

Mr. GALLINGER rose.

Mr. KYLE. I wish to say a word further. Probably the Senator from New Hampshire wishes to charge me with something.

I have opposed in times past the extension of streets, the issue of bonds, and the construction of large sewers for the purpose of building up the private property of owners in the suburbs of the District, but I am willing now, with my knowledge of this death-dealing canal so near to us, to cooperate with any member or all the members of this body by any means at command to convert this into a covered or arched sewer, and to support a trunk-line sewer system for the District.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rose simply to make a reasonable inquiry, and not for the purpose of charging anything upon the Senator from South Dakota. I would not do that under any circumstances. But I rose to ask the Senator whether or not the matter has heretofore been called to the attention of the Senate, and especially to the attention of the Committee on the District of Columbia. Is it an original movement or is it a matter that has heretofore been agitated?

Mr. KYLE. I will state that the attention of the people generally has been called to it, but heretofore I believe there has been no concerted action upon the part of the South Washington Citizens' Association to bring this before the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that I have been a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia for several years, and it is an entirely novel proposition to me. I confess I have not seen the canal and did not know of its existence. It is a very extraordinary and lamentable thing if such a cesspool exists in the city of Washington and in such close proximity to the Capitol, and it ought to be suppressed. Every Senator will agree to that, and I am sure every citizen will sustain the Senate, and the committee especially, in taking any action which may be necessary to accomplish that purpose.

The unfortunate thing is that Senators who are sent here ostensibly to represent their constituents and to transact the business of the country are called upon to serve as common councilmen, to investigate sewers and leaks in gas pipes, and to legislate to open alleys, to erect gaslights and electric lights, a form of statesmanship from which I think the members of the Committee on the District of Columbia would be glad to escape if they could. But nevertheless that committee—and I desire now to pay a tribute especially to the chairman of the committee, the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN]—has always taken cognizance of such grievances as this and has acted promptly; and I assure the Senator from South Dakota that one member of the committee at least will cooperate with him to abate this nuisance if it exists to an extent which endangers the comfort or health or the lives of the people in that part of the city.

Mr. KYLE. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I have talked with the chairman of the committee, and he assures me that he will gladly receive the committee of citizens, and, if possible, take up the matter during the present session.

I desire to state here that during the past five or six years many complaints have been made by members of both Houses in regard to our poisoned atmosphere. Malarial complaints are heard from members who have strong, hardy constitutions. It is my solemn judgment that the cause of it is nothing more nor less than this death-dealing canal, which is only 1,500 feet from the Capitol building.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

WITHDRAWAL OF A REPORT.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask leave to withdraw, for the purpose of amendment, Report No. 409, accompanying the bill (S. 1055) appropriating money to pay the claim of the Western Paving and Supply Company, which was reported by me from the Committee on Claims on the 16th of December last.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There being no objection, the report will be withdrawn.

C. R. DOBBINS.

Mr. FRYE. From the Committee on Foreign Relations I report a bill, and as it will not take a second to pass it, I ask for its present consideration.

The bill (S. 3279) to authorize C. R. Dobbins to accept a gold watch awarded to him by the Government of the Dominion of Canada in recognition of his humane and gallant services to the shipwrecked crew of the British schooner Ashton, of Weymouth, Nova Scotia, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. ALLEN. Let the bill be read for information.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That C. R. Dobbins, keeper of the light station at Moose Peak, Maine, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept a gold watch awarded to him by the Government of the Dominion of Canada in recognition of his humane and gallant services to the shipwrecked crew of the British schooner Ashton, of Weymouth, Nova Scotia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TENNESSEE STATE CLAIMS.

Mr. COCKRELL. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (S. R. 6) providing for the adjustment of certain claims of the United States against the State of Tennessee and certain claims of the State of Tennessee against the United States and submit a report thereon. It is a joint resolution which I introduced at the request of the late Senator from Tennessee, Mr. Harris. A similar joint resolution passed the Senate at a former Congress and was favorably reported in the House. It is again favorably reported, and as it is a matter between the State of Tennessee and the United States I ask for its present consideration. It will take only a few moments.

Mr. BATE. I join in the request that the joint resolution be immediately considered. It will not take any time. It passed before without controversy.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee also joins in the request. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TURPIE. I will state that the joint resolution is identical with the joint resolution which was passed by the Senate at the last session of Congress, but failed in the House for want of time. I respectfully ask the early consideration of the joint resolution by the Committee on Commerce, to whom I move that it be referred.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

STATISTICS OF INDEBTEDNESS, ETC.

Mr. ALLEN. I present a very carefully prepared statement of Prof. J. A. Collins, a competent statistician, showing the total indebtedness of the United States and the ratio of possible production in the United States, which I ask to be printed in the RECORD and also as a miscellaneous document.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Senate Document No. 75, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session.]

An investigation such as provided for by the proposed amendment seems to be of the greatest importance, as the facts to be made known through it are absolutely necessary for a thorough understanding of our financial condition and in order that steps may be taken intelligently to relieve existing evils.

A careful study of the data secured by the Eleventh Census (although such data is by no means complete) will prove the correctness of this conclusion. The volume of debt represents the limit of demand against the producing energy of the nation, and the volume of produced values the limit of the power to meet this demand.

The interest charge upon the volume of debt being reloaned or reinvested for profit in that way goes back annually against the producing capacity itself charged with interest, as does also the amounts paid upon the principal, thus compounding the demand, while the producing energy grows by a much smaller ratio. If the figures of the Eleventh Census are at all reliable, a most dangerous condition has been developed, and it is necessary that the exact facts should be known and some measure taken to equalize the ratio of increase of demand and that of production. This can not be done without exact and reliable data upon which to base conclusions.

The annexed statement, taken from the reports of the Eleventh Census, will serve to illustrate:

Debt volume.		Total values produced annually.
Public bonded debt United States—States, counties and municipalities	$2,027,170,546	Exact and estimated	$19,742,986,563
Quasi public corporations, exact and estimated	5,293,548,342	Deduct annual cost of maintenance of population, at $275 per capita, or 75 cents per day	17,448,959,000
Private corporations and individuals, exact and estimated	11,461,372,154	Annual surplus, from which interest must be paid	2,294,027,563
Total	18,782,091,042	Deduct annual interest charge	1,502,567,283
		Net annual surplus	791,460,280
Average interest rate by no means less than 8 per cent. The census report shows the average rate upon debts secured by mortgage to be 7.35 per cent. This debt is less than one-third of the total, the remaining two-thirds commanding higher rate. Annual interest charge, $1,502,567,283; annual interest charge per capita, $23.68.		Annual surplus per capita, $12.47.

Ratio of increase of producing ability, estimated by natural increase of population, by ratio of increase of aggregate of wealth as shown by the censuses of 1880 and 1890, and also calculated by average increase in wage volume, shows in neither case a greater ratio than an average of 4 per cent per annum.

Thus it is seen that there is a demand at 8 per cent on a debt volume almost equal to the power of production and that demand compounding annually, while the producing ability to meet it grows only at a simple average ratio of 4 per cent. As will be seen from the above statement, the annual surplus is small, but a short continuance of the progression of demand would consume it entirely.

The figures here given are from data reported by the Eleventh Census, which furnishes the first information in this direction, and from the data given the subject seems to be of sufficient importance to demand thorough investigation and exact results. The principle and mathematical result of this compounding demand against a lesser ratio of increase of producing ability are demonstrated in the accompanying pamphlet, on pages 80-85; the detail and classification of public debts, pages 103-193. Some interesting figures as to the absorption and concentration of produced values are cited in the accompanying newspaper extract, and still further elaborated in the pamphlet, in Chapter XVII, page 63. Other important facts are illustrated in Chapter XXVIII, page 118. The debt investigation by the Eleventh Census has opened a broad field, which must be thoroughly explored before we can advance from theory to exact knowledge in the domain of finance, and the proposed amendment seems in the direction of taking the first and most necessary step.

DISTRIBUTION OF WEALTH—LANDLORDS GET ONE-HALF THE TOTAL ANNUAL PRODUCT OF THE COUNTRY—PROF. J. A. COLLINS THROWS NEW LIGHT ON THE SUBJECT—SIX AND ONE-HALF BILLION DOLLARS GO TO REAL-ESTATE OWNERS AND ONE AND ONE-HALF BILLIONS TO INTEREST ON DEBTS EVERY YEAR—STARTLING FIGURES FROM THE CENSUS OF 1890.

[Written for the Journal.]

That the aggregate wealth of a nation is a proof of its greatness, its prosperity, and progress is a most vital and fundamental delusion, although it is universally set out without fear of contradiction by a class of political charlatans, whose profession is to fly the eagle and excite senseless enthusiasm, and a large proportion of people accept their assertions and boasts as unquestionable truths.

People are oftener misled in judging of conditions and effects of systems by this false conception than by any other.

The fact is that the aggregate wealth of a nation is no criterion by which to judge of its prosperity. A vast amount of values centralized in the hands of a few or of a class may exist in a nation and the mass of its population groan under the most grievous oppression, in the most abject poverty and slavery, while they wallow in the densest ignorance. Russia, Turkey, Persia—all of the great autocracies of history are evidences of this fact.

The true prosperity of a nation or people is best indicated by the general distribution of wealth. The more general the distribution the greater the comfort, happiness, and prosperity of the people and the greater the degree of liberty enjoyed.

Taking this standard as a guide, what is the status of our own nation in the scale of prosperity?

There is no questioning the fact that this nation is the possessor of a vast amount of accumulated values, which are evidences of the wonderful producing capacity of the industry of our people. But how are these values distributed—to what extent do the masses of the people benefit by them; what proportion do the producers retain of the values created by their industry and skill? In what degree is their labor lessened or their comfort and advantages multiplied by them?

From the most authentic data in our possession, gathered and compiled at great expense by the Government, the following interesting and startling facts are developed.

The total wealth of the nation is estimated by the Census Bureau to aggregate $65,037,091,197 actual value. This aggregate is classified as follows:

Real estate, with improvements thereon	$39,544,544,333
Live stock on farms and ranges and farm implements	2,768,015,040
Mines and quarries, including product on hand	1,291,291,579
Gold and silver, coin and bullion	1,158,774,948
Machinery of mills and products on hand, raw and manufactured	3,052,593,441
Railroads and equipments, including street railroads	8,685,407,323
Telegraphs and telephones, shipping, and canals	701,755,712
Miscellaneous	7,893,708,821
Total	65,037,091,197

Of this total of wealth it will be seen that by far the greater portion is made up of real estate values; about 61 per cent of the whole being made up of this special class of property.

Land being the first and greatest necessity of man, the requirements for the greatest degree of prosperity would demand a general distribution of this important factor in the great economic problem. Let us see what are the actual conditions in this regard.

The data as to home ownership shows the following conditions to prevail: The total population on June 1, 1890, was 63,450,760, or about 12,690,152 families of 5 members each, or an aggregate of that many homes, both owned and rented. Out of the total number of families the number owning and occupying mortgaged homes and farms is about 2,250,000, leaving 10,440,152 families occupying hired homes and farms, or those which they own free of incumbrance; about 8,250,000 families occupy hired homes and farms, leaving 2,190,152 who occupy their homes free of incumbrance.

This shows that about 66 per cent of the people are actually tenants and consequently can have no share in real estate values, but real estate represents for them a burden in the shape of rent. It will be observed that 18 per cent occupy mortgaged homes and farms. Now, the holder of a mortgaged home is virtually but a tenant holding under the superior right of the mortgagee and paying an annual tribute equivalent to rent.

A very great portion of lands so held are forfeited, and the holders become actual tenants. Adding the mortgaged homes and farms to the percentage of tenants, we have 74 per cent of the population cut off from any share in this class of values, leaving the entire aggregate of land values in the hands of 26 per cent of the population. But included in this class of owners are those who own no more than the homes they occupy free of incumbrance. The class of free-home owners is about 16 per cent of the population, and in this is included the landlord class. Deducting from the 26 per cent the class who own no more than the homes they occupy, we have about 10 per cent of the population owning and controlling somewhere near 90 per cent of the total land values of the nation, or 6,517,614 own and control $35,590,089,899 of real-estate values, or $5,460 per capita, while 53,933,146 people own and control only $3,954,454,434, or about $74 per capita.

The percentage of the tenant class in great cities is really startling, Boston and New York showing over 84 per cent to be tenants, and other cities nowhere going below 75 per cent. For cities of 100,000 population 80 per cent would be a fair average of actual tenants. The knowledge of these facts will give us the means of discovering the influence of real estate as a power in the transferring of values.

Rent is the first demand always to be met out of the earnings of labor. Estimating the average rent of homes, of all classes, at $250 per annum, and estimating the annual payments on mortgaged homes, including interest at the same amount, we have the enormous sum of $2,696,657,250 annually transferred into the hands of 10 per cent of the population in the form of rent for property used alone as homes. Now, this sum represents about one-sixth of the total amount of values annually produced by the industry of the nation.

This enormous amount of rent, it must be borne in mind, is paid for property used only as homes, or, in other words, for dwelling houses. Now, there remains property used for business purposes, ranges, ranches, and various other uses. Suppose the rent of all other classes of real estate combined to be only equal to the amount paid for homes, and we have an amount of value annually transferred to the landlord class equal to about one-third of the total annual product of values; and if we add to this the profits from sales, we raise the amount annually transferred to a sum equal to almost one-half of the total of all values annually produced, and this vast sum flows into the hands of only 10 per cent of the population.

Unquestionably real estate, under the prevailing land system, is a most important factor in the transferring of values and the centralization of wealth.

Another most important influence in transferring values into the hands of the few is the interest on the volume of debt, public and private.

The debt volume is shown to be about $18,027,170,546, classified as follows:

Public debt United States—States, counties, and municipalities	$2,027,170,546
Quasi-public corporations	5,000,000,000
Private corporations and individuals	11,000,000,000

Now, the average interest rate for the United States on loans received upon real estate is found to be 7.85 per cent. As real-estate security usually commands the lowest rate and short loans, commercial accommodations, etc., higher rates, and as only about $6,500,000,000 is secured upon real estate, it would be a low average to estimate 8 per cent as the rate.

This would represent an annual interest charge of $1,442,173,643. If this charge remained stationary at this sum, there would be an annual transfer of the enormous sum of $7,835,488,143 from the products of labor to the creditor class from rent and interest alone. But this interest charge is not a stationary one. On the other hand, it grows by geometrical progression, for the reason that the interest charge is annually reloaned by the creditor class to the producers and itself charged with interest, thus compounding against the producers.

The producing capacity of the nation grows, of course, but in a ratio not at all to be compared with the ratio of increase of the interest charge.

By comparing the data of 1880 with that of 1890 it is found that the producing capacity of the nation grows at the ratio of about 4 per cent per annum, and this is only a simple ratio, so it is seen that we are trying to run a geometrical progression of demand against a simple ratio of production to meet it, and even a simpleton ought to be able to see that such a thing is impossible beyond a given point and for a very short time—that certain ruin is the inevitable end.

But the matter is even worse than this, because the debt volume, independent of added interest charge, grows in a ratio at least equal to the ratio of increase of productive capacity. Setting off one increase against the other, we have the interest charge growing by a geometrical progression which will double the debt volume in about nine years, and thus an enormous amount is annually transferred from the producing class to the small percentage of the population which constitutes the creditor class.

As to the distribution of the aggregate volume of wealth, it is shown that the tenant class, which we have seen constitutes 66 per cent of the population at the very least, own only 5 per cent of the aggregate wealth.

The homes whose value is less than $5,000 constitute 82 per cent of the total number of homes and 52 per cent in value of the mortgaged homes, showing that more than one-half of the values of homes which are mortgaged belong to the poorer class of owners. Only 9 per cent of the total wealth is owned by the tenant families and the poorer class of those who own their farms and homes under incumbrance, and these constitute about 25 per cent of the total families, showing 75 per cent of the population to own 91 per cent of the aggregate wealth.

Finally, there is a group of 4,047 families, or 20,235 individuals, who own and control nearly $15,000,000,000—say $12,000,000,000, or about one-fifth the aggregate wealth. Otherwise stated, 20 per cent of the aggregate wealth is owned and controlled by three-hundredths of 1 per cent of the population.

As to the means by which this vast amount of value was transferred to so small a class of holders, it is shown by investigation that a little over 20 per cent of the total was transferred by land and its exploitation; 10 per cent by natural and artificial monopolies; 0.02 by agriculture and ranch stock with land; 51 per cent by trade and manufactures with land and securities; 13 per cent by interest, profit, and speculation, often with land; only 0.008 per cent by inheritance.

This verifies the evidence of the influence of land in the transfer of values and centralization of wealth. It also proves the immense power of speculation, as it will be observed that productive industry, distinct from the element of speculation, has no place in the amassing of great fortunes.

The distribution, according to the various industries, is a subject of great interest, and many startling facts have been developed, a knowledge of which will be of immense value in formulating systems of reform.

Agriculture being the primary industry upon the prosperity of which the development of the others depends, and employing as it does the greatest number of people, it is natural to suppose that it would require a large share of the total of wealth, but the data do not show this to be the case.

The total number of farms in the United States is 4,564,641. These represent a farm population of about 30,000,000 individuals, including both owners and tenants.

The value of these farms, including improvements, farm implements, live stock, etc., is about $15,982,267,689, or about 25 per cent of the total wealth, while the agricultural population represents about 50 per cent of the total. Of these farm families, about 35 per cent are tenants and 23 per cent occupy mortgaged homes, or 58 per cent of them practically homeless.

In transportation and mining the aggregate wealth employed is about $17,737,048,055. These industries, let us estimate, employ about one-half the number engaged in agriculture, and we have 25 per cent of the population and about 28 per cent of the wealth as the proportions. This leaves $31,317,775,443 to the remaining 25 per cent of the population, which includes the banking, trading, retired, wealthy, idle—indeed, all other classes not engaged in productive industry; or, in other words, the nonproducers of the population control about 47 per cent of the entire volume of wealth, exclusive of what share they may have in the capital already accounted for as invested in productive industry. Or we might say that 47 per cent of the total wealth is used exclusively for speculation and the exploiting of the industrial population.

We have seen how potent a factor in the centralization of wealth speculation is. This percentage of wealth represents the basis of this power.

The profits returned of course are difficult to estimate, and such estimate will not be attempted here. Enough, however, has been shown to prove that although our country can boast of a vast amount of accumulated wealth, it is of comparatively little benefit to the industrial masses, but, on the other hand, has been exploited from them to add to the luxury and demoralization of an idle class of nonproducers who use it to oppress and plunder those whose industry and energy alone are the reliance of the nation.

MUSCOGEE COAL AND RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate, on Monday last, passed the bill (S. 2858) authorizing the Muscogee Coal and Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory and Oklahoma Territory, and for other purposes, so as to have it pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas, that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not ask for action upon the motion. I simply desire to have the motion to reconsider entered and pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas subsequently said: I have ascertained since entering the motion to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill 2858 was passed that the bill has been sent to the House of Representatives. I therefore move that the House be requested to return the bill to the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

POSTAL FREE-DELIVERY SYSTEM.

Mr. HOAR. I submit a resolution on which I ask immediate action.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be instructed forthwith to inquire and report what sum of money, to be immediately available, is necessary to preserve the efficiency and usefulness of the postal free-delivery system, and to report the same as an amendment to any appropriation bill to which it may be appropriate.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think I ought to say a word upon the resolution. I will ask to have it read again. I should like to have the Senate hear the phraseology of it.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads is always ready to carry out any request the Senate may make of it, but I think the Senate ought to bear in mind that we are utterly powerless on the question of appropriations. We can never deal with the question as to how much money shall be appropriated for the carrier system. All we can possibly do if this resolution shall carry is to act as an auditing committee for the Committee on Appropriations and ask the Committee on Appropriations to give us information from time to time as to what has been done. Then when we are through with the question, it must go to the Committee on Appropriations, which will deal with it de novo, and may or may not pay the consideration to the recommendation of the Post-Office Committee that we should hope it might.

Under the circumstances, Mr. President, it would be a great saving of time if the resolution could go at once to that omnium gatherum, the Committee on Appropriations, which is sure to ingulf it in the end, and which is sure to give the service what in its opinion the committee thinks it ought to have, and its opinion will not be based, I fear, in the slightest degree upon what our committee has reported.

Of course we are all, it is not necessary to say, in entire sympathy with the desire of the Senator from Massachusetts that the postal facilities of this country shall be extended in every possible degree. But our committee is utterly powerless to deal with the question. As I said, we can act as an auditing committee for the Committee on Appropriations, and then what we say is not taken as final. But we will do it if the Senate thinks we ought. However, I think the resolution ought to go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the subject to which the resolution calls the attention of the Senate is a very important one. The city where I dwell, a city growing very rapidly and of over 100,000 inhabitants, was startled a few days ago by an order of the Post-Office Department to reduce the number of its letter carriers by ten, which is about a sixth of the whole force. The same order directed New York and Boston and some other large cities to reduce their force about a fiftieth. We were immensely behind those cities in the proportion of our carrier force, in view of our needs as judged of by population or by the value of the business which it serves. The principal newspaper of the city said, hardly with an exaggeration, that if a dynamite bomb had been dropped in front of the post-office it would not have created more consternation among the business men of the city than that order.

It is an order—I do not find fault with it—based upon a deficiency of about $150,000 in the appropriation for the current year, and all that is wanted to supply this need, I suppose, is an appropriation of about $150,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. President, the New England manufacturers depend for the successful conduct of their business, under circumstances which are always sufficiently onerous, on the prompt delivery of their correspondence, and that correspondence is with all parts of the country. The correspondent at the other end is just as much interested and it is just as much a convenience to him, even if he dwells in an agricultural district or a cotton-raising district or a mining district or anywhere else. A miner who wants a machine desires to have his order filled promptly. If it has got out of repair, any mechanism which he wants he desires to have immediately. And so with a cotton producer who wants a cotton gin or any machinery, or a person who wants any agricultural machinery. If the gear is out of order, he does not want to lose the twenty-four hours which this free-delivery system gives. The system is one of the great instruments of civilization.

This is a twenty-minute question, a five-minute question, with the committee. The Postmaster-General can state in five minutes how much is needed for this service.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I ask the Senator a question, not to be in the least disputatious? The Postmaster-General never makes a recommendation to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads as to how much he needs for any branch of the postal service. His recommendations do not come to us. All his recommendations go to the Committee on Appropriations. We never get them.

Mr. HOAR. Well, you ought. The Committee on Appropriations, of course, is to be the final reporter to the Senate, and the final judge, before the matter of these appropriations comes to the Senate, because it has to deal with the question of every particular need and the relation of every need of the Government to every other need, and the capacity of the people to raise a particular sum of money in a particular year. I understand it is the policy of the Senate, expressly declared in its rules, to refer such questions in the first instance to the appropriate committee.

We had, for instance, at the last session of Congress, the question of the proper salaries of marshals and district attorneys. The Committee on Appropriations insisted or expressed very strongly their desire that the Committee on the Judiciary should deal with that question in the first instance and make known their views to the Committee on Appropriations, on which they finally acted. We have had at the present session of Congress an amendment proposed in regard to providing judges and other public officers with reports. That was referred in the first instance to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that committee reported their opinion for the information and consideration of the Committee on Appropriations.

There have been two or three other matters. The question of the appropriation for Mr. Du Pont's expenses, which was reported yesterday, I think, by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], from the Committee on Appropriations, and included in the bill, was referred in the first instance to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and then to that committee. That is what the sixteenth rule applies to when it provides that no amendment shall be received to any general appropriation bill that shall increase an appropriation, unless it be to carry out some existing law "or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate." That implies as clearly as language can imply that the standing or select committee dealing with that particular subject shall first ordinarily consider the question. Then the rule goes on further to state that all such amendments increasing an appropriation shall, one day previous to being offered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. Otherwise we should be compelled to come to the plan, which I myself think a bad one indeed, of having a dozen appropriation committees instead of one.

The policy of the Senate, I repeat, is that each committee considers the special subject. I do not mean that this is to apply to the routine appropriations which run through every year. The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill is changed a little every year, but not requiring necessarily the attention of the special committee every time. The Committee on Appropriations knows all about those appropriations, and usually they are repeated at nearly the same from year to year. The growth of the country requires a little increase in those appropriations.

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator will permit me, it may be to his advantage to know that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads were in session this morning and were presented by the chairman with certain communications from citizens of New York relative to this identical question. It seems that the carrier system of New York City has been curtailed, or at least the Department has refused necessary extensions. Some weeks ago I made an application to the Department to investigate the necessity for an extension of the free-delivery system at Great Falls, in Montana. The inspector to whom the matter was referred reported that it was necessary and desirable, but the Department, in transmitting the result of the inspector's report, announced that the appropriations available would not justify the increase.

The committee this morning, taking the matter under consideration, reached the conclusion that there is no defect in the existing law requiring the attention of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; that the legal machinery is entirely adequate, but the steam a little short.

What is needed in this case is an increase of appropriation to meet the growing demands of this branch of the postal service. There is no need for any legislation on the subject. Hence the resolution does not present a proposition looking to the enactment of any law, but rather to the acquiring of money through the appropriate committees in the two Houses of Congress for the execution of existing law. I think the Senator would save time and avoid some confusion by having the resolution directed to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOAR. I do not care two cents to what committee the matter goes, but my purpose was to call the attention of the Senate, with such emphasis as I could command, to the great danger to a great public convenience. The Senator from Montana says that it is a matter that only requires steam. I do not know whether there is more steam to be found in the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads or in the Committee on Appropriations, but the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] can inform us on that subject.

I am perfectly willing to amend the resolution by substituting the Committee on Appropriations. I want to have the Senate order the inquiry. I am aware that I could ask the committee privately to make the inquiry, but I want to have my constituents understand, and I want the Senate and the proper committee of the Senate to understand that this is a very grave and serious matter.

I have had occasion to go all through the matter of the need of my own community for postal free delivery within six weeks. The number had just been raised by ten, and that is not half enough. I say it is utterly intolerable to the business men of that community (and I have no doubt that what is true of that community is true of the community represented by the Senator from Montana) that this great public service should stop. The result is to be that there are crowded manufacturing villages, which in some parts of the country would by themselves be treated as large cities, that are to be deprived of the letter-carrier system, to which all their business habits, all their modes of business, and all their business necessities conform.

I will, if it is desired, modify the resolution by having the Committee on Appropriations make the inquiry.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I am in sympathy with the suggestions made by the Senator from Massachusetts. I have reason to believe that in a number of the cities there is a defect in the delivery of mail under the carrier system.

Mr. HOAR. This is a proposition to prevent the cutting out of the existing service, not to increase it.

Mr. ALLISON. I think I understand the point, although I may not. The question of a letter-carrier system is an administrative matter. It is not a question, it seems to me, for the inquiry of any committee of this body in the sense proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts. Is it proposed that we shall take into consideration here and decide whether there shall be ten more or ten less letter carriers in Worcester or Boston or New York or in my own city? It seems to me that we can not do it. Under the organization of our Government we have committed to a Postmaster-General the administration of the postal affairs.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to make one suggestion at that point?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. This is a case where the Postmaster-General wants to do it and has decided that it is necessary, but the trouble is the lack of money to carry out the desire of the Department.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me, I will reach all those questions in due season. Here is an administrative affair. It is under the control of the executive department. How do we reach such questions with the executive department? Take the Committee on Appropriations, as the Senator has now suggested by a modification of his resolution. The Committee on Appropriations is authorized to recommend the appropriation of money for an existing service, whatever that may be, and it is required by the statute to do so upon regular estimates which must be submitted in a Book of Estimates by the Secretary of the Treasury and transmitted to Congress at the beginning of each session. It is provided that if there are special estimates or deficiency estimates, those estimates must come from the Secretary of the Treasury and be submitted to the Vice-President, and by the Vice-President laid before the Senate and transmitted to the Committee on Appropriations.

I saw the other day a criticism to the effect that the Committee on Appropriations had made a great mistake because they did not, in the urgent deficiency bill that was passed here yesterday, propose an additional appropriation for letter carriers. The Postmaster-General has made no estimate for a deficiency in the letter-carrier service, I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts. How can the Committee on Appropriations originate an appropriation for such a purpose when there is no communication from the Postmaster-General, the head of that great Department, who is presumed to administer it, and who, I think, can administer it better than the Senator or any committee of the Senate? If the Postmaster-General had sent a letter through the Secretary of the Treasury, or directly to this body or to the other, or even to the Committee on Appropriations, we certainly would have considered it, and doubtless we would have followed the recommendation of the Postmaster-General.

But I submit that it is not necessary that any committee shall take hold of this question. If the Senator from Massachusetts is aggrieved or if his constituents are aggrieved respecting the infrequency of mail deliveries, as I have no doubt they are—and I have had some occasion myself to complain in this respect—the proper course is to inquire of the Postmaster-General why it is that the letter-carrier system is not effective, and let him give us the reasons why he does not ask for further appropriations. So far as we know he has ample appropriations and has not exhausted those for the current year.

Mr. HOAR. He has not got enough; that is all.

Mr. ALLISON. He does not say so in the way whereby Congress can properly under our statutes reach the question of additional appropriations. We had an urgent deficiency appropriation bill here, which we passed yesterday. There was not presented to the Committee on Appropriations a suggestion of any deficiency respecting the letter-carrier system, and no suggestion is to be found anywhere in our archives that the Postmaster-General has complained that he has not money enough to administer the letter-carrier system, the railway-mail system, or any of the various branches of the Post-Office Department. If the Postmaster-General wants money to administer the affairs of that great Department, he ought to ask for it through the regular channels, as our statutes provide.

So I submit to the Senator from Massachusetts that, without reflecting upon the Postmaster-General, we should first ask him, through a resolution of the Senate, what is the difficulty in the pathway of suitably administering the letter-carrier system, and let us not impliedly by resolution make an investigation of the administration of the Post-Office Department. We have a very able head of that Department, one who I have no doubt is interested in the progress and development of our postal system and in facilitating in every way possible the transmission of the mails, and I for one do not like to see a resolution of inquiry submitted here which impliedly reflects upon that officer as neglecting a duty which is plainly marked out to him by the statutes of the United States.

It seems to me before we institute such an inquiry we should give the Postmaster-General himself the opportunity of stating why it is that he discontinued 10 letter carriers in Worcester, others in Boston, and others in New York. If he gives as the reason that he has not sufficient money to carry on this work, let him furnish an estimate for the 10 letter carriers in Worcester, the 50 in Boston, and the 5 in my own city. How can the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads without proper data undertake to make up an estimate of what are the real necessities of the postal service respecting the letter-carrier system not only in Massachusetts or in New York, but in every other State of this Union? So I submit to the Senator from Massachusetts that, before entering upon an inquiry as to whether the Post-Office Department is wisely or unwisely administered, we should first institute an inquiry of the Postmaster-General himself.

Mr. HOAR. My honorable friend from Iowa, usually so wise and fair, seems to me to have at every step misstated the proposition about which we are talking.

Mr. ALLISON. I will see if I understand the Senator, because I do not wish to misstate his position or to misunderstand it. As I understand, the Senator from Massachusetts makes a statement that there is an inefficient administration of the letter-carrier system in the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. That is one of the Senator's misstatements or misunderstandings.

Mr. ALLISON. I will ask the Senator, Is there an inefficient administration of the postal system in Massachusetts?

Mr. HOAR. I have made no statement on that subject and no statement which warrants that question.

Mr. ALLISON. I will ask the Senator another question. Has he not stated that there has been a reduction of ten in the number of letter carriers in his own city?

Mr. HOAR. I have.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the result of that? Is it not that there is an inefficient execution of that part of the postal system?

Mr. HOAR. Not the least in the world.

Mr. ALLISON. Then there is no necessity for any action, if there is no difficulty because of this reduction, and why should we make such an inquiry?

Mr. HOAR. I did not say there was no difficulty in consequence of this reduction. I said there was no charge of improper administration in Massachusetts.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Massachusetts said that there had been a reduction of ten carriers in his own city, and a reduction in other cities. I agree with him. I have heard that that is true. Now, the Senator says because of that the postal service is embarrassed, and that it struck the people of Boston like dynamite. Who struck them like dynamite? Was it this Senate?

Mr. HOAR. I did not say that.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly not; but the implication from the Senator's statement was that there was an inefficient administration of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. HOAR. May I make a suggestion to the Senator?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator is speaking in my time.

Mr. ALLISON. I beg pardon. I thought I was speaking in my own time.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] said that he did not know whether there was more steam in the Appropriations Committee than in the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. That is the question I want settled.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator's time must be very valuable if it is necessary for him to make that statement.

I was saying that there had been an implied criticism by the Senator from Massachusetts and by others that the Committee on Appropriations have not done what they ought to have done, and we are told that if we had made proper appropriations this great difficulty in Massachusetts would have been avoided.

Mr. HOAR. I did not make any such suggestion.

Mr. ALLISON. It seems impossible for me to quote the Senator correctly. I do not claim to quote the exact language the Senator used, but what I want to say is——

Mr. HOAR. Would it not be well for the Senator to let me make my statement so that he may understand me?

Mr. ALLISON. I will hear the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. I stated when I took the floor that the Senator from Iowa, usually so wise and fair, seems to have misunderstood every statement I made. Thereupon the Senator pops up——

Mr. ALLISON. And I will pop up again. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOAR. And proceeds to state all over again the mistakes that he made before. Perhaps we shall get along more rapidly if he will allow me to state what I did say.

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose that is the very best thing.

Mr. HOAR. I have not yet suggested anywhere a fault in the Post-Office Department or in the Committee on Appropriations. Nothing of that kind has come into my mind. What I have said is this: The Post-Office Department found, in the exercise of its discretion, that ten more letter carriers were necessary in the growing city of Worcester—which within a few years has grown from 15,000 to 105,000 inhabitants—and appointed them six weeks ago, and that number was not half what we needed or a quarter. The Department wrote a letter to the postmaster at Worcester, saying that because of an insufficiency in the appropriation there was not money enough to pay for the service, and so it would have to be cut down.

Whether the Appropriations Committee provided for the Department all that it estimated to be necessary at the beginning of the fiscal year, I do not know, and have not inquired; but, however that may be, it turned out that twelve months ago there was not money enough by the little sum of $150,000 to support the letter-carrier system of the country as established by the Post-Office Department and as they desired to carry it out for the current year. So it becomes necessary either to cut down in February until the 1st of July the letter-carrier system for Worcester and New York and Boston and Dubuque, Iowa, or there must be now supplied the sum of $150,000. That is the whole of it.

I do not think the Senator has any right to get up and say that I have attacked the Postmaster-General or that I have attacked the Senator's committee. There is not one word in my utterance, except to say that it has turned out that the thing which the Postmaster-General desired to do costs more money than has been provided him with which to do it. That is all there is of it; and the resolution asks the appropriate committee of the Senate—I supposed it was the Post-Office Committee—to inquire how much money is necessary to enable the Department to continue the service without interruption for the next three months.

Now, coming to the next proposition of my honorable friend, I do not concede what he says, that we are to violate a statute if we do this thing. We are makers of statutes, and the Congress of the United States can not violate a statute. It makes statutes.

Mr. ALLISON. That is true.

Mr. HOAR. That is the exact phrase the Senator used.

Mr. ALLISON. By the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. That it violates a statute by the Senate to inquire how much money is necessary to prevent a deficiency. That is a funny proposition to my humble mind.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that I certainly was not guilty of stating so absurd a proposition as that. If I was, it was wholly a slip.

Mr. HOAR. That is what I thought.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator so understood me, he mistook my meaning.

Mr. HOAR. Then comes the Senator's further proposition. He says that we ought not to do that thing—if I misunderstood him, he will correct me—that we ought not to cure an admitted evil and grievance by our legislative authority unless the Postmaster-General previously sends in an estimate and request. I do not understand that to be the function of this body or its relation to mankind. The Constitution expressly provides that the Senate may make amendments to money bills as to other bills, and time out of mind it has been the practice of the Senate, when any Senator or the body itself was informed that any particular appropriation was necessary, to make such appropriation. We do not put our heads in the mouth of the lion of the Post-Office Department; and I venture to say that in the wildest dreams of my honorable friend the chairman of that committee, even when the steam was on, the argument never occurred to him before as an argument against a proposition of this kind that because the Post-Office Department had not come in and asked for a particular appropriation needed for the public service, or even if the Post-Office Department did not think it wise, we were not entitled to exercise our discretion and invoke our legislative power.

I supposed that the committee, of course, would ascertain these facts from the Postmaster-General. What I want to do is to call the attention of the Senate, of the Postmaster-General, and of everybody else interested in the matter to the fact that here is a grave and important danger of a grave and important public misfortune, to wit, the stoppage of the letter-carrier system, on which the conduct of the business of innumerable business men depends, and that I want to have remedied at the first moment. The simple way would be for a committee of the Senate to inquire of the Postmaster-General whether, in his judgment, this ought to be remedied. If they agree with him, as I think they should, then they should report on the next appropriation bill the sum he desires.

Now I should like to have read the letter to which I have referred as part of my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
SUPERINTENDENT FREE-DELIVERY SYSTEM,
Washington, D. C., January 15, 1898.

SIR: The time has arrived when it becomes absolutely necessary for the Department to devise ways and means to avoid an anticipated deficiency of about $150,000 in the free-delivery service during the remainder of the fiscal year, as it is not at all certain that Congress will provide for it.

It appears from the records of this office that ten carriers have been allowed your office during the current fiscal year. In order that Worcester may help in taking care of the deficiency, I have to request that you reduce your force by the number allowed during the current year. This may be done by reducing the number of deliveries in the residential portions one, making four delivery routes three, and three, two. Please take steps to carry out this arrangement by February 1, 1898.

Very respectfully,

PERRY S. HEATH,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

POSTMASTER, Worcester, Mass.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have explained—and I see the Senator from Iowa proposes to rise again—what is the reason of the opposition to this proposition. I supposed when I moved the order that, as a matter of course, no human being would object to a simple inquiry whether $150,000 would be enough to supply this want which the Postmaster-General has already shown he wishes to supply by appointing the men for the whole country, and I find the opposition begun by my honorable friend from Colorado is kept up by my honorable friend the chairman of the Appropriations Committee. There must be some hidden cause of trouble in the Department which I do not understand.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I certainly did not intend to involve the Senate in any discussion over this very natural and praiseworthy resolution or attempt of the Senator from Massachusetts to secure to the country the benefits of much-needed mail facilities. I only desired to call his attention to the fact of the utter powerlessness of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to deal with any branch of the subject whatever, or in the slightest degree to assist in remedying the trouble, unless possibly in one respect. The Senate Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, if the Senate will support it, can settle for all time the question of a sufficient number of mail carriers to deliver the mails. We have pending, and have had pending for years, a bill that, if enacted into law, will change the existing law as to second-class mail matter so that we shall make second-class mail matter pay decent postage. I may not state the proportions with entire accuracy, but I am measurably right when I say that the second-class mail matter of the United States costs 65 per cent of the entire expense of serving the country with its mail and brings in less than 3 per cent of its revenue.

What the Senator says as to the awful disaster that seems to have overtaken these New England people because they can not send and get their letters quickly is true, but a great number of the New England citizens are to-day represented in the city of Washington by men who are insisting upon appearing before the Post-Office Committee to protest, in the interest of publications which they circulate through the country at the rate of a cent a pound, against Congress passing a law which would compel them to pay some sort of postage that would be partially remunerative. If the influence of these New England cities could be procured, not alone to get a proper appropriation to carry the mails and for mail carriers, but also to relieve the country from the awful burden of carrying this second-class stuff at a cent a pound, at an enormous loss of millions and millions of dollars to the country, I think we should be better off and have less trouble about mail matter and mail carriers.

Mr. HOAR. Why does the Senator speak of those people as representatives of New England alone?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Because they happen to be New England publishers who are here.

Mr. HOAR. I beg the Senator's pardon; but does the Senator think it quite proper, when any one particular representative of New England makes a suggestion here, to say that other persons are the representatives of New England cities? Those persons represent their own particular business.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not mean to make any suggestion as to New England that is not a very favorable and rose-colored one. That is the only kind I ever make, I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts; but I do mean that New England sentiment I hope may operate upon New England people.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me one moment, the subject to which he now alludes—second-class mail matter—is one about which there is a division of opinion in New England, as there is in the rest of the country, and one of the ablest, though very brief and compact statements in relation to what the Senator has been saying has come from my own home within twenty-four hours.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have not a doubt about it.

Mr. HOAR. And the publishers are quite as importunate in Philadelphia and Chicago as they are in New England.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Very true; but I doubt whether they are as influential as those of New England. I think I ought to say personally, in explanation to the Senator from Massachusetts, that I do not mean in the slightest degree to make one of these propositions wash the other, but I did not think it was inopportune to call the attention of the Senate to this subject at this time, when we all feel the need of great economy in the public expenditures, because our income is not as great as our expenses. I desire to see the people of the United States have proper mail facilities, but at the same time wished to call the attention of the Senate to the awful waste of public money by carrying stuff at 1 cent a pound, which results in an enormous loss to the revenues of the country.

Mr. ALLISON. Only a word more respecting this matter. If I exhibited any heat in its discussion it was wholly unintentional. Of course I had no wish to reflect on the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], or misinterpret or misrepresent or misquote him, and I have too high an opinion of his integrity and fairness in debate to suppose for a moment that he wished to misrepresent me. If the Senator from Massachusetts understood me to say that I supposed that the Senate of the United States have no jurisdiction of the matter until we are instructed to act upon it by a Cabinet officer, I was wholly misunderstood by him; or if he understood me to contend that in the Senate we have no power of appropriating money until we have an estimate from a Department, he wholly misunderstood me. I have been here a little too long and have seen too much of the practice of the Senate to suppose that we do not occasionally appropriate money without the request of a Cabinet minister or any other outside party.

What I was trying to impress upon the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senate was that the resolution did not meet the situation, and that if we made an inquiry as to the need of the letter-carrier system in Massachusetts, we should not gain anything thereby, especially because that inquiry would spread and magnify itself until we were required to make an investigation as to almost every important post-office in the United States. To ascertain what amount of money is necessary for the efficient administration of the letter-carrier system is a question which must, in the end, be decided by the administrative officers of the Government, who have all the details necessary. Adopting, however, what I think would be a very unusual course in the Senate—indeed, I do not know of any such resolution ever having been heretofore offered, although I may be mistaken as to that—the Senator from Massachusetts proposes to instruct the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to "forthwith inquire." "Forthwith" has an important signification. Then the Senator changed his resolution to instruct the Committee on Appropriations to "forthwith inquire."

Mr. HOAR. That meant pretty soon.

Mr. ALLISON. "Pretty soon"—the day after to-morrow, I suppose.

I ventured—it may have been with some animation—to make a suggestion to the Senator from Massachusetts, who is a venerable Senator than whom none is more familiar with the rules and customs of the Departments and of the legislative bodies as respects appropriations. He has not informed us, even in his last statement, whether he has inquired of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. HOAR. I have got his letter here, stating all that is required, if the Senator will pardon me. I produced a letter from the Postmaster-General stating that he found what he had ordered to be done could not be done for the lack of money.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Massachusetts will observe that I do allow him to interrupt me, and I do so with pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. I instruct you with pleasure. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. What does the First Assistant Postmaster-General say to the Senator from Massachusetts? He says it appears from the records of his office that the ten carriers which have been allowed the Worcester office during the current year will have to be dropped. He begins his letter by stating:

The time has arrived when it becomes absolutely necessary for the Department to devise ways and means to avoid—— an anticipated deficiency.

What?

There is no deficiency now; there is no suggestion in this letter that any body ought to be called upon to appropriate money. There is in the next sentence a suggestion that even if there should be a deficiency there might be some doubt whether Congress would supply it. Then the letter proceeds to say:

To avoid an anticipated deficiency of about $150,000 in the free-delivery service during the remainder of this fiscal year—

Five months and more—

as it is not at all certain that Congress will provide for it.

There is no deficiency. There is no forthwith inquiry necessary. There is ample money, and the Senator bases this inquiry upon the idea——

Mr. HOAR. The Postmaster-General says there is an anticipated deficiency.

Mr. ALLISON. But there is no deficiency now. I suggested mildly, with as much deference as I could, to the Senator from Massachusetts, who is familiar with our proceedings here, that he ought to address the inquiry to the Postmaster-General, and ask for an estimate for a deficiency appropriation or a suggestion how it was to be dealt with. I ventured the statement, which I repeat, because I believe it, that it is rather a reflection upon the Postmaster-General to require any committee to undertake this inquiry in the manner suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts. I should feel that way if I were Postmaster-General. I should at least think it was wise for the Senate, either through a Senator or a committee or a resolution, to inquire of the Postmaster-General what the difficulty is as respects the inefficiency of this service, because it is inefficient, as stated by the Senator from Massachusetts, and whether any more money is needed.

The Senator from Massachusetts says to me that he did not say it is inefficient, but that there is not enough money to maintain its efficiency. If there is any difference between those statements I am unable to see it.

I suggest that this inquiry had better go to the Postmaster-General. I will state, with respect to the Committee on Appropriations, not that the Senator from Massachusetts accuses me or the Committee on Appropriations, that I saw in a newspaper only yesterday that the Committee on Appropriations had been criticised for not including in the urgent deficiency appropriation bill a deficiency appropriation for letter carriers. I have no reference to the Senator from Massachusetts or to any particular newspaper, because I do not remember where I saw it.

Now, in response to that suggestion, I ventured to state that there is no estimate for a deficiency, and also to suggest that, in the due and orderly proceedings of this body, under our statutes and under our rules, where in the administration of a Department there is a deficiency, it is the duty of the head of the Department to make an estimate for that deficiency and send it here and have it referred.

That was the sum and substance of all I said upon this matter. I was not even replying to the Senator from Massachusetts upon the subject. I was not addressing my observations to him. I was speaking in the course of orderly proceeding here in order to reach what the Senator desired, and if he chooses to attribute to me heat in debate, I certainly can not object.

I merely desired to have the Senate understand that in my belief and judgment the Senator from Massachusetts was not taking the wisest and best course to reach this result. If the Senator wants the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to make the inquiry, or the Committee on Appropriations either, I certainly have no objection; but I suggest that the easiest way to reach the matter is to ascertain whether there will be a deficiency at the end of the year; if so, how much, and how much more money is required to carry out the work of this branch of the service.

Mr. HOAR. I will hold out an olive branch to my friend the Senator from Iowa. I withdraw the resolution and present it in the modified form in which I send it to the desk. I wish to pay my tribute and profound respect to the Senator from Iowa not only as a wise man in all serious matters, but what I had not suspected before—an admirable humorist.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution as modified will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be instructed forthwith to inform the Senate what sum of money, to be immediately available, is necessary to preserve the efficiency and usefulness of the postal free-delivery system.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to criticise my friend, but the usual method of applying for information to Department officers is to use the word "directed."

Mr. HOAR. I use the word "instructed," and not the word "directed." "Instructed" is practically the same word.

Mr. ALLISON. I will state that it is an unusual form, but I do not object to it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to hear the directory words read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the resolution.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. CHANDLER. The word "instructed" should be changed to "directed," to conform to the language most commonly used in the Senate; but, equally with the Senator from Iowa, I yield that point to the Senator from Massachusetts, if he prefers the word "instructed." However, I do not think the word "forthwith" should be used on anything except a very extraordinary occasion. This is an extraordinary occasion, of course, in some respects, because we have had eloquent speeches from the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Iowa, and those who have listened to them have been not directed, perhaps, what to do, but instructed what to do in the performance of their duties as Senators.

But, in all seriousness, I do not think there is a public exigency here which requires the use of the word "forthwith." Therefore I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that there will be no objection to the resolution if he will leave out that word. I do not want to create the impression that this is a great public crisis. We may wish to use the word "forthwith" when there will be importance to be attached to it, and I do not want the efficiency of the word destroyed on a resolution of this sort.

I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will consent to leave it out, and if he does I shall not object to the resolution. If he does not, I shall ask to have the resolution go over until to-morrow, in order that I may more carefully study the effect of that word in resolutions of this kind.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I was glad to see the Senator from New Hampshire pour oil upon the troubled waters. There is no difficulty between the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Iowa when they come to look into the existing condition of the Treasury. I have not much doubt that, in view of the fact that there was a deficit of $44,000,000 under the Dingley Act up to the 1st day of this month and a deficit of $2,000,000 thus far this month, the Postmaster-General deemed it wise to reduce the expenses of his Department; and I know of no place where he could have done so more successfully than in those sections of the country where——

Mr. HOAR. Where they pay all expenses.

Mr. ALLEN. No, Mr. President, not where they pay all the expenses, but where, under the beneficent operations of this most beneficent measure known to the country as the Dingley bill, there are strikes and lockouts, so that the people have ample time to go to the post-offices and get their mail without the assistance of carriers. I do not see anything particularly wrong in that respect. The Senator from Massachusetts complains, and possibly justly, that the force of carriers in his city has been reduced ten. Out in the little town where I live, in the West, where perhaps we do not expect quite so much as do the people of the East, we are contented to go through the mud and slush to the post-office and get our own mail, and we are very thankful indeed sometimes if the postmaster does not lock us out before the hours of business expire.

Speaking still more seriously, a charge has been made in several of the great journals of the United States within the last six or eight weeks that there is an annual leakage in our post-office expense to the amount of eight or nine million dollars a year as a result of overweighing by those who have contracts for the carrying of the mail. Those charges have gone to the extent of specifying where this fraud upon the Post-Office Department was being committed. In one instance it specified that during the weighing season (and my understanding is that what constitute the weighing season are certain weeks set apart when the mail is weighed as an estimate for a contract for four years) contractors paid the postage on patent medicine advertisements to the amount of fourteen carloads in one case, and transported them as mail matter upon which they were to receive pay from the Government.

Mr. President, it is absolutely astonishing, if not appalling, that charges of this gravity and directness should be heralded from one end of this country to the other, read by Senators and members of the House, no doubt, and read, possibly, by the Postmaster-General himself, and yet the party in power charged with the responsibility for this abnormal condition of affairs should remain as silent as the grave respecting it. If we only had the nerve—I know of no word that expresses it better—if we only had the moral courage to take hold of these frauds and save the money of the United States, save these eight or nine million dollars which are annually being wasted, as much so as if the money were thrown into the fire and burned, we would not only have money enough to supply the ten carriers the Senator from Massachusetts wishes at Worcester, but we could put an efficient corps of carriers at every important mailing place in the United States. And yet Senators, grave and dignified Senators of long years' experience, are standing here and contending with one another like boys at play as to whether a resolution is properly worded, or whether it is respectful to the Postmaster-General to call his attention to the matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the resolution may go over, if the word "forthwith" is to remain in it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that under objection the resolution will lie over until to-morrow. The resolution is laid over.

SILVER COINAGE AND COIN REDEMPTION.

Mr. VEST. I gave notice this morning that at the close of the morning hour I would ask the Senate to consider the concurrent resolution I reported yesterday from the Committee on Finance. At the request of several Senators who are compelled to be absent from the Chamber to-day, I will change the notice by stating that to-morrow at the close of the morning hour I will certainly ask the Senate to consider the concurrent resolution.

EDUCATIONAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR ALASKA.

Mr. CARTER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to furnish to the Senate an account in detail for each year of all moneys heretofore appropriated by Congress for educational purposes in the Territory of Alaska, and the manner in which such appropriations have been expended, particularly showing—

First. The location, cost, character, dimensions, and date of construction of each building erected.

Second. The name and location of each school aided to any extent from Government appropriations in said Territory, and the amount of such aid or cost thereof, if furnished in the form of materials or supplies.

Third. The auspices under which the respective aided schools have been or are being conducted.

Fourth. The name of each person now or heretofore employed or paid by the Government from such appropriations, the place, date, duration, and nature of employment, and the compensation paid.

Fifth. The number of pupils enrolled in each aided school, the length of the school term, and the cost per capita for board, clothes, and tuition.

Sixth. The food or clothing furnished the respective schools, the cost thereof, by whom and how purchased and paid for.

Seventh. The amounts paid for traveling or for other miscellaneous purposes, with the items, date, and cause of the expenditures, and by whom made.

Eighth. The amount appropriated and expended for reindeer for use in said Territory, by whom disbursed, to whom and when paid, and the number, cost per head, location, and condition of such reindeer.

JOINT TRAFFIC ASSOCIATION.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce, in connection with its investigations under the resolution which passed the Senate on the 11th day of January, 1898, be directed to inquire into the uses made by the railroads constituting the Joint Traffic Association of the fund provided by articles 16 and 17 of the articles of organization of said association adopted November 19, 1895, to take effect January 1, 1896; that said committee ascertain whether or not said fund is lawfully in existence, and examine the details of the expenditures, and inquire whether or not they are made for lawful purposes, and whether or not any illegality or impropriety in the expenditure of such funds should be prohibited and punished by a law of Congress.

INVESTIGATIONS BY THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Fund of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and the same hereby is, authorized, in all matters submitted by the Senate to said committee, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, and that the expenses thus incurred be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers approved by the chairman of said committee.

BERNARD CAMPBELL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate:

In response to the resolution of the Senate dated December 18, 1897, I transmit a report from the Secretary of State and accompanying papers relating to the claim of Bernard Campbell against the Government of Haiti.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, January 19, 1898.

BOARD OF REGENTS OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 121) to fill vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution was read twice by its title.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that the joint resolution be put upon its passage.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont asks for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECEIVERS OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

The bill (H. R. 5493) to amend section 2234 of the Revised Statutes was read twice by its title.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask that the bill be now considered.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. FAULKNER. Has the bill been reported by any committee?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The measure is identical with the bill which passed the Senate on Monday last, which was reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. COCKRELL. I thought the bill had passed already.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The Senate bill passed on Monday. This is a bill which has come from the House. The two bills are identical.

Mr. COCKRELL. This is identical with the bill which was passed?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Precisely; word for word.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I was not present when the Senate bill passed the Senate, but I should like to inquire whether the pending bill provides for an additional receiver and an additional register in each land office in the United States.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It does not. On the contrary, when the bill becomes a law it will obviate the necessity of having an additional receiver in many land offices in the country. The object of the legislation, as was fully stated here by the report submitted last Monday, is simply that receivers in the various land offices may be responsible under their bonds for any moneys received from the sale of Indian lands. The matter was fully explained at the time the bill was passed in the report which was submitted.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If it does not create an additional receiver and an additional register, it would seem to take away from the registers and receivers any duties that they now have with reference to lands other than Indian lands. I want to call the attention of the Senator to the language of the bill. I may be entirely in the dark and in the bark about the matter. I presume I am.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will state to the Senator from Connecticut that the first sentence of the bill is the statute as it now stands down to the word "who," and that the wording is the suggestion of the Interior Department.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Is there any other section which prescribes the duties of registers and receivers?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. None whatever. The duties of registers and receivers are prescribed by the regulations of the Department.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I want to read the provision, for this will be all the law there will be, as I understand it, about the appointment of registers and receivers after the bill passes:

There shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a register of the land office and a receiver of public moneys in each land district established by law——

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Right there, Mr. President——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut—

who shall have charge of and attend to the sale of public and Indian lands within their respective districts, as provided by law and official regulations.

Does not that call for the appointment of any new officers?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It does not.

Mr. CARTER. I will state at this point that the duty of collecting money for Indian lands by section 2234 of the Revised Statutes is imposed upon registers and receivers in addition to their other legal duty. The defect in the section rested in the fact that the official bonds are not made liable for moneys collected. By express statutory provisions the bonds are made liable for fees collected and for moneys collected under all other forms of entry on public lands under which moneys are paid; but there was an omission in this particular section which probably was not noticed at the time as being a defect. In the course of administration, however, it was found in the case of one or two defalcations that by strict construction the official bond of the register and receiver could not be held liable for moneys collected for the sale of Indian lands, such moneys being held in trust by the Government for the Indian tribes.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will state, if the Senator from Montana will allow me, that there is a decision of the United States court for the district of Idaho, I believe, to the effect that a receiver is not responsible under his bond for any money that comes into his hands as a result of the sale of Indian lands. To remedy that is the object of the proposed legislation.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. All the change, then, that has been made in the statute, as it now is, is to insert the words "and Indian lands"?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. From the word "who," in line 9. It is simply reenacting the present statute, in other respects.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I presume that, having been examined by the Public Lands Committee, it is all right.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It has been very thoroughly examined.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask that an order may be entered for the return of Senate bill 2934 on the same subject, which passed the Senate last Monday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There being no objection, the House will be requested to return the bill to the Senate.

TRANSPORTATION METHODS OF RAILROAD COMPANIES.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce be directed to investigate while pursuing its inquiry under the resolution of the Senate of January 11, 1898, the question whether railroad-ticket brokers have obtained and sold free passes issued by any railroad company; and further, whether any railroad companies have habitually violated section 22 of the interstate-commerce act, prohibiting free transportation except in certain specified cases; and also whether or not unlawful discriminations have been practiced by any railroad companies by receiving payment for transportation otherwise than in money; especially whether a system exists under which contracts are made with the proprietors or editors of newspapers and periodicals under which special tickets or passes are issued and paid for by advertising or other newspaper paragraphs, and whether similar special contracts are made with lawyers under which tickets or free passes are issued to them as retainers, which are not to be followed by any actual legal service; and that said committee be directed to consider whether or not penalties should be enacted by Congress to punish violations of said section 22 committed by railroad officials who give free transportation unlawfully, as well as all persons who receive such illegal free transportation, and to report by bill or otherwise.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CULLOM. That is a pretty long resolution and requires a very extensive investigation. Whether the conditions require it is, I think, a little questionable. I would rather that the Senator from South Carolina would allow the resolution to be referred to the committee to consider the question whether we want to go into that long investigation before any attempt at legislation is made. I am very anxious to get in here before the session closes some bill looking to legislation to correct the evils which we know exist in a large degree. I hope the Senator will allow the resolution to be referred to the committee for consideration by that committee, and then, if they think it wise to go into the investigation, of course we will do it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not see why the committee or the chairman of the committee should seek to restrict the scope of the investigation which we are already pursuing. The testimony already brought out before the committee on the anti-scalping bill, as it is called, shows very clearly that the issuing of passes by the railroads contrary to section 22 of the interstate-commerce act is universal. They acknowledge it. The general agents and presidents and other officers of railroad companies acknowledge it openly. The resolution merely broadens the scope of the investigation. It gives us as a committee the opportunity to send for persons and papers and get at the facts. Then, if we can agree upon a bill to amend the present law so as to do away with those evils, of course the matter will be determined by the committee. Otherwise the matter will come in here when the bill is reported and the question will have to be decided by the Senate as to just what will be done. I do not think that the chairman of the committee wants to keep out the truth or to suppress it or to prevent us from getting at it, and the resolution merely contemplates our being able to arrive at the facts. That is all there is about it.

Mr. CULLOM. The chairman of the committee certainly does not desire to keep out the truth. The fact is that the committee has as much truth now as will justify it in reporting the most vigorous legislation that it can possibly prevail upon the Senate to pass, prohibiting nearly all character of violations of the law. For instance, for several weeks in the meetings of the committee we have been investigating what is known as the scalping business. At the beginning it was the impression that the scalping was practically carried on by the scalpers outside of railroad offices, and that, while there might be small violations of the law by railroad agents themselves, it was not done very extensively. But it has been developed by the testimony, I think, sufficiently to convince everyone that not only were the men outside carrying on the scalping business guilty of doing what we charged they were doing, but that they were doing it in collusion with railroad agents as well.

So it is perfectly apparent to the committee, I think, as it is to the Senator from South Carolina himself, that we have abundant evidence to show that railroad agents generally were as guilty as the scalpers outside; and we are therefore prepared, I think, if legislation to cure these evils is what we want, to frame a bill and report it to the Senate and ask the Senate's consideration of it; so, also, in other directions.

What I am desirous of doing is not to have an investigation all the year around and take testimony, incurring the expense of printing and sending for witnesses and all that, but to prepare bills in the light of the testimony we already have, which is sufficient to show that not only scalpers are carrying on this business, but that they are doing it by the connivance of the railroad agents, and they could not probably get along without it. Such is the case in other respects. While I have no disposition to keep back the truth, and I am anxious to have it, yet I do not want the Senate to instruct the committee to go on with the investigation indefinitely, but I do want Congress actually to enact into law some legislation to try to cure the evils.

I hope the Senator will allow the resolution to be referred; and if the committee find that they need more testimony than they now have to enable them to prepare bills that will enable them to cure the evils, then I am as anxious as he or anybody else is to report the resolution back and ask for authority to proceed with the investigation.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock has arrived. It becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill No. 94, to provide for the Twelfth and subsequent censuses.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like the Senator who has that bill in charge to give me just a few minutes to explain the scope of the resolution. Of course I can not press it now or get a vote on it, but I am unwilling to have it go to the committee. If the Senator will permit me, I will explain the reason why.

Mr. CULLOM. Let the resolution come up to-morrow.

THE CENSUS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 94) to provide for the Twelfth and subsequent censuses.

Mr. CARTER. I will state that an understanding was reached on yesterday afternoon to the effect that the request made for unanimous consent to take a vote at a definite time on the pending measure, Senate bill 94, should be renewed to-day. I now renew the request then made for unanimous consent that a vote be taken on the bill and amendments then pending at 4 o'clock on Wednesday, the 26th instant; that is, one week from to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate has heard the request for unanimous consent as to the census bill, that a vote be taken on the bill and amendments at 4 o'clock p. m., January 26. Is there objection?

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Montana that there is no necessity for putting the census bill in that position at this time. There will be no difficulty about getting a vote at an early date, and to consent now, with other matters pending which are likely to absorb the time between now and next Wednesday, to vote at a particular hour would possibly be unfair. I therefore suggest to the Senator from Montana that he allow the matter to remain in its present attitude, occupying such spare time as he can find, and that when the Hawaiian treaty gets out of the way, he then ask consent for a definite hour to be fixed for the vote on this bill. An agreement now for a vote next Wednesday, in view of the obvious purpose of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] and the friends of annexation to press the debate upon that treaty from day to day, might result in unduly limiting the discussion. Let the matter, therefore, lie over for the present. I am sure there will be no disposition to make delay. Everybody recognizes the advisability of an early preparation for the taking of the next census. There are differences of opinion, however, in regard to the propriety of establishing a permanent census bureau. If the bill was amended so as to relieve it of that feature, there would be little difficulty in getting it through without further trouble.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, it is quite obvious, I think, that the discussion of the pending annexation treaty is liable to engross the attention of the Senate for an indefinite period of time; and it is so apparent that the early passage of this preliminary census bill is a matter of the greatest public importance that I feel constrained to ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration and disposition of the bill at this time, unless some date in the near future can be agreed upon, not a date so near as to prevent a full and fair and free discussion and the presentation of all desired amendments, but a date that will insure the passage or final disposition of the bill at least before the first of next month. I do not wish to persist in naming the 26th instant, but if the 1st day of February could be designated as the date, I am inclined to think that by virtue of a definite date being fixed in advance Senators desirous of submitting views or amendments on the bill will see to it that other matters are for the time being laid aside and that this important pressing question shall receive proper consideration.

If, however, at this time it is understood that no agreement can be reached and no disposition made of the census bill until after the Hawaiian treaty matter shall have been disposed of, I can not concur with the Senator from Texas that we may reasonably hope for an early disposition of the bill. I do not know what the views of the Committee on Foreign Relations may be concerning the time at which a final vote may be taken on that important measure, but it is not reasonable to suppose that the vote will be taken before the 1st of February. It may be the 1st of June before that vote is taken. In view of this decided uncertainty it does not seem that it is well to lay aside indefinitely a matter conceded by all to be of present and pressing importance, which will in itself certainly not consume more than twenty-four hours in discussion—certainly it will not consume more than to-day and to-morrow—awaiting the contingency presented by the possible disposition of the Hawaiian treaty in the near future.

If the 26th of the month is not satisfactory to the Senator from Texas as a date for the final vote, I trust he will kindly suggest some later day, so that we may be assured that this preliminary machinery looking to the taking of the census may be started in motion in due season, and allow the submission of the general plan of legislation to the present session of Congress, so that the census bureau, whether it be determined to be permanent or only temporary, shall be launched in the active preparation of its work before the present Congress adjourns.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Montana will permit me, I will make a suggestion. It seems to me the situation is a little complicated, owing to the fact that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] has given notice that to-morrow he will call up the resolution reported from the Committee on Finance. That resolution ought to pass unanimously, but I am afraid there may be some adverse comments on it by certain Senators, and it may lead to debate. I am informed that it will.

Mr. CARTER. I rather think the Senator has been erroneously informed. It will probably pass unanimously.

Mr. STEWART. Why not name the first Monday in April for the final vote on the census bill?

Mr. WHITE. The Senator from Nevada suggests that the first Monday in April will probably do for the final vote upon the census bill.

Mr. CHILTON. Speaking for myself, I can say to the Senator from Montana that I have not the slightest objection to an early disposition of the census bill. If we get through with it by March, we will then have provided for the Twelfth Census relatively a year earlier than the Eleventh Census was provided for. The bill which started the preparations for taking the Eleventh Census was passed in March, 1889. If we get through a new census bill by March, 1899, we will then have a state of preparation for taking the next census equal to that which existed in regard to the taking of the last census.

I am not disposed, however, to say that we should delay the matter so long. There is no doubt that the Senator from Montana will get this census bill through the Senate in ample time. The subject will be acted on by both Houses and the President during the present session. That is about all that he can expect to accomplish. It does not seem to me that there is any such urgency that these preparations should be now begun as to justify him in pushing the matter to a vote or to a unanimous agreement for a vote at this time.

If I knew that we would get three or four days, or even twenty-four hours, in which to debate this question, I would gladly consent to the desired agreement; but it is not at all certain that we will get any time to debate the census measure between now and the 1st day of February. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] has been on his feet several times this morning to make a motion that we go into executive session. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] has a resolution on the financial question which he expects to bring to the attention of the Senate to-morrow morning. Those two questions are of such general interest that if their consideration is continued actively, all the time between now and the 1st day of February will be engrossed, to the exclusion of the census and other subjects.

Mr. BACON. I ask the Senator from Texas also to recall the fact that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] has been especially appealed to to know whether appropriation bills would be interposed, and he declined to say that they would not be.

Mr. CHILTON. I suggest to the Senator from Montana to allow this measure to stand in its present posture and we will get it up. I for one will help him to get it up and pass it at the present session.

Mr. CARTER. In view of the suggestions of the Senator from Texas, I will let the matter go over for the present. However, in the event of the course of business in the Senate during the early part of next week indicating that a protracted discussion on the subjects referred to by the Senator is likely to occur, I shall feel it due to the Committee on the Census to press the consideration of the regular order.

PURCHASE OF KANSAS PACIFIC DIVISION.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate bill 3203.

Mr. DAVIS. Is it supposed that the bill will lead to debate?

Mr. FORAKER. I assume it will not. When I asked unanimous consent yesterday that the bill might be taken up for consideration, it was suggested by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON] that he would want to propose an amendment when the bill came on to be heard. He has shown me the amendment he proposes. I have submitted it informally to the various members of the Committee on Pacific Railroads, and they are all agreed that the amendment may be accepted and made a part of the bill. I do not know of any other objection to the passage of the bill. It is one that is of an urgent character, and I assume that there will not be any debate. If there is, I will give way, because I am as much interested as is the Senator from Minnesota in the immediate consideration of the annexation treaty.

Mr. DAVIS. If the bill gives rise to no debate, I of course do not object. If it does, I shall insist on proceeding to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3203) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, under certain conditions, to purchase the Kansas Pacific Division of the Union Pacific Railroad.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLEN. Let the bill be read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. THURSTON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk as section 2 of the bill. I understand the committee are willing to accept the amendment, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be made a part of the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not want to object to the consideration of the bill at this time, but the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS] is absent, and I think he would like to be present when the bill is considered.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Kansas favors the bill and is anxious to have it considered. I have also submitted to him the amendment which is about to be read, and that is acceptable to him.

Mr. ALLEN. That is satisfactory to him?

Mr. FORAKER. It is satisfactory to him.

Mr. ALLEN. Let the proposed amendment be read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON] will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as section 2 the following:

SEC. 2. In case the said Kansas Pacific Division of the Union Pacific Railroad, or any part thereof, shall be redeemed or purchased in the name of and for the United States, then and in that case the President of the United States may, in his discretion, sell and dispose of all the railroad and property so purchased or redeemed for a sum not less than the full amount paid out and expended by the United States to redeem or purchase the said railroad and property.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall, under the direction of the President of the United States, make, execute, and deliver to the purchaser or purchasers of said railroad and property a conveyance in writing, but not under seal, which conveyance shall vest in said purchaser or purchasers all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the property therein described.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not think this bill ought to be taken up now. The amendment which has been read is a very important one, giving the President of the United States the right to convey this property after it is purchased. It raises a question which is very sharply controverted. While I do not want to unnecessarily delay the consideration of the bill, I hope the Senator from Ohio will permit it to go over, and let the amendment be printed.

Mr. FORAKER. I will do that, only stopping now to remark that it is a matter urgent in its nature.

Mr. ALLEN. I shall not obstruct it.

Mr. FORAKER. This road is already advertised to be sold on the 16th, I think it is, of February. If the Congress take any action at all, it should be taken at as early a date as possible, in order that the Government representatives may have ample time in which to comply with all the requirements of the order of sale.

The amendment, as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] will see when it is printed, simply provides that the President may, in his discretion, sell the road, but at no time for a less amount—stating not the language of the amendment, but the effect of it—than will make the Government whole, the purpose of the legislation being to keep the Government in a situation where it can protect its interests and enforce in full the payment of the claim, principal and interest, that the Government has against this property.

Mr. ALLEN. I fully concur in the idea of protecting the Government for the full sum the road owes it, principal and interest, but I am not satisfied that it is good policy at this time to give the President of the United States the power to put this property up at auction or sell it to whomever he may see fit.

Mr. FORAKER. I call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to another feature of this measure—that its provisions are applicable alone to this one particular piece of property.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, I see that.

Mr. FORAKER. The bill as introduced in the Senate, and which was before the committee, provided generally that this power might be exercised with respect to any property upon which the Government had a lien or in which it had an interest. The committee limited in the bill reported as a substitute the provisions of the measure to this particular piece of property.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie over, and the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON] will be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 19, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—G. L. COMER VS. HENRY D. CLAYTON, THIRD DISTRICT OF ALABAMA.

Mr. LINNEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a report from Committee on Elections No. 1. It is very short. There is no minority report. I ask that the report be read, and that the accompanying resolutions be adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Elections No. 1, to whom was referred the contested-election case of G. L. Comer vs. Henry D. Clayton, from the Third Congressional district of Alabama, report as follows:

After the taking of testimony in this case had proceeded for some time, the contestant formally withdrew from the contest and filed with the papers in the case the following statement:

"I am the contestant in this case. I began this contest in good faith. I believed from information in my possession before the contest was begun that I could succeed in establishing my claim to a seat in the Fifty-fifth Congress of the United States, but facts since developed convince me that said contest should not be prosecuted further. I do not wish to annoy Congress by the trial of this case. I do not want to incur other expenses or to put Mr. Clayton to any further expense. I therefore take this method of informing him and Congress that I now abandon said contest for a seat in the Fifty-fifth Congress of the United States from the Third Congressional district of Alabama, and the contestee, H. D. Clayton, is hereby notified that he need not take any testimony in said contest.

"G. L. COMER, Contestant.

"Sworn to and subscribed to before me this 19th day of February, 1897.

"GEORGE B. DAVIS, Notary Public."

In consequence of this statement the testimony was not opened or printed, and the committee has had nothing called to its attention to suggest the propriety of further action, except to present the following resolutions:

Resolved, That G. L. Comer was not elected a Representative to the Fifty-fifth Congress from the Third district of Alabama, and is not entitled to a seat as such Representative.

Resolved, That Henry D. Clayton was elected a Representative to the Fifty-fifth Congress from the Third district of Alabama, and is entitled to his seat as such Representative.

Mr. LINNEY. I move the adoption of the resolutions.

The resolutions were agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LINNEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GROUT, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported the bill (H. R. 6897) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to reserve all points of order on that bill.

The SPEAKER. All points of order are reserved.

HOMESTEAD AND RIGHT OF WAY LAWS IN ALASKA.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5975) extending the homestead laws and providing for right of way for railroads in the District of Alaska.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the homestead land laws of the United States and the rights incident thereto are hereby extended to the District of Alaska, subject to such regulations as may be made by the Secretary of the Interior and approved by the President.

SEC. 2. That the right of way through the lands of the United States in the District of Alaska is hereby granted to any railroad company, duly organized under the laws of any State or Territory or by the Congress of the United States, which shall have filed with the Secretary of the Interior a copy of its articles of incorporation, and due proofs of its organization under the same, to the extent of 250 feet on each side of the central line of said road; also the right to take from the lands of the United States adjacent to the line of said road material, earth, stone, and timber necessary for the construction of said railroad; also ground adjacent to said right of way for station buildings, depots, machine shops, side tracks, turn-outs, water stations, and terminals, not to exceed in amount 160 acres for each station, to the extent of one station for each 5 miles of its road, excepting at terminals, which may include 320 acres, and with the right to use such additional ground as may be necessary where there are heavy cuts or fills. And when such railway shall connect with any navigable stream or tide water such company shall have power to construct and maintain necessary piers and wharves for connection with water transportation.

SEC. 3. That any railroad company whose right of way, or whose track or roadbed upon such right of way, passes through any canyon, pass, or defile, shall not prevent any other railroad or wagon road company from the use and occupancy of said canyon, pass, or defile for the purposes of its road, in common with the road first located, or the crossing of other railroads at grade; and the location of such right of way through any canyon, pass, or defile shall not cause the disuse of any wagon or other public highway now located therein, nor prevent the location through the same of any such wagon road or highway where such road or highway may be necessary for the public accommodation; and where any change in the location of such wagon road is necessary to permit the passage of such railroad through any canyon, pass, or defile, said railroad company shall, before entering upon the ground occupied by such wagon road, cause the same to be reconstructed at its own expense in the most favorable location, and in as perfect a manner as the original road: Provided, That such expenses shall be equitably divided between any number of railroad companies occupying and using the same canyon, pass, or defile.

SEC. 4. That where any company, the right of way to which is hereby granted, shall in the course of construction find it necessary to pass over private lands or possessory claims on lands of the United States, condemnation of a right of way across the same may be made in accordance with section 3 of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes, approved July 1, 1862,'" approved July 2, 1864.

SEC. 5. That any company desiring to secure the benefits of this act shall, within twelve months after the location of any section of 20 miles of its road, whether upon surveyed or unsurveyed lands, file with the register of the land office for the district where such land is located a profile of its road; and upon approval thereof by the Secretary of the Interior the same shall be noted upon the records of said office, and thereafter all such lands over which such right of way shall pass shall be disposed of subject to such right of way: Provided, That if any section of said road shall not be completed within three years after the location of said section so approved, the rights herein granted shall be forfeited as to any such uncompleted section of said road, and thereunder revert to the United States without further action or declaration, the notation of such uncompleted section upon the records of the land office shall be canceled, and the reservations of such lands for the purposes of said right of way shall cease and become null and void without further action.

SEC. 6. That all mortgages executed by any company acquiring a right of way under this act, conveying any portion of its road that may be constructed in said District of Alaska, shall be recorded with the Secretary of the Interior, and the record thereof shall be an affirmance and notice of their execution, and shall convey all rights and property of said company as therein expressed.

SEC. 7. That this act shall not apply to any lands within the limits of any military, park, Indian, or other reservation unless such right of way shall be provided for by treaty stipulation or by act of Congress.

SEC. 8. That Congress hereby reserves the right to at any time alter, amend, or repeal this act or any part thereof, and the right of way herein and hereby granted shall not be assigned or transferred in any form whatever prior to the construction and completion of the railway, except as to mortgages or other liens that may be given or secured thereon to aid in the construction thereof.

SEC. 9. That the plat and profile of such railroad shall refer to fixed visible monuments and natural objects to identify such location and profile.

The following amendments recommended by the Committee on the Public Lands were read:

1. In line 7, section 2, strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "one hundred."

2. In line 11, section 2, after the word "also," insert "reserving all minerals therein contained."

3. In line 16, section 2, after the word "terminals," insert "and junction points."

4. Amend section 2 by adding, at the end of line 22:

"Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as depriving Congress of the right to regulate the charges for freight, passengers, and wharfage."

5. Amend section 4 by adding, at the end of line 12, the following:

"Provided further, That any such company, by filing a preliminary actual survey and plat of its proposed route, shall have the right at any time within one year thereafter to file the profile and permanent location hereinbefore provided for, and such preliminary survey and plat shall, during the said period of one year from the time of filing the same, have the effect to render all the lands on which said preliminary survey and plat shall pass subject to such right of way."

6. Amend by inserting in line 6, section 5, before the words "its road," the following: "of such section of."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BAILEY. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. LACEY. Pending this question——

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa if this is a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. LACEY. It is.

Mr. BAILEY. And was it considered by the full committee?

Mr. LACEY. It was considered by the full committee. In the first place, the bill was prepared and submitted to the full committee before it was introduced. Many alterations were made in the bill, and when it was introduced it was supposed to be the views of the full committee at that time. After it was printed, however, some additional amendments were incorporated in the bill, so that it has not only had the action of the full committee, but had two full and complete considerations by the full committee.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa why it was that the committee did not compel the railroads to pay for the 160 acres of land at the stations and 320 acres at junctions, etc. I have been told that one reason why they did not do this is that the land has practically no market value as the matter now stands.

Mr. LACEY. The land at present has no market value, and whatever value it may acquire will be such value as will be created by the construction of the road. This bill is an adaptation of the present right of way act that is in force in the various States and Territories. The right of way act of 1875 can not in terms be made applicable by a mere extension of the public-land laws to the District of Alaska, for the reason that, as the old law was drawn, it was intended to apply to surveyed lands, or lands that soon after the location of the road would be surveyed, while in Alaska the probability is that a greater portion of any road that may be built will be built through territory not surveyed now, and that probably never will be surveyed. So that we endeavored to adapt the law to the situation as it now is and probably will be in Alaska.

Under the right of way act of 1875, station grounds to the extent of 20 acres were given to the railway companies, one for every 10 miles. As this goes through a mountainous country, and it may frequently become necessary to make stations at shorter distances, owing to the grades, it was thought best to increase the number to one every 5 miles and as there will be at some of those points towns, to make the ground allowed for stations large enough so as to build small towns at any one of the junctions or stations, giving to the railroad that much advantage, which is the only thing in the way of a subsidy that is involved in the bill. This will give ground enough to build a town on if one becomes necessary.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I understand the importance of some immediate legislation on this question, and I am not going to object; but I want to say to the gentleman from Iowa that I do believe the bill is objectionable in that respect. I shall never myself vote for any bill to give an acre of public land to any corporation, and the very fact that this is a sparsely settled country renders the frequency of stations the less necessary. You propose to give them land enough to absolutely control every town established along the line.

Mr. LACEY. Not at all.

Mr. BAILEY. And if permission is given to the consideration of the bill, I shall propose an amendment designed to correct that feature of the bill.

Mr. LACEY. That is, the amount of land?

Mr. BAILEY. I realize that the legislation is important, and I am not going to interpose an objection against the present consideration.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to ask the gentleman if this contemplated line is through any portion of the mining regions, the gold-mining regions?

Mr. LACEY. I suppose that it will be through that mining region. The object is to reach the gold-mining regions, and gold-mining development may be more along the line of the roads as they may be constructed. That is a thing that no one can foresee. It is hoped that these lines to be built will develop the country into which the lines will be built. That is the object that the capitalists have in the construction of these lines of road.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But the gentleman says it is the intent to cross a portion of that region that is now developed as a gold-mining region. As the gold mining develops, may not the whole of this 160 acres that you give them be gold-mining land?

Mr. LACEY. The minerals are reserved in terms, in express terms. We have guarded against that in drawing the bill.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I want to ask the gentleman a question for information.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman from Kansas will permit me, does this reservation apply to the 200 feet along the line?

Mr. LACEY. It applies to the entire line of the railroad.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not only to the town sites?

Mr. LACEY. To the town sites and all.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Does the gentleman reporting the bill know of any corporation that desires to build this road, or is there any corporation asking for this right?

Mr. LACEY. Oh, there are several of them. The committee was besieged with propositions to grant specific rights to specific companies, giving them specific charters. The committee resolutely set their faces against any proposition of that kind and prepared general legislation, such as would be binding on all alike; and it is substantially as the legislation now in force exists in the other States and Territories, and which after twenty-three years of experience has been found to be entirely satisfactory. The right of way act of 1875 has never been amended in any respect that I now recall. It has worked well, and we have only amended it or remodeled it so as to adapt it to the situation in Alaska, which is different from the other States and Territories.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I believe this is too important a measure to pass by unanimous consent, and I believe it ought to have further consideration.

Mr. LACEY. That consideration can be had now.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I feel constrained to object and to let it lie over one more day.

Mr. LACEY. What objection would there be to letting it come up now and further consideration lie over until to-morrow?

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. No; I think it ought to lie over until to-morrow without any consideration to-day.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. CANNON, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back the urgent deficiency bill (H. R. 6251) with Senate amendments thereto; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CANNON. I give notice that I will call this up at the first opportunity to-day.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I could not hear what the gentleman from Illinois said and, I would like to have it reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6251) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for prior years, and for other purposes, together with the amendments of the Senate thereto, having considered the same, beg leave to report as follows:

They recommend concurrence in the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 6, 9, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15.

They recommend nonconcurrence in the amendments numbered 1, 4, 5, 7, 8, and 10.

Mr. BAILEY. It will be understood that all points of order are reserved.

Mr. DOCKERY. These are only the Senate amendments.

Mr. BAILEY. I could not hear what the gentleman from Illinois said.

Mr. BELL. I give notice that when it is brought up, I will move to concur in Senate amendment numbered 5.

The SPEAKER. That is not necessary.

Mr. BELL. I will make the motion and have it pending.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not yet before the House.

Mr. BRUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be, and they are hereby, directed to report to this House without further delay Senate resolution No. 26, declaring that a condition of public war exists in Cuba and that strict neutrality should be maintained.

Mr. HITT. I make a point of order on that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BAILEY. Before we dispose of this question of the point of order, I desire to say something as to whether that resolution is privileged or not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already sustained the point of order.

Mr. BRUCKER. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 107, noes 94.

Mr. BRUCKER. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 169, nays 125, not voting 62; as follows:

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

At the conclusion of the roll call the following occurred:

Mr. WHITE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I was present, but was not well enough informed upon the question at the time my name was called to know how to vote, and I voted "present." I have since learned more about it, and I desire to withdraw that vote and vote "aye."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's name will be called.

The Clerk called Mr. WHITE'S name, and he voted.

Mr. GAINES. I desire to withdraw my negative vote. I find I am paired with Mr. POWERS.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am paired with the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. PITNEY, but in accordance with an understanding with him that has been transferred for this vote, and he is paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. MARSHALL.

The following pairs were announced until further notice:

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6449) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of House bill No. 6449.

Mr. HITT. I call for the reading of the bill.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read the following:

Envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to the Argentine Republic, Belgium, Colombia, Peru, Turkey, and Chile, at $10,000 each, $60,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 11, insert the following:
"Three commissioners, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to proceed at once to the Island of Cuba and to negotiate, if possible, a treaty of peace, amity, and commerce between the United States and the Republic of Cuba: For salaries and traveling expenses the sum of $15,000."

Mr. HITT. I make the point of order that this amendment is obnoxious to the second clause of Rule XXI. The point has already been ruled upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I do not care to argue the point or order. In view of the decision made yesterday, this amendment falls, of course, as the one offered then did. I merely wanted to prepare the pleadings for our appeal to a higher court, the people of the United States.

The Clerk, resuming the reading, read the following:

Agent and consul-general at Cairo, $5,000;
Chargés d'affaires ad interim, $30,000.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 15, page 3, insert:
"For the purpose of emphasizing our recognition of a state of war in Cuba, the President is directed to give the Spanish Government notice of the withdrawal of the consul-general at Habana, Cuba, and the termination of diplomatic relations at that point."

Mr. HITT. I make the point of order that under the twenty-first rule this amendment is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. On the point of order I desire to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not care to hear argument on the point.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I desire to appeal from the decision of the Chair. I ask the Chair to give me an opportunity to be heard. If the Chair feels that he does not desire to hear the question discussed, then I would like to hear stated the reasons of the Chair. I would like the Chair——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is out of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I desire to appeal from the ruling of the Chair——

Mr. HITT. I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. And I desire to be heard on the appeal. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. DALZELL. I make the point of order that the appeal is dilatory.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Then I make the point against the gentleman's point of order——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL].

Mr. TERRY. Have we gotten to that point where we can not appeal from the decision of the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas is out of order and will take his seat. The Clerk will read.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I rise to a point of order——

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed the reading.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington (interrupting the reading). I rise to a point of order, and I am entitled to state the point of order. I have that right under the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the point of order.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. The distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] makes the point that the appeal is dilatory. He is permitted to make the point that any motion is dilatory, but he can not make the point, under the rules, that an appeal is dilatory. Second, I make the further point that in order to sustain the point that a proposition is dilatory some reason should be given, and the member opposing the point should have the right to be heard as on any other proposition made to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order of the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment to strike out the last word of the last line read by the Clerk—line 17.

Mr. DINGLEY. That has not been read.

Mr. HITT. Will the gentleman from Washington wait until the reading of the paragraph is completed?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Had it not been completed?

Mr. HITT. I do not so understand.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. The Clerk had read the word "dollars" in line 17.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has passed beyond the paragraph to which the gentleman proposes his amendment, so that the amendment, though informal, would not be in order at this time to that paragraph.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. But the Chair permitted the Clerk to continue the reading while I was occupying the floor, which I insist was in violation of the rules. Against the point that I am not entitled to offer this amendment, I insist that the Chair unconsciously—I trust inadvertently—permitted the Clerk to continue the reading while I had a right to hold the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman had not the right to hold the floor.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I had been recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman had raised a question, which had been decided against him, and he did not have the floor. The amendment, the Chair presumes, will be in order at a subsequent place. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the paragraph, as follows:

SALARIES OF DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR OFFICERS WHILE RECEIVING INSTRUCTIONS AND MAKING TRANSITS.

To pay the salaries of ambassadors, ministers, consuls, and other officers of the United States for the periods actually and necessarily occupied in receiving instructions, and in making transits to and from their posts, and while awaiting recognition and authority to act, in pursuance of the provisions of section 1740 of the Revised Statutes, so much as may be necessary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, is hereby appropriated.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of line 3, on page 4, of the pending bill.

The Chair held that the amendment I offered a moment ago was out of order. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that I based my position upon what I gather to have been a similar proposition sustained in the House on an amendment offered by the distinguished gentleman who now occupies the chair in the Fifty-fourth Congress, on a resolution which came to the House from the Senate. I read from the proceedings of Congress, the Journal of the Fifty-fourth Congress, on page 148:

"Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is an imperative duty, in the interest of humanity, to express the earnest hope that the European concert brought about by the treaty referred to may speedily be given its just effect in such decisive measures as shall stay the hand of fanaticism and lawless violence, and as shall secure to the unoffending Christians of the Turkish Empire all the rights belonging to them both as men and Christians and as beneficiaries of the explicit provisions of the treaty above recited.

"Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate these resolutions to the Governments of Great Britain, Germany, Austria, France, Italy, and Russia.

"Resolved further, That the Senate of the United States, the House of Representatives concurring, will support the President in the most vigorous action he may take for the protection and security of American citizens in Turkey and to obtain redress for injuries committed upon the persons or property of such citizens."

Was by unanimous consent taken from the Speaker's table and considered.

To this the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], who now sits as Chairman of this House, submitted the following amendment:

That for the purpose of emphasizing our protest against the murders and outrages above recited the President is directed to furnish the Turkish minister his dismissal as a representative of the Sultan at this capital and to at once terminate all diplomatic relations with the Government of Turkey.

To this it appears that a point was made by the gentleman from Kentucky, then a member of the House, Mr. McCreary, that the proposition was not in order. I gather from the record, and am aided by the memory of a distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], that two points were made against the proposition—one that it was not in order under the rules and the other that it was not germane to the pending proposition. It was claimed that it was not in order, in the first place, because it was attempting to amend a concurrent resolution, and, in the second place, that it was not germane to the subject-matter of the pending proposition. The question was discussed, the gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG] taking one view and the gentleman on this side, Mr. McCreary, of Kentucky, the other. The Chair held that the proposition was germane and was in order.

That amendment, it seems to me, is identical in form with the amendment I have proposed.

Mr. QUIGG. Will the gentleman from Washington yield for a question?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Most certainly.

Mr. QUIGG. The gentleman of course recognizes the distinction between the provisions of a rule relating to concurrent resolutions and a rule relating to the consideration of appropriation bills in the House?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Have you concluded?

Mr. QUIGG. I wanted to draw the attention of the gentleman to the fact that this matter relates to an appropriation bill.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I recognize, of course, what the gentleman from New York contends for. But it does not justify the distinction, in my judgment, if the Chair did so distinguish, for this reason——

Mr. QUIGG. It was also claimed that it was not germane to the subject-matter.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois made a similar point on my amendment. But I contend that what I have read, and the action taken by the House at that time, is a complete refutation of the point.

Mr. HITT (interrupting). My point was that it was new legislation, and under the second clause of Rule XXI was not in order, the said rule providing that—

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order on any general appropriation bill—and so on.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Will the gentleman permit a question? Will he insist that an amendment which seeks to retrench expenditures would not be in order?

Mr. HITT. The gentleman's amendment reaches, however, far beyond the mere question of appropriation and changes the existing law.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. But will the gentleman answer my question—whether an amendment decreasing the appropriation is not in order?

Mr. HITT. A motion simply to cut off an appropriation is in order, but a change of existing law, if added to it, would make it out of order.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I insist that this amendment is in order, as it cuts off the salary and retrenches; thus, under the rules, being in order, it should have been submitted to the committee, and I again offer the ruling that I have just read from the Journal of the House as an authority on the point.

Mr. QUIGG. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Most certainly.

Mr. QUIGG. Does not the gentleman know that it has been held time and again that a proposition to reduce expenditures not coupled with another proposition, but of itself and by itself, may be in order, but that in itself and of itself it must have that effect under the rules of the Fifty-third and every other Congress?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I accept the suggestion of the gentleman from New York and answer that I not only agree with him, but I point out that his reasoning fitly applies to this amendment. This amendment does cut off an appropriation and goes to the very object of it, and therefore is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

LEGATION TO SPAIN.

For clerk hire at legation to Spain, $1,200.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

That the Government of the United States of America hereby declares that the Kingdom of Spain is not conducting the war in Cuba in accordance with the laws of war as recognized by all civilized nations, and hereby notifies Spain that if the barbarous manner in which the war has been conducted does not cease within thirty days the United States will recognize the independence of Cuba and maintain it by force of arms.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is out of order on an appropriation bill as an amendment under the second clause of Rule XXI.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, before the Chair rules on this question——

Several MEMBERS (on the Republican side). He has ruled.

Mr. SULZER. I would ask the gentleman from Illinois——

Mr. HITT. That has been ruled on many times.

Mr. SULZER. I would ask the gentleman from Illinois how it is that this resolution, or a resolution similar to this, has been before the Committee on Foreign Affairs, of which he is chairman, for over a year, and no action has been taken on it?

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk proceed with the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. SULZER. One moment, Mr. Chairman——

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read as follows:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES FOREIGN MISSIONS.

To enable the President to provide, at the public expense, all such stationery, blanks, records, and other books, seals, presses, flags, and signs as he shall think necessary for the several embassies and legations in the transaction of their business, and also for rent, postage, telegrams, furniture, messenger service, clerk hire, compensation of kavasses, guards, dragomen, and porters, including compensation of interpreter, guards, and Arabic clerk at the consulate at Tangiers, and the compensation of dispatch agents at London, New York, and San Francisco, and for traveling and miscellaneous expenses of embassies and legations, and for printing in the Department of State, $125,000.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] if the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives intends to suppress all resolutions and all bills, either introduced in this House or coming to this House from the Senate, regarding the frightful state of affairs in Cuba? [After a pause.] The gentleman, like his party, fails to answer, and I respectfully refer the gentleman to the Republican national platform.

Before the election, when you were looking for votes, you pretended to be great friends of the Cuban patriots; but now that you have the opportunity to demonstrate your friendship you are absolutely silent. The people are watching you, and you will hear from them this fall.

The situation in Cuba demands immediate action, and the American people are in favor of aiding the Cuban patriots by extending to them belligerent rights. This should have been done long ago. There is not a member of this House who does not know that if the joint resolution granting belligerent rights to the Cubans which passed the Senate a long time ago by an almost unanimous vote was permitted to be voted on in this House it would pass here by an almost unanimous vote. I do not hesitate to say that nine-tenths of all the members are in favor of it. Some one is responsible for the suppression of action on that joint resolution.

The people of this country would like to know who is responsible—whether it is the Speaker, the President, or the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs? The time is not far distant when we will find out. We shall know. The Republican party can not escape responsibility in regard to this matter. The people, irrespective of party, all over this country want Cuba to be free. Newspapers all over this country are in favor of granting to the Cuban patriots belligerent rights. Congress should have done so at the very beginning of the war in Cuba. This is not a partisan question and can not be made so. It is a question of right, honesty, justice, and patriotism. Everybody knows that there is war in Cuba. The Spanish monarchy almost daily admits it. No one doubts it. Thirty days after Sumter was fired on, Spain recognized the belligerent rights of the Confederacy.

Mr. OGDEN. And rightfully, too.

Mr. SULZER. Well, we did not complain, and Spain can not justly complain if we recognize the belligerent rights of the Cuban patriots. International law justifies it. We ought to take prompt and immediate action in regard to the frightful situation existing in Cuba. It is proper and humane and all well enough to send provisions, to send money, to send medicine, and to send clothing to the sick, starving, and distressed victims of Spanish barbarity in Cuba, but we should do more—we should send down the North Atlantic Squadron to the gates of Habana, stop these outrages, and aid the Cuban patriots to achieve their freedom and independence, as France aided the Revolutionary colonists in their struggle for liberty and independence.

The Democrats in this House are in favor of passing the joint resolution granting belligerent rights to the Cubans. The Republicans have persistently refused to permit a vote on the question. The people of this country will hold the Republican party responsible for that action at the coming election. We will meet you on the stump all over this country, and we will tell of your recreancy on this important question, and the people will condemn you. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. PAYNE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its secretaries, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

H. R. 5493. An act to amend section 2234 of the Revised Statutes; and

H. Res. 121. Joint resolution to fill vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 2934) to amend section 2234 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Also:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 2858) authorizing the Muscogee Coal and Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory and Oklahoma Territory, and for other purposes.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read as follows:

LOSS BY EXCHANGE, DIPLOMATIC SERVICE.

Loss by exchange in remittances of money to and from embassies and legations, $2,500.

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to occupy the time to which I am entitled in discussing House resolution 94, introduced by myself in this House on December 7, to recognize the belligerent rights of the Cubans.

We may well question whether this Government is any longer a government of the people when the people's representatives are denied by a packed Committee on Foreign Affairs the right to discuss and act upon questions involving the honor of our country, and are compelled to go round Robin Hood's barn and under cover of an appropriation bill discuss these belligerency resolutions.

Let us for a moment glance at some of the causes which have been instrumental in inaugurating the present deplorable war. These causes must be sought in the misgovernment of Cuba by a long line of governors-general. Robbed, gagged, having no influence where their interests were at stake, for their rulers were all imported from Spain, they suffered all the indignities heaped upon a conquered people. The governor or captain general, appointed by the Spanish ministry, exercised an authority more autocratic than the Czar of Russia and enforced upon the unhappy people of that beautiful island the horrors of an absolute despotism.

The right of trial by jury was unknown, and prominent Cubans who for any reason had become distasteful to the governor-general were arrested, and, if not murdered by the arresting officers before being delivered to the authorities, were cast into loathsome prisons, "incommunicado," and after months of such torture were either condemned to penal servitude in the African prison at Ceuta or were summarily garroted in prison. The Spanish officeholders were men who came to Cuba to recoup their broken fortunes and had neither respect for their offices nor the unfortunate people who were subject to their caprice. These broken-down scoundrels and gamblers, who came for a limited time only, looked with contempt upon the people they robbed, and after accumulating a fortune returned to Spain to waste it in riotous living.

"No taxation without representation," a principle dear to us, was unknown, and the Cuban who dared advocate such a heresy became at once a persona non grata to the imported rulers, was arrested as a political disturber, had his estates confiscated, and himself exiled from his native land. Every position of honor, trust, or emolument in his own country was closed to the Cuban, and his life and property were held by the sufferance of an avaricious, unscrupulous horde of foreign officeholders. Such was the unhappy condition of the fairest island in the world until 1868. At that time, after all their petitions for redress had been scornfully rejected by the Imperial Government of Spain, determined for the fifth time to right their wrongs by the sword, Cespedes raised the standard of revolt in the east, and for ten years the struggle for independence was waged against overwhelming numbers of the veteran soldiers of the peninsula.

The same disregard of the amenities of civilized warfare characterized the ten years' war as has characterized the present war. The bloodthirsty savagery of the Spanish armies may be judged by the general order of Valmaseda, dated April 4, 1869:

First. Every man from the age of 15 years upward found away from his habitation, and who does not prove a justified motive therefor, will be shot.
Second. Every habitation unoccupied will be burned by the troops.
Third. Every habitation from which does not float a white flag as a signal that its inhabitants desire peace will be reduced to ashes.
Fourth. Women that are not living at their own homes, or at the homes of their relatives, will collect at the town of Jiguani or Bayamo, where maintenance will be provided. Those who do not present themselves will be conducted forcibly.

Jesus Rivocoba, under date of September 4, 1869, writing to his father, gives us a glimpse of the bloody scenes enacted during that famous contest:

We captured 17, 13 of whom we shot outright. On dying they shouted "Hurrah for free Cuba!" "Hurrah for independence!" Among the 13 we shot the first day were found three sons and their father; the father witnessed the execution of his sons without even changing color, and when his time came, he said he died for the independence of his country. On coming back we brought along with us three carts filled with women and children, the families of those we had shot, and they asked us to shoot them because they would rather die than live among Spaniards.

The Book of Blood gives the names of 2,927 martyrs to liberty—political prisoners—and 4,672 captured insurgents whose fate has never been made known, together with a list of 13,000 confiscated estates.

Pedro Fardon, a Spanish officer, writes September 22, 1869:

Not a single Cuban will remain in this island, because we shoot all those we find in the fields, on the farms, and in every hovel. We do not leave a creature alive where we pass, be it man or animal. If we find cows, we kill them; if horses, ditto; if hogs, ditto; men, women, or children, ditto; as to the houses, we burn them; so everyone receives his due—the men in balls, the animals in bayonet thrusts. The island will remain a desert.

Valmaseda, the Spanish commander, himself paid a visit to the home of the Mora family, and, there being no male patriots on whom to wreak his lust for blood, butchered and burned the Mora sisters and left their home in ashes.

During the first four years of this war, according to official reports forwarded from Madrid by the United States minister, 13,600 Cubans had been killed in battle, besides 43,500 prisoners whom the Spanish minister admitted to have been put to death.

After ten years of this savage warfare, after both parties were practically exhausted, after 200,000 Spanish soldiers had been killed in battle or died from disease contracted in camp, and the island desolated, Spain proposed to grant to the insurgents autonomy. This proposition was eventually accepted, and after the treaty of Zanjon the Cuban armies laid down their arms, fondly believing that they had achieved political freedom and independence in all but name.

No sooner was the island pacified than Spain, perfidious as she has ever been, gradually curtailed the privileges wrung from her in battle, and eventually restored the absolutism of the governor-general.

The President of the United States should have recognized the independence of Cuba in 1870, and thus have terminated a struggle noted for atrocities more fiendish and devilish than have blackened the pages of history since the days of Caligula. An eloquent writer says:

President Grant lost this noblest opportunity of his civil career by miserable anxiety about the Alabama claims.

Three years ago the Cubans referred the justness of their cause to the stern arbitrament of arms. The die was cast, not by an over-enthusiastic people, ignorant of the strength of their adversary and unacquainted with the horrors of war, but, on the contrary, these battle-scarred veterans had during the ten years' war felt in battle the shock of 200,000 Spanish soldiers.

They had witnessed all their property vanish in flames; they had witnessed their wives and children cut down and butchered by a foe as ruthless and savage as the Apaches; yet notwithstanding all this the love of liberty blazed up in their noble breasts and nerved their valiant arms to again unsheath the bloody sword in defense of that which is more valuable than human life, human liberty. There is no page in all the history of the ages that can for a moment compare with the pages now being written by these modern Cuban heroes—aye, written with their hearts' blood, and that of their loved ones.

It remained for citizens of Cuba, in the closing years of the nineteenth century, to develop such a glory of noble deeds as has cast in the shadow the glories of all the past.

What tribe or nation of men ever suffered for liberty what the Cubans have already suffered? The heroism of the Greeks at Marathon and Leuctra and Thermopylæ pale before the valor of the Cubans at Holguin, the Trocha, and Mal Tiempo. The Swiss in their wars with Austria, the Hollanders in their long struggle with Philip, the English under Cromwell, the Scotch under Wallace and Bruce, and our own Revolutionary heroes, who left their crimson stains upon the snows of Valley Forge, have been in the past the grandest exemplars of the love of liberty.

The heroism of Winkilreid, and William the Silent, and Hampden, and Wallace, and George Washington has been the theme of historians and poets; but when the historian of the future shall write the true story of the Cuban revolution, how the Cubans entered this war with their eyes open and with their memories loaded down with visions of the agony and blood of the ten years' war, how without resources, hemmed in by a cordon of Spanish fortifications, without a navy, without arms or munitions of war save such as friends could smuggle into the country, without medicines, without money, except the voluntary contributions of exiles no richer than themselves, and met in a death grapple the armies of Imperial Spain, asking no quarter of their sanguinary foe, then at least men will admit that nowhere or at any epoch in all the tide of time have such deeds of glory and of valor ever been known upon the earth.

What is the position of the great American Republic whose name should be synonymous with liberty toward these heroes struggling for political freedom? What action should we take?

Remembering Rochambeau and Lafayette and Kosciusko, who more than a century ago so grandly blazed out the path of duty and of glory, have we as a nation done for struggling Cuba what these noble spirits did for America? What other course could the great Republic take without stultifying the national honor?

Yet the Administration has pursued a different policy. Instead of saying to brutal, pagan Spain, "This butchery of innocents shall cease; this selling of maidens to satiate Spanish lust is the act of devils, and the nation which sanctions this mode of warfare shall be sent to hell, where its crimes will be in harmony with its surroundings;" instead of taking a noble, manly stand for truth and virtue and justice, we have fawned at the feet of this mediæval devil, wet with the blood of slaughtered innocents. We have kept our fast cruisers and men-of-war on guard from Marblehead to Key West to seize any chance cargo of arms purchased by the pittances contributed by Cuban exiles. Secretary Gage boasts of the excellent work done by the White Navy in suppressing filibustering expeditions. Think of Rochambeau and the French fleet blockading the coasts of America in 1782! What a contrast between gallant France and degenerate America! Our infamy is complete.

Rothschild and his American agents, Belmont, Morgan & Co., hold $200,000,000 in Spanish bonds. Should Cuba achieve her independence, the market value of these bonds would depreciate; hence, Rothschild favors Spain and will until he perceives that Cuban independence is inevitable. Then, provided he can persuade Cuba to issue bonds for his benefit, he will permit the United States Government to interfere. Rothschild controls Morgan, Morgan controls HANNA, and HANNA controls McKinley, the Supreme Court, the Senate, and the House of Representatives. HANNA is America and America is HANNA.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL BUREAU OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Contribution to the maintenance of the International Bureau of Weights and Measures for the year ending June 30, 1899, in conformity with the terms of the convention of May 24, 1875, the same, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be paid, under the direction of the Secretary of State, to said Bureau, on its certificate of apportionment, $2,270.

Mr. BRUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, seeing that we have heard a great deal of what constitutes party loyalty during the past ten days, I desire to submit for the consideration of this House, and especially for the edification of my colleagues from Michigan, an authoritative opinion as to what the Republican governor of the great State of Michigan thinks constitutes party loyalty. I want to read as a part of my remarks an article appearing in the Washington Post of January 19, headed:

PINGREE READY TO BOLT—SAYS THE REPUBLICAN PARTY HAS BEEN LED ASTRAY—POINTED THRUST AT MARK HANNA—GOVERNOR OF MICHIGAN COMPLAINS THAT THE MONOPOLISTS, FRANCHISE GRABBERS, AND POLITICAL APOSTLES OF BOODLE HAVE TAKEN CONTROL OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY, AND SAYS MANY LIFELONG REPUBLICANS ARE GETTING SICK OF HAVING TO DEFEND TRUSTS.

BUFFALO, N. Y., January 18, 1899.

Governor Hazen S. Pingree, of Michigan, was the guest of honor at the January dinner of the Independent Club at the Ellicott Square clubhouse this evening, and delivered an address on "What constitutes party loyalty," in the course of which he said:

"In his address upon the field of Gettysburg, Abraham Lincoln said: 'That we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that the nation under God have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth.' If the party has been led away from these principles, it is the duty of those whose words may influence to lead it back to the magna charta of self-government.

"It is the misfortune of great parties, when long in power, that to them flock all those who desire to enrich themselves by legislation which this party can give them.

"To the Republican party there have flocked during the past few years many birds of ill omen, undesirable tenants, who are making the house so foul that they are driving out the rightful owners. These undesirable acquisitions the masses of the party would only be too glad to get rid of for the party's good. I make in my mind no difference between the integrity of the common people in one party or another. It is party leadership which is most always at fault when things go wrong.

"If they are of other types which I might mention, we have government for bondholders and plunder.

"In late years the influence of wealth in dictating legislative measures and Government policies is becoming more and more apparent. Mr. Cleveland disrupted his party in doing the biddings of a money syndicate which made enormous profits out of a scandalous bond deal. To-day all the trusts, all the monopolies have taken refuge under the wing of the Republican party"—

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

This, remember, is from the Republican governor—

"because they fear the Democratic party, which has kicked them out.

"In my own State railroads have been a faithful ally to the Republican party. They put up the money which helps elect their kind of people to the legislature, and in return expect favorable measures and exemption from paying their share of taxes.

"The monopolist, the franchise grabber, the lobbyist, the political apostles of boodle, are all extreme partisans. When they elect themselves to office by main force of money they ascribe it to divine intervention of Providence in behalf of the nation and its honor.

"Many of us lifelong Republicans who do not train with the money power are heartily sick of being obliged to condone and defend the trusts. A campaign of education has lately been started, which proposes to teach the people that trusts are benevolent institutions, and that under Providence will make us all happy. Patent insides and plate matter are now shipped to country newspapers, for printing which they are paid, showing how trusts cheapen things.

"The power of money in this country retains newspapers; it elects men to the Senate and to the House; it manipulates national and State conventions."

That is the power, Mr. Chairman, that is behind all through.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Who did you say that was?

Mr. BRUCKER. The Republican governor of the State of Michigan.

Mr. BISHOP. I should like to ask the gentleman who has just taken his seat a question.

Mr. BRUCKER. I did not hear what the gentleman said.

Mr. BISHOP. I would like to ask the gentleman if he stands sponsor for the Republicanism of the governor of Michigan?

Mr. BRUCKER. How is that?

Mr. BISHOP. I would like to ask the gentleman if he stands sponsor for the Republicanism of the governor of Michigan?

Mr. BRUCKER. The Republican party of Michigan is responsible, and they stand sponsor for their governor. I will ask the gentleman if he does not indorse the sentiments just read and uttered by his governor? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BISHOP. I do not——

Mr. BRUCKER. Do you repudiate them?

Mr. BISHOP (continuing). Nor does any Republican in Michigan.

Mr. BRUCKER. Do you repudiate them?

Mr. BISHOP. I repudiate his sentiments. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRUCKER. You go to your constituents and make the statement and say to them that you repudiate your own governor!

Mr. TODD. I want to ask the gentleman from Michigan a question.

Mr. BISHOP. Do you stand sponsor for every man in the Democratic party that goes to the newspapers in order to exploit himself?

Mr. BRUCKER. I would stand sponsor for my governor, elected on my ticket, or I would denounce him——

Mr. BISHOP. I denounce the sentiments of the article.

Mr. BRUCKER (continuing). I would accept one horn of the dilemma or the other.

Mr. BISHOP. Were you for Grover Cleveland for President, and do you stand with him?

Mr. BRUCKER. I was for Grover Cleveland in 1892, and I was for Grover Cleveland until I saw that Grover Cleveland [laughter] was dictated to by the same policy and the same men that are dictating the policies of the Republican party to-day. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BISHOP. And so I say that every Republican of Michigan is with its Republican governor until he ceases to be a Republican.

Mr. BRUCKER. I did not catch the gentleman's reply.

Mr. BISHOP. I say that the Republicans in the State of Michigan are for their governor until he ceases to be a Republican.

Mr. BRUCKER. I say to the gentleman that the Republicans of Michigan dare not repudiate Hazen S. Pingree at their next State convention. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. TODD. I wish to ask my colleague from Michigan a question. Why was it that the governor, Hazen S. Pingree, ran 26,541 votes ahead of President McKinley on the same ticket? Was it not because of the fact that the people upheld him in his opposition to trusts, the aggressions of the railroad power, and his desire to provide equitable and just taxation, the same for corporations as for individuals? It was at first stated by some lukewarm Republicans that it was possible that McKinley might pull him through; but the fact is, he pulled McKinley through and ran 26,541 votes ahead of him, notwithstanding the fact that the railroads in Michigan posted notices forbidding their employees to vote for him.

Mr. HITT. Can not we return to the consideration of the consular and diplomatic bill? [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Consul-general at Havana, $6,000.

Mr. WILSON. I move to strike out the last word. I make that motion preliminary to the introduction of an amendment which I shall offer when I withdraw the amendment I have just made. I must pursue this course in accordance with the ruling of the Chair which has made inadmissible an amendment under the point of order. The amendment which I shall presently offer is this: Add at the end of that line the following——

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Which line?

Mr. WILSON. Line 12—"Consul-general at Havana, $6,000." My amendment is, add the following:

During the continuance of the public war which now exists between the Government of Spain and the government proclaimed and for some time maintained by force of arms by the people of Cuba, and at the termination thereof such salary to be reduced to $5,500.

I shall contend that this amendment is not amenable to a point of order upon any ground in Rule XXI, upon which all these points of order have been raised. There are two obstacles presented in Rule XXI. They are "expenditures not previously authorized by law" and "change of existing law." The gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, has admitted upon the floor that an amendment proposing a reduction in the appropriation is not objectionable to the first provision of the rule, but he has founded all of his objections upon the ground that it changes existing law.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the second part of this amendment which I shall offer simply provides a period when this reduction, which certainly is an admissible amendment, shall take effect. There is no doubt that this House can provide a time when reduction shall take effect as well as it can declare that it shall take effect at once. In making that declaration it can fix the time as dependent on the termination of certain fixed condition of affairs. It can not be held that it is "changing existing law" to declare a certain state of affairs to exist. For instance, if it should appear that yellow fever was prevalent in the Island of Cuba, it certainly would be competent for this House, without violating Rule XXI, to make reference to that in an appropriation bill and to fix the appropriation in reference to that condition. What reasonable legal objection can there be under this rule to recognizing the condition of war any more than could be raised against recognizing the condition of yellow fever or other epidemic?

Mr. Chairman, no objection can be made to the reasonableness of the provision, because certainly a consul who must be made an enforced witness of the atrocities and suffering, the very reading of which in our newspapers is sufficient to make the blood boil and the heart sick at the sufferings borne by the victims, should receive a larger compensation than when these conditions cease by the termination of the war. I say it will be a blot on the fair name of this House if it does not permit a vote upon the question as to the existence of a war there. Such application of Rule XXI would be comparable only to that law which was written in blood, or to that other law which was hung so high that the people could not read it.

Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 12, add the following:

"During the continuance of the public war which now exists between the Government of Spain and the government proclaimed and for some time maintained by force of arms by the people of Cuba, and at the termination thereof such salary be reduced to $5,500."

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is simply an attempt to get in indirectly what has been already attempted to get in directly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT].

The Clerk read as follows:

Consuls-general at London, Paris, and Rio Janeiro, at $5,000 each, $15,000.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 14, page 12, after the word "dollars," the following:

"Provided, That all fees received by consuls-general at London and Paris shall be turned into the Treasury of the United States."

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I am informed that the fees at London and Paris amount to a very considerable sum.

Mr. HITT. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him, I will reserve the point of order. I do not wish to shut him off, but I think, however, a word of explanation will satisfy him.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I have been informed that the fees, at Paris for instance, amount to the sum of $50,000, and it seems to me that in the present condition of the Treasury, in view of the fact that the expenses of the Government are very much in excess of the receipts, that here is an opportunity to save money, and that we ought to avail ourselves of it.

Mr. HITT. The gentleman is nearly correct, but too low in his figures. At London the official fees amount to $59,000; at Paris to $50,462; but it should be understood that every cent of those fees by law goes into the Treasury.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I was not so informed.

Mr. HITT. Then the gentleman has been misinformed. There are some unofficial fees for notarial services and legal services rendered by the consul to any person who calls upon him to draw an affidavit or take acknowledgment of a deed and similar acts. Those fees he keeps; but there is a schedule of the fees he may charge, which has been fixed by the Department, and they are such as prevail by law here in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I have been informed that these fees went to the consuls themselves.

Mr. HITT. These offices used to be enormously lucrative because of the unofficial fees not fixed by any rule or schedule; but the official fees never went anywhere but to the Treasury. Now unofficial fees have been greatly reduced.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. How much do the unofficial fees amount to now?

Mr. HITT. Five thousand six hundred and eighty-six dollars at Paris, making the whole income of the office $10,686.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. In view of this explanation by the chairman of the committee, I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. My object in making this motion is for the purpose of getting some information. I am in receipt of a letter complaining that one of our consuls at Paris had received in his official capacity, at the death of an American citizen, a large sum of money from the police of Paris, which he receipted for, but which he refused to turn over to the rightful heirs of the deceased. The question I wish to ask is whether or not this state of affairs can be repeated under existing laws and this default go on? I am informed that the courts have already held that the bond given by this consul does not cover such a case and that there is no way of recovering either against the bondsmen, the officer, or the United States Government. I want to ask, if that is the case, if we can correct it in this bill?

Mr. HITT. The gentleman refers to a vice-consul who received the money of a deceased American and ran away with it, and I believe with the money of other people as well. The condition of our law, as reported by the Assistant Secretary of State, and, I believe, on consultation with the Attorney-General, is such at present that there is no remedy upon the bond. The bond is only for $2,000, and I believe the sum embezzled was more than that. The sureties are aliens, I believe, and outside of our jurisdiction.

There seems to be no recourse against the consul himself, whose place was taken by this vice or deputy consul; and I think the gentleman's remark is very pertinent as to the need of revision of our present law in order that there may be better protection for Americans abroad who go to a consulate to deposit money, in case of the death of a citizen of the United States. But it would not be in order to offer such amendment to our laws on this bill.

A MEMBER. Tell us who was the man.

Mr. HITT. It was a Mr. Shropshire, the vice-consul at Paris, about three years ago, I believe. Mr. Morss was the consul at that time, and was absent, I think, on account of sickness.

Mr. SHATTUC. Where does he reside?

Mr. HITT. Shropshire resides in Georgia.

Mr. RIDGELY. He is now at Atlanta, Ga.; but we have no law that will reach him or his bondsmen, or that will give any recourse against the United States.

Mr. HITT. This circumstance took place some two years ago, I believe.

Mr. RIDGELY. I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether his committee will bring in and recommend any legislation that will cover cases of this kind?

Mr. HITT. The subject belongs more properly, I think, to another committee. We have been discussing the question with the chairman of the Judiciary Committee to ascertain what committee would have jurisdiction of such an amendment of the law. If action depends upon the committee of which I am a member, I assure the gentleman that no effort of mine will be spared to secure the correction which the Secretary of State says is needed in the existing law.

Mr. RIDGELY. I am glad to know that; and I call the attention of gentlemen of the House to the fact that this matter is certainly of sufficient importance to warrant legislation when the proper time and opportunity shall come.

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Paying for the keeping and feeding of prisoners in China, Korea, Japan, Siam, and Turkey, $9,000: Provided, That no more than 50 cents per day for the keeping and feeding of each prisoner while actually confined shall be allowed or paid for any such keeping and feeding. This is not to be understood as covering cost of medical attendance and medicines when required by such prisoners: And provided further, That no allowance shall be made for the keeping and feeding of any prisoner who is able to pay or does pay the above sum of 50 cents per day; and the consular officer shall certify to the fact of inability in every case.

Mr. SULZER. I move to amend by striking out the last word. I do this for the purpose of submitting a few words regarding the situation in Cuba and to show the country the position on this question of the party of great moral ideas before and after the election, with a commentary by the distinguished gentleman who presides over the destinies of this House and who apparently controls all legislation of the representatives of the people of the United States.

The Republican party in national convention assembled in 1896 said, regarding Cuba:

From the hour of achieving their own independence, the people of the United States have regarded with sympathy the struggles of other American people to free themselves from European domination. We watch with deep and abiding interest the heroic battle of the Cuban patriots against cruelty and oppression; and our best hopes go out for the full success of their determined contest for liberty. The Government of Spain, having lost control of Cuba, and being unable to protect the property or lives of resident American citizens, or to comply with its treaty obligations, we believe that the Government of the United States should actively use its influence and good offices to restore peace and give independence to the island.

That is the Republican national platform. On that platform Mr. McKinley stood before the people of this country. In his letter of acceptance he said that he believed in every word contained in that platform, and, if elected, he would do his best to carry out the promises and pledges therein contained. Let us see how he has done it. Let us see if he has kept the promise. I read from the President's message, submitted to the Fifty-fifth Congress on the first Monday in December, 1897, regarding the Cuban situation. After giving a brief history of the various insurrections, the various outrages, the various brutalities of the Spaniards in Cuba, he sums it all up by saying:

For these reasons I regard the recognition of the belligerency of the Cuban insurgents as now unwise and therefore inadmissible.

What a complete change of front! What a betrayal of a sacred trust! What a difference between now and then!

That is what has made cowards of you all; that is the reason you have changed your tune; that is the reason you sing a different song now. And a little further on he says:

It is honestly due to Spain and to our friendly relations with Spain that she should be given a reasonable chance to realize her expectations and to prove the asserted efficacy of the new order of things to which she stands irrevocably committed.

"The new order of things to which Spain stands irrevocably committed" is the subjugation of Cuba by the ruthless extermination of the last Cuban patriot. That is the Republican party "before" election and the Republican party "after" election; and the comments I desire to read upon that record of infidelity, upon that record of betrayal of the people's confidence, are the comments of the Speaker of this House, delivered at Alfred, Me., not very long ago. In a speech on that occasion Mr. REED said:

Boasters are worth nothing. Deeds are facts, and are forever and ever. Talk dies on the empty air. Better a pound of performance than a shipload of language.

The Republican party gave the people of this country "a shipload of language" during the last national campaign; and now when it can carry out its promises it refuses to give the people "a pound of performance." We appeal from the outrageous parliamentary tactics perpetrated by the Republicans on the minority members of this House to the American people. We appeal from Philip drunk to Philip sober. We point to the record and ask for judgment. [Applause on Democratic side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, this concludes the reading and consideration of the bill by paragraphs for amendment and debate under the five-minute rule. I now ask the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] if we can not agree as to the reasonable limits of general debate upon the bill. There has been a great deal of incidental discussion, which was general debate, not relating at all to the bill, in connection with the various paragraphs, and I have not attempted to curtail this, but, on the contrary, believe that I have shown a liberal spirit, allowing it to run on without question.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Chairman, it was agreed on yesterday between the gentleman from Illinois and myself, and acquiesced in generally, that the usual debate should be postponed until after the consideration of the bill by paragraphs. It was the desire of some gentlemen on this side who were then absent to be heard upon this bill, and the consideration of the bill was somewhat unexpected, as it was thought it would not be taken up until a later period. It was understood, however, that there should be a reasonable time for general debate after the five-minute consideration had been disposed of. I did not anticipate that there would be so much debate upon the reading of the bill by paragraphs and regret very much that so much time has been consumed in that manner. But I could hardly state at this time just how much additional time would be desired. There are a number of gentlemen on this side who desire to be heard—some of them members of the committee and some not. Some of the members of the committee are also embarrassed by having given promises for a portion of their time to other gentlemen who are not on the committee.

Mr. HITT. Could you get through to-day?

Mr. DINSMORE. I hardly think so. I think that would hardly be sufficient time.

Mr. HITT. Will the gentleman name a reasonable hour to-morrow when the matter can be considered?

Mr. DINSMORE. I would be glad to hear from my colleagues on the minority of the committee before expressing an opinion on that point.

Mr. HITT. How would 1 o'clock to-morrow answer the gentleman?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Oh, you might just as well take the vote now. That would not give sufficient time.

Mr. SULZER. Why not take all day to-morrow?

Mr. DINSMORE. We were assured on yesterday, when the agreement was made with reference to the proceedings in regard to this bill, that no member should lose his rights, and that was understood by the members of the committee to mean that the usual custom of giving an hour to each member would be reserved.

Mr. QUIGG. But the gentleman from Arkansas knows that that agreement has been steadily violated by his side of the Chamber.

Mr. DINSMORE. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. I do not think that the agreement was violated, because I do not believe that there has been any desire to delay operations. When motions were made, they were made as a rule in good faith. Besides that, when this agreement was made, nothing whatever was said about the restrictions of debate under the five-minute rule and debate on the offering of amendments. I admit that amendments in some cases were pro forma and in many cases did not go to the merits of the particular section under consideration. That was general debate to a certain extent. I admit that.

Mr. HITT. But the gentleman will admit that we have shown an exceedingly liberal spirit during the consideration of the bill. We have not sought to cut off amendment or discussion on amendments, even those amendments which were not pertinent to the bill. I ask him, therefore, to agree to some reasonable time when this debate shall close. Let us agree, for instance, on 2 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. DINSMORE. I would suggest, if the gentleman will permit me, 4 o'clock to-morrow would be more acceptable to this side of the House, provided we begin the consideration of the bill immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow.

Mr. SWANSON. That is only two and a half hours on each side.

Mr. HITT. At 4 o'clock to-morrow, then, it is agreed, unless the debate is sooner closed, that we take a vote upon the bill?

Mr. QUIGG. Let us make it 3 o'clock. We have got to have a yea-and-nay vote, and perhaps more than one.

Mr. DINSMORE. I call attention of the gentleman from New York to the fact that that would not give sufficient time.

Mr. QUIGG. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is undoubtedly going to propose some sort of motion of which he has already given indication from time to time, which indicates that more or less time will be consumed in roll calls; and if at 4 o'clock we shall not get through with the discussion, we will be required to consider this matter until 6, 7, or possibly later.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The only motion I know of, Mr. Chairman, which will come up and involve a roll call will be a motion to recommit with instructions.

Mr. HITT. Is that the only vote that will be presented for a yea-and-nay vote?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That is all, as far as I am aware.

Mr. HITT. Then I will accept the time proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas, and say that the general debate shall close at 4 o'clock, and the vote be then taken.

Mr. DINSMORE. And in the meantime that nothing will be in order but the debate on this bill, which shall begin to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Immediately after the reading of the Journal?

Mr. HITT. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time between now and 4 o'clock to-morrow shall be used in general debate on this bill, the debate to be then closed, and the time to be equally divided between the two sides.

Mr. QUIGG. And that then the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That agreement does not cut off any right to move a reconsideration or recommitment of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. None whatever.

Mr. SWANSON. One moment, Mr. Chairman. What is the proposition?

The CHAIRMAN. That general debate on the bill shall be closed at 4 o'clock to-morrow, at which time the committee shall rise and report the bill.

Mr. SWANSON. How is the time divided?

The CHAIRMAN. Equally between the two sides.

Mr. HITT. And it is understood, Mr. Chairman, that at 4 o'clock to-morrow there will be but one yea-and-nay vote, that on a motion to recommit.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Chairman, I hope it will be understood that I may control the time on this side.

Mr. HITT. I suggest that the gentleman from Arkansas control the time on behalf of the minority, and I will control it on behalf of the majority.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] will control the time upon this side of the House, and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] will control it upon that side of the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HITT. I suggest to the gentleman from Arkansas one contingency which we perhaps ought to provide for. If the time be not occupied, we may take a vote before 4 o'clock.

Mr. DINSMORE. Oh, certainly; that is understood.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, it is understood to be a part of the agreement that if the debate shall be exhausted before the hour of 4 o'clock to-morrow arrives, then we can proceed to take a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois suggests that if the debate is exhausted before the time agreed upon, the committee will report the bill to the House at that time. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, we have concluded the consideration of the appropriation bill before us as a business measure. There has been so much said in anticipation of the topic which would be the theme of general debate, and which has very little relation to the bill, namely, our relations with Spain and the conflict with Cuba, that I will speak to the committee for a few moments on the subject.

Ever since the struggle broke out in Cuba three years ago, all the members of this House, in common with the whole country, have watched with the keenest interest and the warmest sympathy the efforts of the people of Cuba to rid themselves of the burdens weighing upon them and the oppressions under which they have suffered. After that war had gone on for a year, this House, impatient of the apathy of the Executive of the United States, expressed in resolutions its opinion of the need of some more emphatic and clear action by the Executive of the United States in reference to that struggle. As has often been done in the history of Congress, a resolution was adopted expressing the opinion of the House that steps should be taken, suggesting, first, the recognition of the belligerency of the insurgents, and second, that the good offices of our Government with that of Spain should be used to secure the recognition of the independence of Cuba.

We made no effort to encroach upon the proper Executive function by forcing action by joint resolution, which is positive law. We recognized the fact that our foreign affairs are in the charge of the executive department, but gave this solemn and formal expression of the inclination and sentiment of the country. It was unheeded. The war went on with increasing and enormous losses in property and destruction in every inhuman form which war entails. The present Executive came into power after the war had been carried on for over two years. He has had charge of our affairs for months. We knew before he was installed that his inclinations and sentiments were in accord with those that have so often found expression on this floor, favorable to the spread of freedom, favorable to the cause of any people struggling to better their condition, and to their encouragement, as far as we could consistently with our treaty obligations and the law of nations.

The President immediately demanded the release or speedy trial of the large number of Americans who were under arrest or in prison in Cuba, and speedily succeeded, by the energy of that demand, in obtaining the release of many of them. The man who was the master spirit of the harsh policy of Spain, Canovas, the leader of the conservatives, fell by the hand of an assassin. His successors were the same in policy, but very soon afterwards they were overthrown and a liberal ministry, with Sagasta at the head, came into power in Spain. The President continued to press for the speedy trial or release of Americans who were imprisoned in Cuba, and more than he asked was accorded. They were not tried, but all were liberated. I am advised that there is not now one American who is restrained of his liberty in Cuba.

The President went further. Protests had been made before by his predecessor against the methods of war in Cuba, but those protests had been utterly disregarded. The President who now occupies the Executive Mansion protested with such emphasis, such energy, against the barbarity and inhumanity of the war of extermination and the policy of concentration that the new ministry in Spain removed the ferocious Weyler, who had been put in charge of this dreadful form of warfare, disgraced him, reversed the whole system, abandoned the policy of concentration, and sent a General Blanco, whose reputation had been that of one who carried on war according to the rules that prevail in civilized countries.

The President went further, very far, in the intercourse of independent nations with each other; but we were deeply interested and had a right to make strong representations, and the Liberal Government of Spain, headed by Sagasta, was appealed to to put a stop to this destructive war and to make proposals of settlement which would be just to the Cubans.

The President said to the Sagasta ministry in power that we would only wait a reasonable time for them to do this. These representations would not, unless surrounded by circumstances that were extraordinary, have been received by an independent Government; but owing to the great and manifest interest we have in the struggle in Cuba they were heeded, accorded by the Government of Spain, which, acting upon the suggestion, issued a scheme of self-government for the people of Cuba, based manifestly upon the system of government that prevails and has prevailed for now thirty years in Canada. Any gentleman who will take the pains to compare the terms of the Spanish decree of November 25, granting self-government—or autonomy, as they seem fond of a word of Latin origin—to Cuba and the British North America act of 1867 will plainly see that the former is borrowed from and almost copies the latter. Whether it will be successful, whether it is practical, whether it was sincere, many men doubted and still doubt.

All around the horizon, by the press and by the public voice, the doubt was expressed as to whether it was sincere, and if sincere, whether it was practicable or would be accepted. It has only been two weeks since the attempt to set it up in practice began. It has not so far been successful, but perhaps it would be a harsh judgment to say so soon that it is all a failure. It might seem that the wish was father to the thought. As to the sincerity of the Spanish Government, that has been made pretty clear by those who understand the Spanish far better than we do. They show you what the fact is. It has received the most implacable hatred of the Conservatives in Spain, with Weyler at their head, and in every way they have tried to overthrow the administration that is in existence there to-day for this very cause. They believe the Sagasta ministry is sincere, and hate it for that reason.

It is also shown in the protests that have come from the Spanish cities enjoying special privileges over the Cubans in trade, which indicates that they do not regard it as insincere. They are trying by that and every other means to destroy the present administration of the Spanish Government, the Sagasta liberal administration, which is endeavoring to put that autonomy in operation in Cuba. There is evidence from its enemies, who know well what is going on around them, that they are not dealing with what they believe to be insincere.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. HITT. There will be plenty of time for debate.

Mr. KELLEY. Very well, if the gentleman does not desire to permit an interruption.

Mr. HITT. I would rather not. I will not take much of the time of the House, and I do not care to consume it in long colloquies.

The inhabitants of Cuba of Spanish birth or immediate Spanish connection, who are the commercial class, and who are comparatively small in the whole population, but who own the property and transact the business and have a disproportionately great power in society, in business, and in everything in Cuba, called the Conservatives, and constituting the force known as the volunteers, have bitterly resented the plan of the Spanish administration of according self-government to the Cubans. They have resented it with fury, with outburst, with riot and turbulence; they have threatened the very existence of the central government at Habana in the last few days. You can tell what they might do by knowing what they have done. These are the same class of men who on the 2d of June, 1869—the same party, the Conservatives, as they are called, the volunteers—attempted mob violence, surrounding by night the Governor-General's residence, threatening him and forcing his resignation. Yes, they forced him from the island.

I have spoken thus very briefly of the steps that have been taken in the few months that the present Executive has been in power, all one way, showing the spirit that animated him, how it falls in with all his public utterances in the past, and should make us believe that he will follow the same light in future. What has been done in these few months can be appreciated by comparing it with what was done or not done by our Government, under another President, in the years that preceded it. We know where he stands and which way he looks. The President has said to the House that he thought it unwise, unadvisable at this time, to recognize the belligerency of the Cuban insurgents. Inasmuch as the House was baffled in its advice and suggestions to the President to recognize the insurgents long ago, inasmuch as the friends of Cuba and of liberty carry the memory of that in a kind of resentment, we have many of us associated with the mere word belligerency a sort of charm, and we can not part with it without regret.

The President has cited as his reasons for not desiring at this time to recognize the belligerent rights of Cuba those grounds in international law and those facts which are found in all the textbooks and which were briefly stated by General Grant in his well-known message thirty years ago. There is one line in General Grant's message which is found also in Wheaton and many other books, when he says:

> To recognize belligerency is always, unless justified by necessity, an unfriendly act to the parent state.

When we advised that act by resolutions of this House two years ago, the parent state was treating the Government of the United States with a haughty disregard that did not tend to undue complacency in the advice which we should give to the Spanish Government or nicety as to how we should deal with them; but that administration has been utterly overthrown, and the Liberal Government now in power has shown consideration for all that came in the way of suggestion or demand from the United States. That puts us in such a position that if we wantonly offer an unfriendly act the public opinion of the world might say that we were simply not acting in disinterested justice, but really picking a quarrel, animated by the invidious greed for territory which tyrannical governments so often act upon to get hold of a neighbor's possessions—that we had all along been aiming to acquire Cuba.

This, of course, is a prevalent opinion in the minds of Europeans, judging our people by themselves. We know it is not true; we know our motive is pure and disinterested; and the aim of our Government should be to prove to them that whatever steps we take is from the highest motives of disinterested justice; that there is no vulgar greed among us to rob our neighbors or seize their property. [Applause.]

The President, however, points with emphasis to a reason why he is averse to recognizing the belligerency of the Cubans, which indicates more strongly than anything drawn from international law his own leaning, spirit, and sentiment. He says—I do not quote his words—that while it would be a declaration of neutrality between the contending powers, it would in fact be unequal in effect and would weigh very heavily in favor of Spain and against the insurgents.

The practical result would be this: The cruisers of the two contending powers would be at once clothed with the right of search, the right to stop our ships anywhere and search them for all articles contraband of war. The long catalogue of articles contained in our treaty with Spain in 1795 are made contraband of war. At present there is no restraint whatever upon commerce in these munitions of war. We have the right to load a ship with guns, or with cannon and powder and shot, and send it anywhere in the world, and sell it if we can; but after you recognize the existence of war in Cuba, it makes all these things contraband of war. Now, herein lies the inequality. The Cubans have no cruisers, they have no ports, they have no marine.

The Spaniard has a great fleet. The 3-mile limit of Cuba now holds him; he can not touch an American ship 3 miles from the coast of Cuba. That is the limit of his jurisdiction, but upon a declaration of belligerency the 3-mile limit from the United States is the boundary of Spanish cruisers hunting for American ships to see whether they contain contraband of war. Outside of that 3-mile limit from the coast of the United States they will have a right to search our ships from top to bottom.

Now, we might as well state what is the acknowledged fact, that the supplies for the Cubans have come from the United States, both men and munitions of war. Devoted and noble spirits have gone there and died for the cause. Generous hearts here have contributed, and some of them, good men, have been almost willing to act in violation of the laws of their own country, or with the hope of escaping them, to aid the Cubans. These vessels have gone constantly to Cuba carrying supplies. As was stated recently by a gentleman conversant with the affairs there, there is scarcely a pound of powder or a gun used by the Cubans that did not come from the United States. The Spaniard can not touch an American vessel on the way there unless he catches it just as it lands, as was the case of the Competitor, and in that enormous extent of coast they escape the Spanish cruiser. But if a Spanish cruiser could lie in front of our ports, what chance would a vessel have, carrying supplies, to ever reach the place for which it was destined?

There is another side of the question, and it arises at once in your minds, why do the gentlemen in this city, agents for the Cubans, desire Cuban recognition? I could explain it myself, but I can explain it more clearly if I repeat the words that a distinguished Cuban used to me:

> We know how much we might lose in the matter of getting supplies if belligerency was recognized, but we also know that if the Spanish cruisers should stop the American vessels, the skippers are not very patient men, and it would not be very long before a shot would be fired, and when the fight has taken place and blood is running, public opinion of Spain and the United States would rush in, both countries would be plunged into war, and then our business is done, and you take care of it.

That is a sound, just argument for the Cuban, but it is not an argument that should convince an American. When we must have war, it should be declared directly. This House by the Constitution of the United States is clothed with the power and is the only power to declare war, but to do it indirectly, to arrange causes that will produce little explosions here and there and start a great conflagration is not the true policy of this nation or the course of wise and patriotic public men. I do not blame the Cubans for wanting us to do this any more than I blame the Confederates for hoping when the Mason-Slidell question came in 1862 that the United States would get into a war with Great Britain and the whole contract of the war for the Confederacy would be taken off their hands and fought out by the English.

Mr. Chairman, we have seen in the time that the President has been in charge what he has tried to do and how much he has accomplished. Can we not trust him? We know the spirit that animates the captain of the ship. Events that have recently transpired at Habana and are impending warn us how grave is his responsibility. The recent tumults in Habana, the Government tottering between an armed insurgent force in front and a tumultuous party behind and within. American property and American citizens there in great peril indicate how near we may be to a critical hour. What will be done? The President, while he does not favor the recognition of belligerency as a specific cure or as advisable, has intimated where the line of duty will take him, acting not by halves, but facing the whole question.

I will read the words in which he guardedly suggests what could not with propriety be broadly stated as to future events in the intercourse of nations:

> If it shall hereafter appear to be a duty imposed by our obligations to ourselves, civilization, and humanity to intervene with force, it shall be without fault on our part, and only because the necessity for such action will be so clear as to command the support and approval of the civilized world.

When you know the critical events that are passing—when you think of the vast responsibility that rests upon the Executive and which does not rest upon us while we are making speeches to get applause—when we remember the immediate and grave consequences to ensue, let us remember we can feel the strong assurance that we have a faithful, able captain at the helm; that the ship may be near the rapids, but his hand is firm and his eye is sure. We should all of us be ready to do our duty like patriotic Americans, standing firmly behind the President when he takes a step necessary for the vindication of the honor and protection of the interests of our country, a step made necessary by duty in view of the troubles, the confusions, the destructions, and the hopeless condition of things in the island so adjacent to our shores. [Applause.]

General Lee, an officer of experience and ability, is at Habana in constant communication with the President. Our great ships are not far away. They ought not to be far off at such a time. I believe, whatever event may arise, though we in this House may in passing sometimes have a sharp word about partisan matters, we shall, as we did when the President took ground in the Venezuelan question, all unite voices in the one acclaim of Americans to stand by the President, to stand by the Government, to present a united front for whatever events or complications may come.

It is not proper to anticipate or to pretend to have knowledge of particular events, of intentions in the future; but I am sure that all Americans who love their country can be relied upon to stand by their President when he may take the next step before him in pursuance of the same line which he has followed in the last eight months. [Loud applause.]

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Chairman, as compared with most of our citizens, I have entertained conservative views upon the question of American interference in the war now going on between Spain and the Island of Cuba. I yield to no man in admiration of any people willing to fight and, if need be, die for freedom, or in sympathy with their cause, and from the beginning my heart has ever beaten with warm sympathy for the patriots who are engaged in the holy cause of liberty in that island.

But, sir, I have never forgotten that I am an American and that the citizen's first duty is to his own country; that it is of the highest importance that the welfare and peace of the American citizen shall be protected; and I would reprobate any ill-advised, extreme, impulsive action, ill-timed at its taking, that would involve our country in war with any other country.

I have felt, sir, that we owed something to a nation with whom we are in relations of treaty; that some consideration was due to Spain, and more, far more, to the welfare of our own people. Therefore I have endeavored to repress that feeling which I think is in every American heart and prompts us to rise up and say that the strong arm of our country should be lifted in behalf of a people struggling for liberty and national life. When facing such a contest it is impossible for us to forget the time agone when our patriot fathers were engaged in a similar struggle, when they were battling for independence and sowing the seed that was to spring up and blossom into the brightest flower that ever bloomed in the garden of nations. Reflections upon that period of our own history bring to our hearts emotions of sympathy, and there is no true American—I care not what his party affiliations—who does not feel a lively sympathy for these patriots struggling for their own independence.

I have desired, Mr. Chairman, that we should proceed with caution, because any step will involve that which is to us of the greatest moment, the happiness of the American people. We can not afford to sacrifice their happiness in order to bring happiness to any other people, however unfortunate they may be. We have a treaty of friendship and commerce with the Government of Spain. Cuba is a part of her dominion, and though she has maintained a stubborn and up to this time successful resistance to this dominion, insomuch that she has a fashion of government and undoubted war exists, to take action officially declaring the Cuban Republic an independent state would, under the circumstances, be an affront that the Spanish Government could hardly fail to resent. It would necessarily result in war, however unequal the contest. Therefore I do not agree with those who would go so far. But to pass a resolution according to them belligerent rights could not be a just cause of national offense.

In the comity of nations it is a recognized privilege where a state of war exists and there is some form of government. Spain herself did not hesitate, but was prompt to exercise it when the Southern States took up arms and accepted war in their effort to resist coercion when they attempted to secede from the Union. I have, therefore, been willing at all times to join in recognizing the state of belligerency. It might be that, smarting under their failure to suppress the insurgents, the Spanish Government would resent such action and go to the extreme of hostilities against us. In that event the responsibility of war would rest with Spain. I am for peace. Americans should desire peace at all times and desire it above all things, but only where it can be maintained with honor. [Applause.]

In a simple republic it is absolutely necessary that the purposes of good government may be carried out. War inevitably intensifies administrative power in the hands of government if the war is of successful issue. If my own party were in power under that condition, I should have grave fears lest it might, under temptation, yield to abuses of power and wander away from the simple principles of its founders and its creed. Much more would I regret to see the Republican party placed in this position. I am opposed to the Republican party, heart and soul, in all its points of difference from the Democratic party; I am opposed to centralized power in the Government; I am opposed still to any infraction of the constitutional rights of the States. I still believe with Jefferson, not only in "the preservation of the General Government in its whole constitutional vigor, as the sheet anchor of our safety at home and peace abroad," but also in "the support of the State governments in all their rights as the most competent administrations for our domestic concerns and as the surest bulwarks against antirepublican tendencies."

I am opposed to paternalism of every form and deny the right of any American citizen or class of citizens to take exclusive benefits from the Government at the expense of other citizens who do not share the benefits. I am opposed to the fiscal policy of the Republican party, because it taxes the many for the benefit of the few. I am opposed to its financial policy, as practiced for the establishment of the gold standard and extension of the powers and privileges of the national banks—diametrically and irreconcilably opposed to it; and while it is pursued I shall not fail here and elsewhere to arraign it as designed and tending to lessen the price of property and enhance the value of money, promotive of poverty of the masses and of opulence of the classes already rich. I am opposed to every bounty and every discrimination and claim they are never justified by any apparent reason. I am opposed to all kinds of Federal interference in State affairs, except as authorized by the Constitution, strictly construed. Therefore I regard tenure of power by the Republican party at all times as subversive of popular rights and a national calamity. It is my firm belief that, if left in power after a successful war, it would strengthen and further establish all these evils which I regard as so inimical to public welfare.

We are confronted at present with economic problems that I desire to see settled by the calm, unhindered, patriotic reflection of the people who own and should control this Government. If unembarrassed by unusual excitement, I believe they will be determined correctly. The intervention of war might indefinitely postpone, possibly destroy, all hope of correct solution. In view of all this I have endeavored to suppress my natural desire to see our Government undertake to stop a war which is cruel, barbarous, and an offense to civilization. I hold the liberty and happiness of my own people as of the highest importance, and I have not wished to see them in any wise imperiled. But for this, for the fear alone that they might be jeopardized, I would have been ready at any time during the last two years to send our ships of war and drive the Spanish soldier from the Island of Cuba and have them protect the Cuban flag with their guns. [Applause.]

But it seems to me, sir, we should not remain longer inactive; that now we should pass the resolution already passed by the Senate, according to the Cubans the right of belligerency. [Applause.] This is not just provocation of a declaration of war. No nation can afford to go to war without just cause, much less Spain, under existing conditions. She could expect nothing but humiliation and disgrace. It is well known that her exchequer is well-nigh bankrupt; that she has neither money nor credit. She has exhausted herself in a futile effort to suppress the Cubans.

Think of it! Convoy after convoy has been sent; thousands upon thousands of armed soldiers have been poured out upon the island to make war against thirty-odd thousand insurgent soldiers, almost unarmed, unclad, and unfed. She is no nearer success than she was two years ago. Then what could she expect from a war with us? I think the time has come for action. We may no longer close our eyes to the scenes and deafen our ears to the sounds of sickening, harrowing human misery and death. [Applause.] These scenes, these sounds, are at our very shores. We have a certain responsibility, and in self-respect, in the name of civilization, for the sake of humanity, we should take some step toward ending them. It is said by some that accord of belligerency will not help their condition.

The honorable gentleman [Mr. HITT] from Illinois has argued on this line. I believe it would. I believe that in less than six months the trouble would end and leave the Cubans victorious. Volunteers from other countries would flock to their assistance. We are pointed to the fact that our vessels would be subject to the right of search. Let it be so. We are able to see that that right is not abused; that our flag and citizens are respected. When Spain recognized the Confederate States as belligerents, they subjected their vessels to the right of search, yet there was no war between the United States and Spain. Spain has at this time troubles enough without grasping for new ones. Neither was there war with the other powers that declared the Confederates belligerents.

Belligerent rights of no benefit to the Cubans, and no justification of our declaring belligerency! Ah, Mr. Chairman, what has come over the spirit of the people of this Administration and of this Congress? Why, sir, we need not go beyond this Hall. Here, in the last Congress, a resolution of exactly similar import, except that it was not a joint resolution, was introduced, reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs; gentlemen on that side and on this side of the House spoke in support of it, and there was a cheering agreement on the part of Representatives in this House upon the position which I now assume. It received the almost, if not quite, unanimous support of Republicans here.

That news went to Cuba and inspired afresh the hearts of the patriots there, and they expected that the American Government would recognize their belligerent rights. We were told by different gentlemen here in the House on the Republican side that it was necessary and justifiable and would be beneficial to Cuba's cause, and the President of the United States was appealed to to carry into effect the wish of Congress. It was stated here by distinguished gentlemen that there was no doubt that the President of the United States, in recognition of his duty, would acquiesce in the demands of Congress, under the circumstances, and recognize the belligerent rights of the Cuban patriots.

Let me read, Mr. Chairman. In response to a question, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. HITT], who was also then the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, answering an interrogatory, said:

> I will endeavor to answer the question as clearly and practically as I can. The gentleman has struck the essential question—the one that transcends all the rest. That question of recognizing Cuban belligerency is the one on which the American people have been fixing their attention most earnestly. This House has been flooded with petitions and memorials by thousands from legislatures, chambers of commerce, societies, from churches, from associations of every kind, and from individual citizens by tens of thousands. Your committee room has been choked with them. There is no other subject for years on which there has been so vast and multitudinous an expression of the people's will as this question of recognizing the belligerency of the Cubans who are struggling for freedom. They go to the very heart of the question. The people know just what is most wanted and they ask us to do it.

Mr. OGDEN. May I ask my friend when was that said, and who said it?

Mr. DINSMORE. I have just stated that it was said by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. HITT] in the last Congress.

Mr. OGDEN. That is the point I wanted to draw out.

Mr. DINSMORE. I thank my friend from Louisiana for giving more emphasis to it, but I thought I had stated that. Again, further on in the same debate, my distinguished friend [Mr. HITT], who is to-day so careful and jealous of impairing some material right of the Cubans by action recognizing their belligerency, used the following language:

> Such is the friend that the Spaniard was to us. We are under no obligations to favor Spain and oppression as against Cuba and freedom. The truth is that in such matters as these there are no friendships. Friendship is no sentiment, any more than would be aversions and hates, on which to base a national policy or a national movement. The prime consideration in a question like this is justice—fairness to all. Enlightened self-interest as to our own people and all that concerns them should guide us in the discharge of our duty. It is our duty now to say we believe that these people, struggling as did our fathers, should be recognized as men carrying on war, as belligerents. When this utterance has gone from the representatives of the people to the White House I have faith to believe that the Executive will heed the voice of this nation, expressed by such vast majorities in House and Senate and by every sign that indicates the wish of the American people.

But, sir, we did not then have the present President of the United States. There was a Democratic President in office, and when he did not see proper to conform to the suggestion of Congress upon this question he was hounded by every Republican newspaper in this land as failing to comply with the absolute demands of the people and of Congress. Where now is the clarion voice of my distinguished colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH], whose fervid, eloquent appeals stirred the souls of us all? What has become of my other colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS], who fairly fattened the RECORD with reasons, in the last Congress, why we should recognize the belligerent rights of Cuba, why it was just and right; who filled the RECORD with arguments pertinent and strong? Will he tell us now that his argument was sophistry, his position unsound? I need not enumerate others. Mr. Chairman, if it was right and just then, in the name of humanity why not now? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I will not consume the time to read from the RECORD, but we were repeatedly told the reason why it ought to be done then. Not only told, but after all this had transpired here, after Congress had taken this deliberate action, the people of the United States gathered themselves together in two great organizations known as the conventions of the two great parties struggling for political supremacy. The Republican party met at St. Louis. In that convention at St. Louis did the political party which nominated Mr. William McKinley as their candidate for President of the United States promise to the Cubans that they would exert their efforts by diplomatic intervention to induce the Spanish Government to put an end to the war? Did they promise there by mysterious diplomacy to try to secure to Cuba some form of autonomy as a province of Spain? No, no, Mr. Chairman; not they. They did not offer this hollow mockery then, when they were appealing to the American people for votes. Here is the language of their platform:

> From the hour of achieving their own independence the people of the United States have regarded with sympathy the struggles of other American peoples to free themselves from European domination. We watch with deep and abiding interest the heroic battle of the Cuban patriots against cruelty and oppression, and our best hopes go out for the full success—

Ah, there is no stinted measure here. What do they wish for them and impliedly promise to them?—

> the full success of their determined contest for liberty. The Government of Spain having lost control of Cuba—

That was the summer before last, at St. Louis—

> The Government of Spain having lost control of Cuba and being unable to protect the property or lives of American residents and citizens or to comply with treaty obligations, we believe that the Government of the United States should actively use its influence and good offices—

To what? Give them a form of autonomy as a province of the Government of Spain? Not at all, but—> to restore peace and give independence to the island.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, the Cuban patriots give the President of the United States and his party, after the promises they have made, but small thanks for their intervention in behalf of autonomy coupled with dependence. It is but an empty shell, a tinkling cymbal; and they have resented it like freemen and men, like our fathers would have resented it in 1776. Think you the glorious achievements of American arms in that Revolution would have been possible in behalf of any kind of dependency? Would the empyrean fires of freedom have burned and glowed? Would liberty bell have cracked its brazen throat? No, Mr. Chairman; freedom is the goal for which every noble people strive, and it is only in her name that they win glory and immortality. Liberty or death was our slogan, and the Cubans have adopted it for their own; and in the presence of the American people and the American Congress I applaud their manly, glorious resolution. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, Spain can not hope to conquer Cuba. It has been well known for months, yea for more than months, that she can not do so. The Republican party said to the country last year she had already failed and lost dominion of the country. But she still prosecutes this barbarous war. It is true that Weyler has been recalled and Blanco sent in his place; but Weyler's bloody track of destruction and death still stares us in the face, and long years will not suffice to obliterate it. I do not know whether it is claimed by gentlemen on that side that Mr. McKinley was instrumental in the recall of Weyler; I am sure that they will not claim that he had anything to do with the assassination of the prime minister that caused his recall. A change of administration has come about. The Liberals came into power. They saw that Cuba was fading away from them. They saw that every organized body in the United States almost had expressed its sympathy for the Cuban patriots and demanded intervention on the part of this Government.

They saw the great Republican party, in power by the election of November a year ago, had declared Spain had lost its hold upon Cuba and for Cuba's independence. Then it was, after a change of administration in Spain, that a different policy was pursued with reference to Cuba—one not asked by Cuba. It is true a few weak adherents were led away from the Cuban cause by it; and the tendency has been, if it had any effect, to weaken the cause that much. But it is my belief that while there is one Cuban patriot to lead a band of ragged heroes the Spanish flag will never again hold dominion over the island.

The question is, Mr. Chairman, whether a distinct responsibility rests upon us, a great nation, one where liberty has been planted and fostered and waxed strong, with an island just off our coast, near to our shores, where a war of brutality, reckless and wicked, murderous and destructive, has been carried on until the people have almost been decimated; a war which is an insult to civilization, which shocks every precept of humanity, every sense of decency and justice—is there a distinct responsibility upon us to use legitimate means to stop it? Is it not more than incumbent upon us to do something after so much has been promised? Shall we continue, after we have promised to give them a loaf, to give them a stone—to offer a serpent where fish has been pledged? In the name of liberty and of humanity I protest against it. I want to see the United States Government take to-day an honorable, just, and proper position, one which does not give a good cause of offense against us, but one which, in my judgment, will contribute to the cause of humanity, of liberty, and the civilization of the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

On yesterday the gentleman from Maine, the distinguished leader of this House [Mr. DINGLEY], when gentlemen on this side had sought by the opportunities presented by this bill to bring this question before the people and to demand of Congress some action, said substantially that we were condescending to the low practices of partisans. Similar sentiments also came from another distinguished gentleman for whom I have high respect and admiration in everything but politics.

How, sir, are we to speak unless we avail ourselves of an opportunity like this. The gentleman from Iowa, General HENDERSON, a member of the Committee on Rules, when answering yesterday to a criticism on the conduct of that committee, said: "The majority is behind this committee." Oh, in a sense it is, because gentlemen over on that side who have invested that committee with the power must submit to it whether they like it or not; but if a majority on that side and upon our side are in favor of any measure and the Speaker and that committee are not in favor of it, I should like to know how that majority is going to find expression in this House unless by the exercise of the few privileges that are left to us to speak on appropriation bills, even though it is not exactly pertinent to the measure under consideration? We speak for the American people, and speak against the tyrannous rule of the House that suppresses the will of the people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Some gentlemen over on the other side do not like it any better than we do. The mouthings and mutterings, the breathings of rebellion that never materalize, float across the main aisle and get to our ears. The difference between us is that we can not help ourselves, while you who do not like it any better than we do could help yourselves, but you dare not. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But now, Mr. Chairman, with reference to the Republican party's Cuban policy, I have shown what it has said in its platform. I have shown what the Republican Committee on Foreign Affairs did in the House. I have shown what this House, supported and controlled by the Republican party, declared to be the duty of the United States upon this question.

Now, will you turn your back upon the record made in the past? Will you turn an absolutely deaf ear to the sound of your own voices that have hardly ceased to reverberate in this Hall demanding a different action? I say, sir, hoping that my language may not give offense, that the Republican party should be held responsible for inconsistent, if not insincere, action in regard to this question. But it is of a piece with your position upon other matters. Upon all questions which engage public attention to-day the Republican party has been well-nigh as inconsistent as on this—save one, and one only. True to your political obligations, you are unanimous in your support of trusts, syndicates, and organized capital. You are still true in your devotion to protecting the interests of the organized manufacturers of this country.

You come before us whenever it is necessary singing pæans of praise to that system which you say has "created for us a home market" and "enables my agricultural constituents to buy necessities cheaper than they could buy them abroad." And in the same breath, that "it gives greater profit to the manufacturers." If it did not put something into the pockets of the manufacturers they would hardly be here knocking at the doors of this Congress for the protection afforded by your tariff laws. And if it does, that profit can come from none but those who buy, the consumers of their products. And you declare it is in the interest of the laborers of the country and gives them higher wages. While the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] stands here on the floor protesting against necessary appropriations that will widen the hiatus already existing between the revenue produced by his law and the necessary expenses of the Government; while he is protesting against paying a just and legitimate claim that this Government has owed for years, lest it increase and widen more the growing gap, up in his own New England there are strikes on hand among the laborers, caused by the reduction of their wages since the Dingley law has been in force. Yet by this law you were going to increase wages. I suppose you will not learn anything.

In 1890 when you passed the law which has the name of the present Republican President you went out before the people and were repudiated by them, but you came again into power and you forgot the lesson; like Pharaoh, after the visitation of the frogs, you returned to the persecution of the people, you passed another bill even more iniquitous in its provisions than the McKinley law had been.

You have been at least consistent upon this one question, but in addition to your fast and loose Cuban policy, what has been your position upon other questions? Why, it is hardly a week since you were tearing at each other's throats on the floor of the House, like bears unchained, about the civil service. Leaders of this House took a position denouncing the civil-service law. Why, if the statements of the newspapers were to be believed, they held caucuses on the subject, they came in organized and with a flourish of trumpets that made the Democrats believe that for once they were going to do something serious on that side of the House.

What was the result? You scratched each other's eyes, old and young, veterans and tyros; you held forth upon the enormities of the civil-service law and its injustice, its beauties, and its virtues, and then, after a long, protracted debate, you neglected to take the necessary step to get a separate vote upon it, and the thing was dead and ended in noise. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Did you forget it? Does anybody believe that the veteran Representative from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] would forget to take necessary parliamentary precaution, if he was vitally interested, in the ultimate attainment of his desire? Does anybody believe that the distinguished gentleman from Iowa now in the chair [Mr. HEPBURN] would neglect or overlook a parliamentary demand that was essential?

Why did you abandon it? Was it because you expected the Democrats would come to your assistance and turn down the majority on that side of the House, and help you take a position which would necessitate an embarrassing veto by the President—that President who has said there should be no backward step in this matter of civil-service reform? Was it because the silken lash of party discipline was cracked about your servile ears? Or was it that you had become satisfied with having vented your eloquence upon the country through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and the mail cars, to be distributed amongst the boys in the trenches, of that class of people that haunt our galleries here—the people who daily stand like grim, spectral spirits around the corridors and doors of this Capitol and besiege you in your private apartments with their importunity for office? Were any of these the reasons? Or did you come to the conclusion that my most affable and genial friend from North Carolina [Mr. LINNEY] would not need any lubrication for the gimlet that was to bore the hole in which the Republican party of North Carolina should be buried? [Laughter.]

Was it a "grand-stand" performance that you were making before the country? O that a great party should parade after this fashion and then ask the American people to look up to it with that confidence which a party may claim that carries in its keeping with honest faith the rights and welfare of the people!

But how about the money question? Mr. McKinley was elected as a bimetallic President. The Republican party is committed to that doctrine in its platform. Not only so—I would not appear to be unkind, as my friend from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN] would say, by reproaching the Republican party with its own unhappiness—but that same President has stood upon the floor of this House and voted for, not international bimetallism, but the free, unlimited, and independent coinage of silver at 16 to 1. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. TAWNEY. After that statement, will the gentleman make the further statement that the action to which he refers was taken when 371 grains of silver were worth 100 cents?

Mr. DINSMORE. Oh, no; my friend is entirely mistaken.

Mr. OGDEN. That was when they were coining silver—not when they closed the mints against it.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman from Minnesota is mistaken in the statement he has just made.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is what the proposition was in the law.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman is simply mistaken.

Mr. TAWNEY. And at that time the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] made the remark, "Now let any man who is in favor of the free coinage of silver at 16 to 1 vote in favor of this proposition if he dares." The gentleman from Missouri called every man a traitor to free silver who would vote in favor of that proposition in favor of which Mr. McKinley voted.

Mr. BLAND. What proposition do you mean?

Mr. TAWNEY. The proposition for free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, when 371 grains of silver were worth 100 cents.

A MEMBER. When was that?

Mr. BLAND. I understood the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] to say I voted against that bill. I introduced the bill myself. It was passed on my motion, under a suspension of the rules, and Mr. McKinley voted for it—I mean the bill that restored the standard silver dollar of 412½ grains of standard silver to free coinage. Silver was then worth about 90 cents on the dollar. If that bill had passed, it would have been worth par at that time, and it would be worth par to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. DINSMORE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I must decline to yield

further. Not only Mr. McKinley, but other gentlemen who were at that time in full sympathy with him politically voted for that bill. When the Sherman bullion-purchasing law was passed the country was congratulated by Republicans that it was one step toward the free and unlimited coinage of silver. And yet these same Republicans united in their assistance of the gold-standard Democrats to repeal it. Silver had then gone down in its bullion price.

But, sir, Mr. McKinley was elected President of the United States as a bimetallist. The party was pledged to use its efforts to procure international bimetallism. And what did we find? After coming to Congress in pursuance of that pledge and asking for authority to appoint a commission to go abroad for the purpose of accomplishing that object, and having selected distinguished and able gentlemen and sent them off on that mission, while they were abroad and when they had obtained cooperation on the part of the Government of France and at least encouragement in England, at the closing hour of the first session of this Congress, the President sends a message to the House asking for authority to appoint another commission—a commission to reform the currency on the gold-standard basis. His Secretary of the Treasury had been fulminating his views upon the question of money, favoring a firmer establishment of the gold standard, and that great body of financiers out in Indianapolis, known everywhere as single gold standard men, had made its deliverance, and the President in his message, which I will not take time to read, referred to them, acting at their suggestion, apparently.

The President now sends this message to Congress. While one of his commissions is negotiating for bimetallism in Europe, he wishes to have another here whose work would make impossible of accomplishment the purpose of the other; and when that news reached Europe, where Mr. WOLCOTT and his colleagues were at work, they were smitten with the chill that froze the life out of their undertaking, and from that moment there was no hope for them. Is the President a bimetallist? He was elected as one; he has received the instruction of the people to be one. I speak respectfully of him, but in the exercise of my right and the performance of my duty, I declare that if he is not one he should resign.

If he is a bimetallist, on the other hand, he ought to require the resignation of Secretary Gage, who does not and can not reflect his sentiments. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Do not play fast and loose with these questions. What are you? Are you bimetallic or monometallic in your views? Are you civil-service reformers or civil-service destroyers? Are you anti-Cuba or pro-Cuba? Are you fish or flesh or pure air—I will not say wind—or what in heaven's name do you claim to be now? [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. You can name it and take it. [Laughter.]

Mr. DINSMORE. I will not further reproach you with your unfaithfulness, but appeal to you to amend your ways and at least on this matter take a courageous and commendable stand. I speak for suffering humanity. It appeals to us from the stricken Island of Cuba so strongly, so piteously, as to demand immediate action at our hands. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It seems to me that we should make good our promises and pledges, and offer at least the encouragement which would be conveyed by the passage of the belligerency resolution. And it is my belief that within six months after that is done every Spanish soldier will have departed from the island and Cuban liberty be established.

That it would stop this fierce typhoon of destruction, devastation, and unhappiness, of rapine, murder, and war, of sickness and death which now prevails in the island. Peace would smile and the bright star of liberty shine for them in the firmament of free States. It will be a sad, sad spectacle at best. The fiend of desolation has swept wide his blasting hand. Homes devastated, property destroyed, families reduced to a suffering few of widows and orphans whose husbands, sons, and brothers have perished at the cruel edge of the machete! Pity the cries of the widow and her starving brood! Can any scene appeal to the heart like that of the helpless, starving child begging bread of the mother unable to give it? The mother whose arms of support have been cut down by death, who has nothing left to her but the tender hands of helpless dependence!

Mr. Chairman, let us do this thing for suffering humanity, for our own honor, and in memory of our patriot fathers. How that decimated people will lift their hands to God in thankfulness for the help of a noble nation and for the priceless boon of peace and liberty. How will their prayers ascend for us, as those of our mothers did for those whose names have been immortalized in American song and story for more than a hundred years. Shall we do it? If not, the harrowing tragedy must proceed until the last patriot Cuban falls or "the last armed foe expires." Oh, that Spain herself would arise to the glorious grandeur of acknowledging the proprieties and morals of the situation and yield them their God-given right at once, and voluntarily. Then would the world be inspired with renewed hope for the civilization of a decaying, crumbling empire. [Applause.]

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, I have listened carefully and attentively to the remarks of the honorable member of the Democratic party—Mr. DINSMORE, of the Committee on Foreign Affairs—in order to learn the exact position that that party might take on the question now being debated before this House. He appears to have divided his speech into four sections, the first of which related to the subject under discussion; then we had a section on the financial policy of the respective parties, followed by some casual remarks on the tariff bill of 1890 and the one lately passed, and finally some further remarks on civil-service reform, winding up with a most pathetic peroration in favor of the suffering people of Cuba which must appeal to us all. He also took into consideration the present Administration in regard to our relations with Spain and its treatment of the Island of Cuba, and I shall propose in the remarks I make to limit myself entirely to this part of the line of argument which the gentleman has submitted.

Two years ago, when the Democratic party was in power in this country, the war with Cuba was under full sway. American citizens were demanding of that Administration that their property in Cuba should be protected. American citizens lying in the dungeons of Habana were crying out from their prison walls to be set free under the protection of the American Government, or that they be brought to a fair and speedy trial, under the solemn obligations of the treaty of 1795, reenforced by the Cushing protocol. Our merchants, traders, and exporters were calling upon the Government of the United States to take some steps to preserve the commerce that was then being rapidly destroyed owing to the continuance of that war.

Thousands of petitions from individual citizens poured in upon the Committee on Foreign Affairs, demanding that the Government take some action. Resolutions of boards of trade and chambers of commerce poured in, until a box 4 feet long and 2 feet wide in the room of the Committee on Foreign Affairs was filled with these petitions, which represent the most sacred rights of American citizens, appealing to Congress to do something in the premises.

Under that inspiration, and feeling that we represented the sentiments of the American people, the Republican House of Representatives and the Republican Committee on Foreign Affairs reported to this House a set of resolutions, which, after being amended in the Senate, were finally passed. They represented the sentiments of the American people, as voiced at that time, in regard to the affairs of Cuba. They were passed by both Houses of Congress and sent to the Executive as an indication of the will and sentiments of the people on that question. We looked in vain then for the warm support to those resolutions which the Democratic party seems now so eager to claim.

Many of their leaders rose in their places and opposed them with the strongest arguments at their command, and when they reached the Executive, who was supposed to carry out the wishes of the American people, they were absolutely and totally ignored by the Democratic President, and, so far as any use being made of them, they were cast into the wastebasket.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I propose to contrast with this the course of the present Administration, when, thanks to the awakened sensibilities of the American people to the mistake that they had made in the past, they restored the Republican party to power and put William McKinley in the Executive chair. Within sixty days of the time that the Republican President took his seat, the doors of the dungeons of Cuba were flung open and sixty American citizens, who had pleaded in vain for relief and protection from a Democratic Administration, walked forth free to wander where they would, in response to the demand of the Executive of the United States, elected by the Republican party.

This was followed by the sending of a minister plenipotentiary to the court of Spain, instructed by our Government to make demands in a friendly spirit—first, that our prisoners be set free; second, that this inhuman and cruel war must be conducted more in accordance with the rules of civilization; third, that the harsh treatment of the reconcentrados should be done away with, and that they should be treated like human beings; and, lastly—a very bold step for the Government to take—that a more liberal form of government should be allowed to the Island of Cuba.

Mr. Chairman, this was a strong position for our Government to take, for it was almost the saying to a friendly nation, and one almost equal in power with our own, that their former colonial government must be amended or this country would have to intervene.

Spain has responded to these friendly demands of this Government in every particular. Weyler was recalled to Spain and another general sent out with orders to conduct the war in a more humane spirit. The reconcentrados have been gradually returned to their homes, and those not so returned are to be taken care of. I have already stated that not an American citizen, bearing either the birthright of our country or the official seal of one of our courts, lies in a Spanish prison in the Island of Cuba to-day. Every man that our Government ought to protect, whether at home or abroad, so far as Spain is concerned, is free to return to this country, or, if he remains in the Island of Cuba, he is protected, as he was not under Democratic Administration.

Furthermore, the Executive sent a message, and this Congress appropriated $50,000, which appropriation is not yet exhausted, so that not an American citizen suffers for want of food in the Island of Cuba to-day. And now the Executive of our country, with the goodness of heart that is characteristic of his disposition, has issued a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States—for it would not be proper for the Government so to do—to come forth with the charity for which America has always been famous and to feed the reconcentrados out of the voluntary offerings of the American people.

I contrast this, during only nine months of Republican rule, with the inaction, not to say the sympathetic treatment of Spain, which characterized the Democratic Administration. Now the Democratic party, for the purposes of buncombe and for political reasons, not animated by the American spirit which characterized this side of the Chamber, fails to exhibit the patriotism which was exhibited by our side of the House when a Democratic Executive called upon us to support him in his foreign policy toward Venezuela and Great Britain. When he called upon us for support, we knew nothing of partisanship, forgetting everything except the fact that Grover Cleveland was the President of these United States.

Mr. Chairman, I look hopefully forward to the day when our foreign policy will be national and permanent in its character and not subject to party strife; also to have a diplomatic and consular service trained in their calling to furnish our Government with reliable and accurate information from the countries to which they are accredited and not colored to suit the policy of the dominant party for the time being. In this way alone can we preserve the good opinion of our sister nations and push forward our commercial relations.

Now, Mr. Chairman, our country has made another demand on Spain—that the embargo that was laid upon the exportation of tobacco, and which affected our manufacturers of that article to a very great extent, should be relieved. Spain has acquiesced. Every demand that this Administration has made upon Spain has been granted. A more liberal form of government is being put into operation. We can not, if we wish to maintain our standing among the nations of the earth that profess to conform to the principles of international law, at this time make any further demands upon Spain until she has had a chance to try autonomy; and that is why the Executive has told us frankly that if that fails he stands ready then to say again, in a friendly spirit, and if necessary by force, that the affairs of Cuba must be put into a better shape.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when speaking on this subject in the last Congress, when the resolutions were up, I took the ground which I am now prepared to maintain, that this is an executive function. If we look into the organization of our Government, we will find it is divided into three distinct departments. There is the executive, legislative, and judicial. The functions of each are distinctly laid down by the Constitution of our country, and under the interpretations of all constitutions everything that is not reserved is left to the people.

Constitutions never grant anything. They always restrain. Under the Constitution the right to make war is especially reserved to Congress. We can readily see the reason for that, because it necessitates appropriations. And after our country was separated from Great Britain, the people were especially tenacious of holding in their hands every power that looked to the appropriation of money or the imposition of taxes. For that reason the right to declare war was reserved to Congress; but all other foreign functions were placed in the hands of the Executive. The reception of foreign ambassadors, the sending of envoys extraordinary abroad, the granting of exequaturs to consuls, all functions relating to our foreign affairs were placed in the Executive.

The State Department, which advises the Executive, is in a much better position to know the full state of affairs than Congress can be. I wish to state right here that the subcommittee to which the belligerency resolutions as passed by the Senate were referred has called upon the Department of State for the latest official information in regard to the status of the Island of Cuba to-day. You must remember that it has been two years since we have had any official information from the Department of State. Men who are intrusted with the responsibility of making or declaring war must move only upon official information.

It is impossible for us to proceed upon newspaper reports. You can at any time, without going outside of the city of Washington, look at the daily papers, and you will find men who are known to us all personally sending reports here that differ as wide as wide can be. Some declare that you can ride on the railway over the province of Pinar del Rio with as much safety as you can through the Shenandoah Valley. Another reports that you can not proceed outside the gates of Habana without an armed escort. But gentlemen in responsible positions must rely on the official reports of our consuls and those in the service of our Government abroad. It is for these reasons that we are appropriating money in this bill—that we may have accurate information with which to control our actions.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. ADAMS. I will.

Mr. SULZER. Did not the gentleman vote in favor of granting Cubans belligerent rights in the Fifty-fourth Congress?

Mr. ADAMS. I did; and if the gentleman had paid any attention to my remarks—I have given the reasons that actuated us then. American citizens were demanding the protection of their property. That is now irrevocably destroyed. We were demanding that American citizens in Cuban prisons should be liberated; they are now, every one of them, free.

American merchants were demanding that our commerce should be preserved. It is now destroyed largely, and I fear it will be a long time before it can be revived. This has all been done, and now there is nothing left but sentiment; and while I will yield to no man in sympathy for the struggling Cubans and for the men who are endeavoring to establish the form of government under which, thank God, we live—when we come to consider this question of sentiment alone, you speak from the heart; when you come to enunciate the policies of a government, it must come from judgment and with due regard to international law, in which we as a civilized nation believe.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Without any heart!

Mr. SULZER. Do you think they are nearer their independence now than they were when you voted for belligerent rights?

Mr. ADAMS. I think there is a different state of things in the Island of Cuba now, and anyone who will read such reports as we have can not mistake the fact that it is possible that this question is nearing a solution in its own way. We know that Spain can not send another man to take the place of thousands that have fallen with disease. We know that there are riots now in the city of Habana, and we can see the handwriting on the wall.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ADAMS. I will—one more question. Nobody was interrupted on the other side of the House, and I should prefer to occupy my full time, but I will yield to one question.

Mr SMITH of Kentucky. The question I desire to ask is this: I have been informed that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is chairman of the subcommittee which has under consideration the resolution recognizing the belligerency of the Cubans.

Mr. ADAMS. That is correct.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Do you not think the members of the House ought to have an opportunity to vote on one side or the other of that question?

Mr. ADAMS. I have just said that we have asked for official information. I have explained that you can not take up the daily papers published in Washington but that you can read reports upon both sides. You can read all kinds of stuff about the Island of Cuba. The responsibility of involving the country in a war can not proceed upon newspaper reports. We must have official information. We have called upon the State Department for that information, the same as we did two years ago. When we get that information, then we are in a position to act. I have in my possession a letter from the Assistant Secretary of State, in which he says that the information we have asked for is being prepared.

Now, having replied to the question, I will go back to where I was interrupted in my argument. I have shown how in eight months the Executive of our country has acted and done more than the Democratic Executive did in the whole of the two years during which the battle raged in the Island of Cuba. I have shown that every American citizen has been freed. I have shown that active steps have been taken to insure a better form of government in Cuba, as has been promised by Spain. So far as I am concerned, I am not prepared to say how much trust I put in the promises of the Sagasta Government, but I am prepared to say that Spain has granted every request that we made in a friendly spirit, and has complied with the demands made by our accredited representative at the court of Spain.

We can not as a civilized nation, professing to be bound by the acknowledged provisions of international law, afford to do that without giving Spain an honest and fair and reasonable opportunity to put that policy into force.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. ADAMS. No; I can not. I have yielded once or twice and I want to occupy my time.

Mr. SULZER. I simply wanted to correct a mistake of the gentleman.

Mr. ADAMS. The gentleman will have full time to correct all my mistakes, and if he will occupy the time between now and the time he speaks, perhaps he will find that they are not mistakes.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, we can trust the Executive who has guided us so far to guide us in the future. Surely we can trust a man who has the nerve to demand that Spain should open the prison doors, which the preceding Administration did not dare to do. We can trust that Executive to protect our country in every way and to see that no wrong is done to us. If that be the case, gentlemen on the other side can understand the sentiment that pervades this side of the House very largely—that it would not be wise to force this resolution upon the President.

We were much more courteous to the Democratic Executive than the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber propose to be to us. Those resolutions were concurrent resolutions and were only meant to indicate to the Executive what was the sentiment of the American people at that time. He could be guided by them or not. He chose to ignore them. The present resolutions proposed are joint resolutions, and would force the Executive to act one way or the other.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say in conclusion that they are endeavoring to put the Republican party in a false position, and it will not hold. We stand here to-day as champions of a liberal form of government. We stand here to-day as champions of the right of every people to establish that form of government which they wish. I speak whereof I have knowledge, for when the Republic of Brazil was established, during a Republican Administration, when the conditions had arrived, at the proper time, I had the honor, as the accredited minister of our country, to be the first one to recognize the Republic of the United States of Brazil.

You need have no fear that when the proper time comes there will be any lack of nerve and force in the Republican Administration. You need have no fear that when the proper time comes the Republican Administration will stand where the American people would have it stand. You need have no fear that when that time comes Cuba will rise up and will bless the Republican party that has guided itself so that when the time came she could assert her independence and enter into the nations of the earth. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman now answer me one question. I understood the gentleman to say that Spain had accepted and agreed to every proposition made by the Government of the United States. I ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that this Government offered its friendly services to Spain to bring about peace in Cuba and Spain rejected that offer and said it would have no intermeddling by the United States Government with its domestic affairs?

Mr. ADAMS. I will answer that question. That was in answer to President Cleveland. It has nothing to do with the policy that has worked so well with the Republican party.

Mr. SULZER. What was the policy of the President?

Mr. ADAMS. The answer to President Cleveland was because they knew he was not in sympathy with the struggle in Cuba, and they resented interference with the question from a man who did not sympathize with the struggle. But they received very differently the proposition coming from an Administration that holds out the hand of friendship.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DINSMORE. I now yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BERRY] so much time as he may desire.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Chairman, I had supposed, from the frequent declarations by both the political parties of this country of their feeling of kindness for the suffering Cubans, that there would be a time on this floor when we could, as the representatives of the people, express our voice here without this political bickering. So far as my own State is concerned—I will not say my own State, because I know my own district much better than I do the entire Commonwealth of Kentucky—the people of my district are almost unanimous for the recognition of either the belligerency or the independence of Cuba. This war is no new matter to the people of my State.

This is the seventh struggle since 1820 that the Island of Cuba has made to secure for herself that character of government which we enjoy in the United States. From 1868 until 1878—for ten long years—the same bloody character of war prevailed in that island that now prevails. And yet we stand upon this continent proclaiming that we are the arbiters in matters of this sort. We announce the Monroe doctrine that no other power shall interfere, and if, perchance, there should be found in the heart of any nation beyond the waters to-day a disposition to terminate this conflict, the United States Government would be the first power to intervene and say: "You have no right upon this continent. We will manage our own affairs."

The President himself said at the beginning of this session of Congress, on the 6th day of December last, that he believed the time was approaching when there should be some recognition of the struggling Cubans. What has occurred since? While we in this country were engaged in the festivities of the holidays, while we were enjoying all the blessings of a glorious civilization under the Stars and Stripes, General Blanco attempted from the mouth the Cauto River to drive his columns into the body of that province, but was met successfully by the Washington of that revolution, Gomez, and driven back ignominiously to the mouth of the river.

Yet the question is raised on this floor to-day whether war exists in Cuba. On the 24th of next February the war will have continued four years. Three hundred thousand men, women, and children have gone down in death, until the old lines of the graveyards on the Island of Cuba are no longer regarded and the dead carts pass about Matanzas and other cities of that island calling for the dead each morning, as if a plague had swept over the island, and those bodies are thrown into trenches without decent burial. Yet we are asked whether a state of war exists in Cuba!

Think of our thirteen little colonies, with only three and a half million people, who struggled against Great Britain, with her cruisers on the one side and the Indian tomahawk on the other. Recall their struggles during the long Revolutionary war, when but for the aid of France they would have gone down in defeat. Are we now to stand here and say to the nations of the world, "You shall not interfere with Cuba?" Seventy millions of people with wonderful unanimity are in favor of interference; yet the Congress of the United States has not the resolution to say that it thinks the time has arrived when we should do something.

Two years ago Mr. Cleveland in his message—probably penned by Mr. Olney, because it was in that soft, oleaginous style of which that distinguished gentleman was so thoroughly master—said:

> When the inability of Spain to deal successfully with the insurgents has become manifest, and it is demonstrated that her sovereignty is extinct in Cuba for all purposes of its rightful existence, and when a hope for its reestablishment has degenerated into a strife which is nothing more than the useless sacrifice of human life and the utter destruction of the very subject-matter of the conflict, a situation will be presented in which our obligations to the sovereignty of Spain will be suspended by higher obligations which we can hardly hesitate to recognize and discharge.

Those were the words of President Cleveland two years ago; and they were reaffirmed in the message of President McKinley on the 6th of December last, only sixty days ago. Yet we are asked here to-day whether there really exists a condition in which we might recognize belligerency!

Talk about the right of search. What is the condition now? Almost every cruiser that the United States can command hovers along the Southern coast to see if, by any possibility, a few arms are going upon any vessel for the benefit of the Cubans. The United States to-day, instead of aiding Cuba, is aiding Spain to hold in subjection those oppressed people.

"Autonomy!" What sort of autonomy? Why, sir, when it was announced, the first information we had from Cuba was that men were going out with $100 bills and shaking them in people's faces and saying, "Boys, come in; don't fight any more; let us quit this foolishness."

But it is said that the Spanish officer who carried a proposition for autonomy to the Cubans was murdered. Why, sir, at that time the Cuban Government had declared, "We will not listen to autonomy;" and the man who went inside their lines was probably an Arnold, and deserved the fate he received.

Down in my country we remember that in 1851 when forty-five brave Kentuckians, inspired by the same feeling which I see manifested here to-day, dared to stand up in defense of struggling Cuba, they were set upon like dogs and shot down, young Crittenden amongst them. He was told to kneel with his back to the enemy; and he said, "No; we Americans kneel to none but God; and we always die with our faces to the foe."

I do not fear war. I think a little blood-letting would be an admirably good thing about this time for the people of the United States. I agree with my friend who spoke so eloquently about the Army here the other day, that if we had a little breeze with Spain or some other power, we would, in all probability, be benefited by it.

I want this Government to do as Great Britain and Germany have done, and to be equally active under similar circumstances. I was charmed as one of a part of the English-speaking people of the world to see how these Governments have acted, especially the Government of Great Britain, when confronted with extraordinary emergencies in Asia, where they have the power to enforce their views, and where it was declared that the ports should be free to all the world. Great Britain does not fight unless it is necessary. But when it is threatened, when it is necessary, when the occasion arises, when there is a threat made on her possessions or on her commerce, she has the money and means and power behind her, as well as the spirit necessary to sustain her demands in any part of the world; and she will open the ports of Asia, which have hampered so much the commerce of the world in times gone by.

It was once said by a distinguished Secretary of the Treasury, speaking of one of our great public men in America, that "he smote the rock of the national resources, and abundant streams of revenue gushed forth; he touched the dead corpse of Public Credit, and it sprung upon its feet." And, Mr. Chairman, he has come nearer describing "the public corpse," nearer than ever before, especially in the history of our tariff legislation.

I am not astonished, Mr. Chairman, that gentlemen do not want any more "business" to attend to under the condition existing. They have just as much as they can attend to, in reference to laborers thrown out of employment under the provisions of the Dingley bill and by its operations—as much as any men or set of men would want.

War! They talk of war with Spain. Are there not sometimes conditions which would make war more desirable than peace? The sympathy of the world goes out to suffering Cuba. They have gone to war in self-defense; they are fighting for life; they are fighting for liberty; they are fighting for all that is dear to humanity; and shall we stand idly by, in a time when a country with nearly half its population now in arms, where cruel, devastating war is going on, shall we not offer our aid and help to them in their emergency?

There is no man who has more respect for the opinion and views of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs than I have; yet in reference to matters of this kind there are differences of opinion which men must entertain. In the political organization of the country all should work together; but it is evident that we can not work together in the cause of struggling Cuba, for I think that he, with our distinguished Speaker and the President of the United States, perhaps none of them think it wise to take a forward step in this direction. It is possible they believe that the House, with the Democrats leading—for I think the Republicans are on the run—[laughter] that they believe they can see "the handwriting on the wall." But I can tell them that that handwriting indicates that in the very next elections they will find themselves in the minority in this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] They are not anxious or ready to do anything when the Democrats are for it, but want to reserve all the "pie" for the Republican party.

But, Mr. Chairman, that is a narrow view to take of a case where thousands of people are going down to the grave in the most cruel war that has ever existed on this side of the ocean. Let us, therefore, not hesitate, but take a broad, liberal view of the conditions existing as Americans. And while it is evident that we shall have no opportunity offered us from the Committee on Foreign Affairs to say to these people what the American sentiment of the country would dictate to them, let us, at least, as far as we can on this floor, lay down a rule of action for ourselves, and show, if possible, to the Spanish Government how this island shall be governed, if governed at all, by them, or else let us say now, "As you have demonstrated your inability to govern it, this state of belligerency shall be accorded to them and they shall have an opportunity of becoming free and independent." [Applause.]

They say that they can search our vessels under such circumstances. I have been reading something on the question of international law recently, since this controversy arose. If a man wants to search a vessel, he sends an officer aboard and asks the captain if he is carrying contraband of war; and if so, is it for the Island of Cuba? If not, it is not possible to take possession of it. Let that fact be understood, and when a vessel bears the flag of the United States foreign nations, especially Spain, will be slow to undertake to make such a search.

It is asked what will become of our interests in the event of such a contingency of war with Spain. I tell you that you need not be alarmed about. We will be amply able to take care of it.

Mr. MAHANY. Will the gentleman state what is to become of our interests in the event of such an action as he suggests?

Mr. BERRY. I have just said that you need not feel uneasy about that. You need not be alarmed on that score. It will be taken care of. There has been good blood of your people spilled under Morro Castle in the past, and we have a right on the American Continent to say what shall constitute personal liberty on this continent, and I would have now, in this struggle for liberty on the part of the Cubans, and in the interest of liberty on this continent, the flag that floats over the Speaker's desk to wave over that same Morro Castle, and it will be an honor to all parties and in the interest of manhood, humanity, and in the interest of all the nations of the earth. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the present Congress has been in session seven months, during which time the country has waited with patience and expectancy for the development of the Republican plan to reform the currency. The only utterance on this subject which may be considered in any way official is the bill of the Secretary of the Treasury introduced into this House by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER]. He proposes to retire the greenbacks by issuing interest-bearing bonds; to refund the entire indebtedness of the United States, except the bonds issued during the last Administration, the funded bonds to be payable, principal and interest, in gold; to give to the banks the sole right to issue paper money, and to authorize banks with 50 per cent of their capital stock paid in to issue circulation equal to 75 per cent of the capital, the 25 per cent unsecured by the deposit of bonds to be guaranteed by the Government. The plan is not original, but, read in connection with the testimony of the Secretary before the Committee on Banking and Currency, it possesses at least the merit of frankness.

Mr. Gage's proposition is the culmination of a scheme inaugurated by Mr. McCulloch, also a national banker, over twenty-five years ago. I think I am warranted in saying the bill of the Secretary is most remarkable. His first proposition, to retire the greenbacks, has been the pet scheme of the money power in the United States since 1873, but never before did they have the temerity to fully develop it. It is claimed that the presence of three hundred and forty-six millions of greenbacks in our currency is a constant menace to the business interest of the country, and the Secretary proposes to retire them in order to secure greater confidence; but the plan proposed by him gives to the national banks the sole right to issue paper money, every dollar of which is redeemable in gold. It is said that with the greenbacks in our currency the money gamblers and speculators can gather them up, present them to the Treasury, and demand gold; and by taking from the Treasury its gold supply deplete our gold reserve, create commercial alarm, and unsettle business interest.

If the Secretary is sincere, how will he explain this? The bank notes which he proposes to issue are all redeemable in gold, and the money speculator and gambler can gather up bank notes, present them to the Treasury, and take every dollar of gold from the Federal Treasury, just as they now do with greenbacks. The real purpose of the Secretary is not disclosed in his bill. You may find his object in recommending his plan to Congress on the fifth page of his printed testimony before the committee, in which he says:

> To commit the country more thoroughly to the gold standard, remove as far as possible doubts and fears on that point, and thus strengthen the credit of the United States both at home and abroad.

That is the object of the bill. Many of the Secretary's party associates, just as anxious as he is to rivet for all time upon this country the gold standard, have not the frankness to confess it as he has done. It was not intended that this bill should become a law at this session, nor will it, in my judgment, be reported to the House.

It was introduced as a feeler, and unless too great a storm is raised at this time the bill will be seriously pressed at the next session of Congress. It is an open declaration of war by the advocates of the gold standard to the bimetallic interest of the country. The Republicans, as well as the Democrats, confess there is something radically wrong with the monetary system of this country, and that something must be speedily done to bring relief to our people. Last spring we were told that we would enrich the people by enacting a tariff bill—in my judgment the most infamous ever placed upon the statute book—that that measure would relieve all business depression, start the wheels of commerce, and establish the place of the Republican party in history as the patron saint of American prosperity.

These predictions have fallen to the ground, and now it is proposed to rectify the evils admitted to exist by the most nefarious and outrageous scheme ever seriously proposed to Congress. The fight has been from the beginning and is now not so much a war of opinions between the people of the United States as to what is the correct system of financiering, but it is a struggle upon the part of the national banking interest upon the one side and the great laboring people on the other. We witnessed first the destruction of millions of the people's money. Then came the demonetization of silver, and from that hour until now the fight has been waged between the people and the banks. Secretary Gage, himself a national banker, for the first time boldly proclaims their plan.

The destruction of the greenbacks and the substitution of interest-bearing bonds in their place is of itself sufficient to excite the greatest alarm; but this is a small part of what he proposes. He declares it is the policy of this Administration to destroy all the paper money of the United States, take from the Government its right to issue paper money, and give that right to the national banks. In addition to that, he proposes to refund the bonded debt of the United States into gold bonds at an interest rate of 2½ per cent, extend the time of payment, and make up the difference between the present rate of interest, 4 per cent, and the proposed rate, 2½ per cent, by issuing to the bondholders bonds for the difference. On page 11 of the Secretary's testimony he says:

> This extends the bonds a little—in one case three years, in another case one year—but it does not operate to fund the difference in interest between 2½ per cent and 4 per cent in the bonds running ten years. There is that difference in interest between 4 per cent and 2½ per cent which will be accounted for to the holders of bonds in the shape of bonds, and they will mature in ter years.

And again, on page 13, he says:

I can answer your question comprehensively by saying it will take about ninety millions more of bonds than are now outstanding to refund these bonds.

This proposition in plain English is this: The Secretary proposes to extend the period of payment to the bondholders, to reduce the interest from 4 to 2½ per cent, and add $90,000,000 of unearned interest to the principal debt. I confidently assert there is not an instance on record where the bonds of any State, county, or municipality in this Union were ever funded and the period of payment extended where the interest was not reduced in consideration of the extension of time. But this officer, the head of the Treasury Department of the country, calmly proposes not only to extend the time of payment, but also to increase the debt of the people of this country ninety millions, upon which they will also be required to pay interest.

Evidently, the Secretary has forgotten that during the last Administration the President of the United States, in a message to Congress, said that the bondholders with whom he was dickering would agree to take a less rate of interest, amounting in the aggregate to $16,000,000, if the Congress would make the bonds, principal and interest, payable in gold. This offer was refused. Now the Republican party proposes to make principal and interest payable in gold, as was then attempted, and, in addition thereto, increase the debts of the people ninety millions.

I have, Mr. Chairman, the greatest respect for the great office of Secretary of the Treasury, and would like to have respect for the present occupant of that position, and I have no doubt that the scheme proposed in this measure is considered high-class financiering by some, but in my humble judgment, it is but little short of highway robbery. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The proposition to make the bonds of the United States payable in gold, a suggestion that has been bitterly contested on every hustings in this country, as well as in Congress, since 1870, in the face of the action of the Fifty-fourth Congress, which rejected a similar proposition, is, to put it mildly, most astounding.

It is a prerogative of Government alone to make and declare a medium of exchange. No citizen can compel his neighbor to accept his property in satisfaction of a debt, nor can any community, county, or State. It is so entirely an act of sovereignty that this great prerogative was specifically and exclusively conferred upon Congress by the Constitution. The constitutional right of Congress to authorize any man or corporation to issue money has long been seriously questioned by many of the best thinkers of the country, and all have agreed until recent years that the enlargement of the powers now possessed by the banking interests would be dangerous in the extreme. I have no war to make upon banks.

Properly conducted, banks are good things; but I believe it to be fundamentally wrong to give to any citizen the right to make money and loan it to his neighbors and compel them to pay interest on the loan. This is the province of Government, should be jealously guarded, and never delegated to another. Whether rightly or wrongly, the masses of the people believe, and I believe, that there exists now, and has existed for many years past, a compact between the great holders of money to secure a firmer grip upon the laborers and toilers of the United States. If the right to issue the paper money of this country is given to the banks, they can at will paralyze every industry. They can contract or expand currency at will. They can farm out the products of labor, fix the price of thrift, measure the success of genius, and determine, as in a horoscope, the modicum of success that shall come to each citizen outside their charmed circle. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

A wise and beneficent system of laws equitably enacted and justly enforced guarantees to the frugal, industrious, and patient material prosperity. But what prosperity can come to the man, however hard he may labor, however industrious he may be, however frugal or abstemious, if the price of his toil is to be fixed by another whose interest it is to depress the price of labor and in idleness grow rich off the work of his fellow-man? It is said that the national banks can not and will not contract or expand the currency; that the amount of circulation being fixed by law, they will have no further control over the matter, once their circulation is issued. In answer to that I quote a few figures from the last report of the Comptroller of the Currency:

From the 31st of January, 1888, to the 30th of April, 1888, $15,005,597 of national-bank circulation was retired. This was in three months. In the succeeding three months, from April 30 to July 31, the national-bank circulation was decreased by retirement $15,115,185. During the twelve months beginning January 31, 1888, and ending January 31, 1889, the national-bank currency was decreased by retirement $54,083,691. From January 31, 1896, to January 31, 1897, the circulation of national banks was decreased by retirement $10,244,478. In order to show that the figures quoted by me are not an exception to the rule, I insert a table showing the issue, retirement, increase, and decrease, by quarters, of the national-bank circulation from January 14, 1875, to October 31, 1897:

What more argument is needed to show that it would be unwise, impolitic, and disastrous to trust the money of the people in the hands of such an institution? We may expect to find in national bankers the weaknesses common to mankind. When money is close, interest will be high. Bankers live on interest. Their institutions flourish on the breeding of money. Is it reasonable to suppose that, with the power in their hands to make interest high, they will patriotically refrain from enriching themselves? The great money trust of this country has but one aim in view, one goal to attain, and that is the control of the money of the people.

It is said that "honor fails were commerce long prevails," and while we are a great commercial people, devoted to the promotion of peace, seeking to accomplish our conquest by the arts of industry, ingenuity, and labor, I am almost inclined to believe that honor does fail where commerce long prevails, and I know it will fail if the greatest function of government is farmed out to a selfish corporation. Gentlemen may deny that there is an organized movement in this country to secure enlarged privileges for the national banks, but it exists none the less. There is not a member of this House whose mail is not flooded with pamphlets, books, and magazines urging upon him the adoption of some plan like the one suggested by the Secretary of the Treasury.

A suggestion that the Democratic idea of the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1 is the correct solution of our monetary difficulties is met by ridicule and denunciation. Why should the Government become an unsecured indorser to the extent of 25 per cent of the capital of national banks? Its obligation is as great to one citizen as to another. Are we to expect the people to believe in the honesty, patriotism, or integrity of a man or a party who proposes to give one class of citizens an incalculable advantage over the others? Once before in the history of this country a great battle was fought between the money power, cloaked behind a bank, and the people.

Fortunately for our institutions and for mankind, the unswerving patriotism, the love of republican institutions and the determination to preserve them, which animated the breast of the President, won the battle for the people. The same fight confronts us again. What is the attitude of the great Government officials now? Jackson crushed the bank that was seeking to throttle the rights of the people when he was President. Now we are told by the Secretary of the Treasury that his bill, which proposes to ride booted and spurred over the people of the country, meets the entire approval of the President. Congress alone should coin or make the money of the United States. The Government alone should issue it. No citizen should have aught to do with its manufacture or with its distribution except as the agent of the Government.

I want every citizen in this country to thoroughly understand that the plan proposed by the Secretary of the Treasury is the plan of the President of the United States and of the Republican party. The lines are clearly drawn. The St. Louis platform has been disregarded. The promises made by the Republican party in the last campaign have been knowingly broken, and its policy henceforth is to be to maintain the present gold standard, and, to accomplish that end, give to the banking interest all that they demand and thrust upon them rights never even hoped for. If the national banks are given the enlarged privileges provided for in this bill, it will not result in increasing the circulating medium of the country.

The history of these corporations prove that the tendency has always been to contract rather than enlarge the money supply. In the thirteen Southern States there is a banking capital of $70,481,700. This capital is distributed among 557 banks. Under the law as it now stands, these 557 banks, if the proper amount of bonds were deposited, could issue $63,433,530 of circulation; but as a matter of fact, they have issued only $19,397,465, showing that in the Southern States alone, where there is greater need of money than in any other portion of the Union, the national banks have not availed themselves of the privileges now given them by the law and are short on circulation permitted $44,036,065.

In these same States during the year 1897 only six banks were organized. These six banks have a capital of $1,445,000 and a circulation of only $137,025. During the year ending October 31, 1897, the national banks of the Southern States decreased their circulation by retirement $637,200, and during the same period the national banks of the Union decreased their circulation $16,933,922. None of this decrease of circulation was by failed banks or those going into liquidation, but was the voluntary act of solvent institutions still engaged in the banking business. All admit that we need an increase of money, and during the last year the need of it was especially felt in the Southern and Western States, where we find a voluntary decrease of bank circulation of nearly a million.

The unstable, shifting, and uncertain character of bank notes as money can best be illustrated by a few figures showing the amount of national-bank notes issued and the amount now outstanding. Since the organization of the national banking system there has been issued $2,064,079,225 of bank notes. Of that amount, $1,834,032,860 have been redeemed, canceled, or destroyed, so that of the vast sum of bank notes issued there is outstanding at this time only the comparatively insignificant sum of $230,046,365.

These figures, it seems to me, show conclusively that it would be unwise to intrust the banking corporations of the country with further control of the people's money. We should have a stable and certain as well as an elastic currency. No stability can be expected in our currency system if we intrust it in the hands of the people who expect to profit by the destruction of money. The plan of the Republican party would, in my judgment, be ruinous to the business interest of the country, and the agitation now going on for a change in our monetary system is the immediate result of years of contraction.

The farmers of the United States have learned that it is impossible to market their product at a profit, and from every section of the Union a demand that must be heeded is made for some change that will bring back a sufficient reward for labor to enable the workingmen and the farmers to earn a living by their toil. The plan of the Secretary is not the correct one. Conceding to him the highest motives, admitting that he is animated by the loftiest spirit of patriotism, I still assert that we will never bring relief to the people or permanently settle this great issue until the Government assumes the performance of its legitimate functions and alone makes and circulates the money of the country. What is the remedy?

The Democratic party believes that gold and silver were provided by the Constitution as the only primary money; that they should be coined upon terms of exact equality at the mints, and that the ratio of coinage should be the same as that fixed by law before the money trust secretly destroyed silver in 1873. In our last platform we declared for an immediate resumption of the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, without awaiting the concurrence or consent of any other nation. If this is done, in my judgment, the currency problem of this country will be solved.

I believe that banks should be denied the right to issue money; that the mints of the country should be immediately opened to the coinage of silver; and I am quite confident that if this were done we would see an era of prosperity in this country seldom equaled and never surpassed. The price of money, like the price of corn and wheat, is regulated by supply and demand. All things esteemed by man are measured in money; so when it is scarce a small amount will buy a large amount of property, but as the volume of money increases its purchasing power decreases. Much confusion arises in the minds of some people on this subject, because they measure the value of all articles in money and never measure the value of money in some article.

We say 50 cents will buy a bushel of wheat. This proves wheat is cheap. But if we say a bushel of wheat will only buy 50 cents in money, we will soon see money is very dear. If it were possible to ascertain the relative exchangeable value of each article measured in all other articles, then the general average of this exchange would be the just price of money. If the value of money is regulated by supply and demand, we can at once determine whether the purchasing power of money is great or small if we know the amount in circulation. Another confusing element in this question is the indiscriminate use of the word "money." We say there is so much money in this country, meaning thereby silver, gold, greenbacks, Treasury notes, and bank paper. Under the law as it is now interpreted we have but one money in the United States—gold. Every silver dollar is measured by gold and every paper dollar is redeemable in it. The value of every article bought and sold is measured in gold, although it may be bought with bank notes and sold for silver. So it happens, if a few millions of gold is shipped from New York to Europe, prices decline all over the country, even in those sections where not a dollar in gold circulates among the people.

Labor and the products of labor being measured in gold, the slightest depletion of our gold supply seriously affects every avenue of commerce; apparently without reason, business stagnates, prices fall, labor is unemployed, and the staple products of our country sell below the cost of production. The gold advocate is ever ready with an excuse or explanation—anything to divert the attention of the people from the real cause. We will never have permanent prosperity again until the volume of money is increased sufficiently to transact the business of the country. The gold man says, we do not need much money; that 95 per cent of the money transactions are made with checks and drafts.

What does this prove? Only that we lack money. If the supply of money were increased, more transactions would be for cash and fewer checks and drafts would be used. The prosperity of this country now depends upon the temper of Wall street. Let a panic occur on this thoroughfare in New York to-day, and before to-morrow night banks, manufactories, and mercantile houses will fail from Maine to Georgia, fear seize the business world, and the wheels of commerce stop until the money cormorants squeeze more bonds from the Federal Government or recover their digestion.

The strongest advocate of gold monometallism does not place our gold supply above $650,000,000, which would be about $9.28 per capita for the people of the United States. It will not be denied that $9.28 per capita is insufficient, but, the gold man says, you have hundreds of millions of greenbacks, Treasury notes, and silver dollars. True, but all of these are redeemable in gold, and whoever owns the gold controls all the rest, because every dollar of gold taken out of this country lessens the Government's ability to redeem all money in gold and, to the extent of the gold exported, weakens our financial system. Then what should we do? Increase the base of our redemption money. We can not get gold; then let us have silver. Gold alone being money in the United States, if we give silver the same mintage rights and debt-paying power possessed by gold, it would by increasing the redemption money lessen the purchasing power of gold, or, to state it in another way, raise the price of property.

The ratio of increase in our money should exceed the ratio of increase in our population, because the ingenuity of man, facilities of transportation, and rapid exchange of products have given a marvelous impetus to commerce and largely increased the need and use of money. The yearly addition to the money gold supply of the world is only 4 per cent, according to the Director of the Mint. This fact ought to convince any fair man that it would be unsafe to rely upon gold alone as redemption money. Our money should consist of gold, silver, and paper of equal and interchangeable value.

I would not for an instant advocate a measure that would impair the value or efficiency of a dollar of our money, nor do I intend to give my aid or vote to a system which I believe unduly enhances the purchasing power of gold and grips with a firm hand the labor of mankind.

Another favorite argument of the money trust is that we settle our foreign balance with gold alone, and if we should adopt the free coinage of silver, gold would leave us and our foreign trade be ruined, because other countries will take nothing but gold in payment. This will not do. How did we pay from 1860 to 1870, when we had neither gold nor silver? Yet this period was one of the most prosperous eras of the Republic.

This Government is great enough to establish and maintain its own system of money, and foreigners, knowing our greatness, will accept any kind of money circulating freely among our own people. I will not say every advocate of gold monometallism is prompted by selfish motives, but I do insist that there is a conspiracy almost world-wide to fasten upon the commercial peoples of the world the gold standard. A few centuries ago the laborers of the world were enslaved by mighty barons, backed by armed retainers, but the sweets of liberty becoming known, these tyrants were hurled from power and their tenures destroyed forever; but now a horde of men, equally unscrupulous, seek to control the liberties of the people by methods more dangerous than armed retainers.

Whosoever fixes the price of labor controls mankind. These same men who now denounce silver and deify gold would clamor for the destruction of gold just as readily if it would serve their purpose. Soon after the discovery of gold in California and Australia the money trust of Europe took fright at the marvelous increase of the gold supply of the world and actually did demonetize gold in several European countries. Prof. Francis A. Walker says:

> In June, 1850, Holland demonetized the gold 10-florin piece and the guillaume. Portugal prohibited gold from having current value, with the exception of English sovereigns. Belgium demonetized its gold supply.

An agent of the English gold trust who visited America and Australia reported upon his return to England that in twelve months dustpans would be made of gold. It is the quality and not the quantity of money that interests the gold barons, and they now seek to make gold the financial ark of the covenant, because every corner of the world having been explored, it is known this metal will always be scarce. This country may teem with fruitfulness, the inventive genius of mankind improve, until Pittsburg and New Orleans touch elbows, San Francisco and New York become neighbors, but a vicious financial policy will empty the purse of Fortunatus in the coffers of the few, while millions of toilers eke out a precarious livelihood.

The cohorts of monopoly sing pæans of praise to the golden god, oblivious or indifferent to the great heart of the nation. The citizen who earns his bread by toil is the forgotten man, and laws are made by each succeeding Congress to further enrich the mighty money kings. One-half of the earth is engaged in agriculture. In this country more are employed in farming than any other occupation, yet not one law has been passed by Congress in ten years entirely for the benefit of the farmer. During that time hundreds have been enacted for the manufacturer, importer, banker, and speculator. Our farmers have been blighted as by a mildew. The products of their labor sells below the cost of production, and the profit rightfully belonging to them is garnered by the wheat and cotton gambler of Chicago and New York.

The prosperity of a nation is not in an overflowing public treasury or the increase of its millionaires, but in a just and equitable distribution of its wealth among the great producers of capital. Increase our money until trusts or combines can no longer control it; stop the constantly increasing purchasing power of gold; enact laws which mete out equal justice to each citizen, and content and confidence will return to our people. Laws can not make the slothful labor nor the wasteful frugal, but with the millstone of favoritism and privilege they can destroy the husbandry of business sagacity, blight energy, and ruin the fairest commercial venture. The gold standard benefits the rich and powerful at the expense of the many. I believe the free and unlimited coinage of silver will bring content where we now find despair; give labor a just reward; dot our country with happy homes; establish belief in our institutions, and forever take from the hands of unlawful combinations, trusts, and combines the reins of Government. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

SURVEY OF WATER ROUTE FROM PORT ARTHUR.

Mr. MILLS. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report a joint resolution. Let it be read at length.

The joint resolution (S. R. 90) to provide for an examination and survey of a water route from the northern end of the Port Arthur Ship Canal, at or near Port Arthur, Tex., to deep water in the mouth of the Neches River, and from thence to deep water at the mouth of Sabine River, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War is directed to have an examination made of the Port Arthur Ship Canal and report to Congress as soon as possible as to the propriety of its purchase by the United States and continuing the same to deep water at the mouth of the Neches River, and from thence either along the coast line in Sabine Lake or through the land to deep water at the mouth of Sabine River, and the estimated cost of the work to the Government, and the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as is necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. MILLS. This is a matter of importance, and I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution may be taken up for consideration at the present time.

Mr. HOAR. Let the routine business go through.

Mr. MILLS. It is simply a joint resolution asking for information from the War Department.

Mr. HALE. Let us have the regular order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Reports of committees are the regular order. Under that order the Senator from Texas has reported a joint resolution from the Committee on Commerce, and he asks unanimous consent that it be taken up for present consideration.

Mr. MILLS. It is reported unanimously by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HALE. I think Senators can see how inconvenient it will be if, before the routine business, which everyone is interested in,

Senators come in and ask for the passage of bills. Why not wait until after we get through with the morning business?

Mr. MILLS. The Senator asks why. I will tell him. It is important that we should have this information from the War Department in time for the committee to act upon the subject when the river and harbor bill comes before it. Every moment is of importance.

Mr. HALE. Fifteen minutes can not make much difference.

Mr. MILLS. If I can not get the joint resolution considered now, some other Senator fifteen minutes from now may make the same objection. I ask the Senator from Maine to withdraw his objection. The joint resolution could have been passed by this time.

Mr. HALE. What I am seeking is that the regular order of business shall be disposed of. Everyone comes here and has petitions and memorials and reports and bills to present. The old rule of the Senate was that that order was never interrupted. Fifteen years ago I do not think it was ever asked that bills should be passed the moment that the Journal was read. Senators waited until we first had the routine business, in which everyone is interested, and then they asked for consideration. I think that is a much better way of doing business. I do not want to interpose and make myself disagreeable to the Senator from Texas, but I think he as an old Senator can see how difficult it will be to do business if we have these matters interjected every day.

After this statement I will withdraw my objection. If it is the feeling of the Senate that the regular order in the morning, which is established by the rules for everyone, is to be broken in this way, I can bear it as well as anybody else.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent to the present consideration of the joint resolution which has been read.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3056) authorizing the Shreveport and Red River Valley Railway Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Loggy Bayou, in Louisiana, reported it with amendments.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2801) to provide for the revision and adjustment of the sales of the Otoe and Missouria Reservation lands, in the States of Kansas and Nebraska, and to confirm the titles under said sales, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FRYE. I have another bill which I wish to report, but I will withhold it until the morning business is through, because I wish then to ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. My colleague would take more liberties with me, I am afraid, than with the Senator from Texas. So I withhold the report for the present.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1527) for the establishment of a light-house and fog signal at or near Port Arguello, California, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1745) to indemnify the State of Pennsylvania for money expended in 1864 for militia called into the military service by the governor under the proclamation of the President of June 15, 1863, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1284) to indemnify the State of Pennsylvania for money expended in 1864 for militia called into the military service by the governor under the proclamation of the President of June 15, 1863, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. FAIRBANKS, from the Committee on Claims, submitted a report to accompany the bill (S. 1055) to provide for the payment of the claim of the Western Paving and Supply Company for paving the streets adjacent to the United States post-office and custom-house property and building at Indianapolis, Ind., heretofore reported from that committee.

QUARANTINE STATION AT SHIP ISLAND, MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution reported from the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine on the 17th instant, to report it without amendment and to ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine is hereby directed to investigate and report whether it is advisable that the quarantine station be removed from Ship Island to some other point in the Gulf of Mexico, and if so, what further legislation is necessary for the accomplishment of that purpose; and said committee may report by bill or otherwise.

That said committee shall have power to prosecute its inquiries through a subcommittee, which may sit during the sessions of the Senate at such times and places as may be thought necessary, with power to send for persons and papers, and to employ a stenographer, the expenses of said committee to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. In explanation of the resolution, I desire to state that a subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce will leave this city very soon for the purpose of concluding their investigation of the Mississippi River question, and three members of that subcommittee, who are likewise members of the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine, will be detailed to go to Biloxi for the purpose of pursuing this investigation, taking with them the stenographer and Sergeant-at-Arms, who will accompany the Committee on Commerce upon its investigation. The expenses will be very slight, and it is a very important matter, and the resolution ought to be passed. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

LIGHT-SHIP NEAR CAPE ELIZABETH, ME.

Mr. FRYE. Now, Mr. President, I should like to make a report from the Committee on Commerce and ask for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. There is another order of business.

Mr. FRYE. I know there is another one, but that is liable to lead to debate—it almost always does—and I should like to get the bill through. I am called out of the Chamber.

I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2944) providing for the construction of a light-ship to be located near Cape Elizabeth, Me., to report it without amendment and submit a report thereon. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to construct a light-ship, with fog signal, to be located near Cape Elizabeth, Me., at a cost not to exceed $70,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE. Let the report made in the case be printed and go with the papers to the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, that will be the order.

Mr. HOAR. Is the morning business over?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is not over. The Chair has simply entertained the request of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. HOAR. Is it likely to take any debate?

Mr. FRYE. It is a brief bill.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have it stand over until the routine morning business is concluded, and then I shall make no objection.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the joint resolution (S. R. 81) authorizing the Director of the Geological Survey to prepare a map of Alaska.

PETER VON ESSEN BEQUEST.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was to amend the title so as to read: "An act authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to accept the bequest of the late Peter Von Essen for the use of the public white schools of that portion of said District formerly known as Georgetown, and distribute same among the heirs of Peter Von Essen, deceased."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made in the House to the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust the amendment will be concurred in.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order.

BEET-SUGAR INDUSTRY.

On motion of Mr. LODGE, it was Ordered, That 3,000 copies of Senate Document No. 63, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, being a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture relative to sugar importation, production, and consumption in the United States, be printed for the use of the Senate.

MRS. M. E. ROBERTS.

Mr. ALLEN. I submit a resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate full, explicit, and exact copies of all charges made or filed against Mrs. M. E. Roberts, who was, on the 13th day of May, 1897, removed from her position as clerk in the Pension Bureau, whether said charges be in the form of statements, affidavits, depositions, letters, or in any other form, together with the exact dates of all said charges, statements, affidavits, depositions, letters, or documents, respectively, and the respective dates of their filing.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator from Nebraska ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir; it is simply a resolution calling for information.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a resolution calling for very extraordinary information. I hold, rightfully or wrongfully, that the heads of Departments have absolute power to remove clerks, and if they have not that power they have been deprived in some way of a right that naturally and properly belongs to the heads of Departments. Further than that, we have a Civil Service Commission which assumes the right to review the acts of Cabinet officers to the extent of writing letters to them concerning the transfer and dismissal of clerks, and demanding that they shall do certain things. It strikes me that if Congress takes up a matter of this kind and calls upon Cabinet officers to communicate to the Senate why they have reduced or removed a clerk, we will be transcending any action that has ever been taken in matters of that kind.

Of course I shall be happy to hear the Senator from Nebraska in support of his resolution, but I shall feel bound, after he makes his statement, to ask that the resolution may go over one day, so that I can look into this question and satisfy myself whether it is desirable or proper that the time of Congress should be occupied in settling disputes between Cabinet officers and clerks. It is a new departure, and I think it is business that the Senate of the United States ought not to engage in.

Mr. HOAR. Let the resolution go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the resolution will lie over.

Mr. ALLEN. I was in hopes that the Senator from Massachusetts would permit me to have read in support of the resolution a little communication I have here.

Mr. HOAR. Certainly, if the Senator wants to proceed. I supposed, as the Senator from New Hampshire intimated that he should compel the resolution to go over, that it would be more agreeable to the Senator from Nebraska to make his remarks when the resolution was to be voted upon. I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not object to its going over.

Mr. HOAR. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. I qualified my statement by saying that if the Senator from Nebraska wished to make any statement in answer to anything I said he ought to have that privilege.

Mr. ALLEN. I would simply like to have the Senator from New Hampshire devote about five minutes to listening to the petition of this lady——

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall be happy to do so.

Mr. ALLEN. And the correspondence between her and the Secretary of the Interior. I ask to make it a part of my remarks and that the Secretary read it. I am satisfied if the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from New Hampshire will listen carefully to the reading of the paper—it is short—they will consent to the passage of the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I have withdrawn the objection as far as I am concerned.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask that the Secretary read what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read at the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 1, 1897.

To the President:

I know how your hours are burdened with the consideration of weighty and momentous subjects that affect the welfare and happiness of the people of this great nation. Therefore I hesitate to call your attention to a matter that at first blush may appear to be but a personal grievance of a disappointed and unreasonable woman. However, after giving the subject much prayerful consideration——

Mr. SEWELL. I desire to know to whom the communication is addressed.

Mr. ALLEN. I will read it myself if the Senator from New Jersey objects.

Mr. SEWELL. I do not object. I want to know to whom it is addressed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is addressed to the President.

Mr. SEWELL. I object to a communication addressed to the President being read in the Senate without being referred to the Senate by him.

Mr. ALLEN. I could not hear the remark of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SEWELL. I make the point that the time of the Senate should not be taken up by the reading of a communication to the President unless it comes from the Executive.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask the Secretary to send me the document.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from Nebraska is having it read as a part of his remarks.

Mr. SEWELL. The Senator can do that if he wishes.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from New Jersey can make his objection to my reading it if he desires. I offer it as a part of my remarks. It is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 1, 1897.

To the President:

I know how your hours are burdened with the consideration of weighty and momentous subjects that affect the welfare and happiness of the people of this great nation. Therefore I hesitate to call your attention to a matter that at first blush may appear to be but a personal grievance of a disappointed and unreasonable woman. However, after giving the subject much prayerful consideration, I am convinced that it is my duty to direct your attention to the peculiar circumstances attending my dismissal as clerk in the employ of the Pension Bureau, to the end that justice may be vindicated and the sincerity of your oft-repeated expressions of a love and devotion to fair play may be given another opportunity for exemplification.

I am the widow of a Union soldier. My husband, Edward Roberts, was a member of the Seventh Kentucky Cavalry, a regiment distinguished for the severity of the hardships of its service as well as for the conspicuous bravery of the men who composed it. In the judgment of all who knew him, before and after his enlistment, my husband's death was traceable to disease contracted while in the service of his country. At his death, at the suggestion of friends, I came to Washington, accompanied by my son, then a child but a few months old. Through the cooperation of people who had been my neighbors at home in Kentucky, I secured employment in the Department of the Interior.

This was during the Administration of President Arthur; and up to May last, when I was summarily dismissed for "misconduct," I continued to be borne on the rolls of that Department. And up to this hour I have never been informed of the character of the charges upon which my dismissal for "misconduct" was based, although I have with decorum, yet, however, with persistency, asked that I be furnished with a copy of the accusations. These requests have invariably been met either with evasion or absolute refusal.

Report has reached me unofficially—the common talk of the Pension Bureau—that these charges in some way affect my moral character, and the belief is general among my former associates that I was dismissed because of some shocking moral delinquency. In a word, this action of the Commissioner of Pensions has effectually branded me in the community as a vile and depraved creature, unworthy to be the companion and associate of the self-respecting and the virtuous. The responsibility imposed upon those who occupy high public offices for circumspection when dealing with the reputations of their subordinates was never more forcibly exemplified than in my case. "The discourses of the vulgar are soon forgot; they expire on coming into the world; but the words of the great never fall in vain; and the public is always a faithful echo, either to the praises they bestow or to the censure they allow themselves to utter."

My dismissal was practically summary. I was given no opportunity to defend myself against the secret plottings of those who sought to destroy me through motives, as I believe, of envy and malice; and I was thus, in an instant and without the slightest warning, robbed of my good name, and have been compelled to suffer the reproaches and contumely of those who had heretofore looked upon me with respect. I stand, as no woman ought to stand, the mark for public insult, degraded in reputation and tortured in mind. As a result my health has been greatly and permanently impaired. But health is but a trifle in comparison to the covert blow (and all the more wicked and disastrous because it was covert) that was here aimed at my reputation. I am not conscious of ever having, at any period of my life, seriously deviated from the paths of womanly decorum and rectitude. I have always endeavored to so regulate my conduct as not to offend against the canons of decency and reputable conduct; but notwithstanding all this I have not escaped the shafts of calumny.

During the many years I was in the employ of the Pension Bureau it was my aim to perform my duties in a conscientious and intelligent manner, and in affirmation of this the record will show that I lived up to the standard I had set for myself when I entered the service of the Government. I was never false to a duty.

My dismissal, under the circumstances, is to me something incomprehensible. The refusal to furnish me with a copy of the charges, the evasions and tergiversations of those in authority who were used to bring about my dismissal, the studied concealment of the name of my accusers, the arrogant and overbearing manner with which I was treated by the Commissioner of Pensions when I appealed to him to give me an opportunity to defend myself, all go to make up a case of mingled cruelty and injustice that has no parallel in the history of the administration of the civil affairs of the Government.

I have nothing to conceal; I am not afraid of the truth, and I court a full and open investigation, and I am surprised that I am not met in this spirit by those whom fortune and the generosity of the American people have placed temporarily in positions of trust and exalted dignity and power. They sit upon the cushion of advantage, while I am but a humble creature, a woman in the evening life.

But, humble as I am, I have not forgotten that I am the widow of a man who sacrificed his life in defending the flag of his country, nor have I forgotten that, humble as I may be, I am still the mother of this dead hero's son, and, for the sake of the memory of the one and for the sacred heritage of the other, I ask that the truth be given an opportunity to defend itself against malice and envy.

The ear of power was readily loaned to become the receptacle for the nauseous and offensive outpourings of mendacity. Truth stands buffeted by arrogance in the chilly anteroom of the haughty. And this presents forcibly to the mind one of the anomalies of our poor, weak natures; some of us are prone to believe evil rather than good of our fellows. While we all publicly and at times effusively acknowledge that "truth is the highest thing that a man may keep," we nevertheless sometimes overlook its obligations in our dealings with one another.

This communication, if noticed at all, and if it follows the usual course, will be referred to the Secretary of the Interior and by him transmitted to the Commissioner of Pensions. And thus I will have moved in a circle and again will be confronted by the same source from which I have received only brutal contempt—why, I know not. Is there any reason to believe that the Commissioner of Pensions will grant me a full and impartial hearing upon the absolute merits of the case any more readily now than he did when, without hearing me or giving me an opportunity to be heard, he caused me to be dismissed for "misconduct"?

What was then done in a covert manner will be by those who, in the first instance, shrouded the act in darkness, be still further shrouded in mystery and mystification. But I have faith in your high sense of honor, and I am confident that you will not permit craft to perpetuate a wrong; and I know you will not allow the widow of a Union soldier to be struck down without an opportunity given to defend herself. Your reputation is that of a man trained to the nicest sense of honor; of a man of the truest and noblest sort of pride, that of never doing or suffering a mean action. And it is for you to say whether such an act of such transcendent cruelty and injustice as here recounted is to stalk forth for public imitation.

I am, with the most profound respect, your obedient servant,

M. E. ROBERTS.

This communication is accompanied by the correspondence between the Pension Bureau, the Secretary of the Interior, and this lady. I may state that I do not know who this lady is, I have never seen her, and I know nothing about her.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLEN. Let me read this.

Mr. GALLINGER. The correspondence?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir; the correspondence. It is as follows:

CORRESPONDENCE.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, May 11, 1897.

Mrs. MARTHA E. ROBERTS.

MADAM: On the recommendation of the Commissioner, your services as a clerk, class 1, in the Pension Office, are hereby dispensed with from and after May 13, 1897.

Respectfully,

C. N. BLISS, Secretary.

(Through the Commissioner of Pensions.)

2.

209 NEW JERSEY AVENUE,
Washington, D. C., May 17, 1897.

SIR: I dislike to trouble you, but I am in great distress, the result of an act which I believe, on investigation, will be found to be a cruel wrong. Some one has been imposed upon. Who I can not say. But there has been a blunder somewhere.

After years and years of faithful and conscientious service in the employ of the Government, I was, on Monday last, summarily dismissed from the Pension Office for "cause," the character of which I was unable to ascertain, though I learn from others that "misconduct" affecting my moral character is alleged. Oh, how cruel! And I, too, the widow of a man who served four years in the Union Army, and whose death was hastened by the privations and the sufferings sustained by him in defending the nation's honor and its flag. He was a private, it is true, but he did his duty—the most distinguished general did no more. And to think that this blow comes from those who stood before the country as the special friends of the soldier, his widow, and his orphans. Hence, I feel as though "I was wounded in the house of my friends." I stand ready to meet all charges.

A woman's reputation was at one time considered sacred among all honorable men—the dearest part of all men's honor. I am utterly crushed when I contemplate the cruelty of this blow. I ask for an opportunity to vindicate myself. I know you by reputation to be a gentleman incapable of doing an intentional wrong, therefore I entreat you to accord me a hearing. The love of "fair play" so peculiarly characteristic of our race should at least accord to a woman the same privilege to defend her good name as is afforded the meanest and most degraded of malefactors charged with some petty offense against society. Certainly a woman's reputation should not be destroyed without giving her an opportunity to present a word in defense of her good name. "Truth is always straightforward," and never at any time suffered by boldly standing forth in the sunlight of justice and fair play. And your reputation is that of a man who is a lover of both justice and fair play. And, believing you to be such a man, I appeal to your every instinct of honor and justice to give me a hearing, to the end that the truth may be vindicated. It is not what is said, but rather what is proved that carries weight; and I know that an impartial hearing will demonstrate that nothing whatsoever can be proved against my moral character. In conclusion, let me urge that "justice delayed is justice denied."

Very respectfully,
M. E. ROBERTS,
Late Clerk Class 1, Pension Bureau.

Hon. CORNELIUS N. BLISS,
Secretary of the Interior.

Here is the next in the order of correspondence:

3.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, May 21, 1897.

DEAR MADAM: I am directed by the Secretary to acknowledge receipt of your communication under date of the 17th instant, and to inform you that he will accord you a hearing any day next week, except Monday, Tuesday, and Friday, between the hours of 11 and 2.

Very respectfully,
A. C. TONER,
Confidential Clerk.

Mrs. M. E. ROBERTS,
209 New Jersey Avenue, Washington, D. C.

Now, says Mrs. Roberts in her petition:

This "hearing" that was granted me by the Secretary of the Interior consisted solely and absolutely in asking the question, "Now, Mrs. Roberts, what have you got to say?"

This is a lesson in civil service, Mr. President—

No charges were read, nor was I advised in any way the character of the charges. So, when this question was asked me, I was amazed and bewildered. I suggested, however, that I could not say anything until advised of what I was accused; that still being in utter ignorance of what I was called upon to meet, I was powerless to say anything in exculpation of myself. And still I was refused the charges. This brought the so-called hearing to a close.

After leaving the Department at the termination of this "hearing," as it was called, I addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Interior, in which I said that the result of that day's proceedings had made what had been a mystery still more mysterious, and I again appealed to him to inform me what the charges consisted of. But I was still refused the charges.

Subsequently I again wrote to the Secretary of the Interior, communicating to him some information that had reached me from an unofficial source that the accusations had emanated from some person in the Pension Bureau who was being used by a woman who had sworn to ruin me. To this I received the following response:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, June 9, 1897.

MADAM: In further reply to your favor of the 6th instant, I have made very careful investigation of the matters referred to by you, and fail to find that such charges as you say were made against you emanated in any degree from this Department or from any one employed in it. Having granted you a hearing, I was, of course, obliged to listen to whatever was said in your case, but I was entirely unprepared to find your friends making a defense in the line which was made.

Which I suppose was in the newspapers; I do not know—

I do not see that I can consider your case in that light. I can understand that the matter is very embarrassing for you, coming just after your being relieved from duty in the Pension Office, and I should be very glad if I could see my way to restore you to office, considering the circumstances and the statements made; but the place you had has been filled, and the Commissioner has no vacancy in which he can place you at present.

Evidently the Secretary of the Interior had found out that this lady had been wrongfully accused—

It is possible that a little later we may be able to find a place for you in some of the bureaus, in which case we will notify you at once.

Yours, truly,
C. N. BLISS, Secretary.

Mrs. M. E. ROBERTS,
209 New Jersey Avenue, Washington, D. C.

5.

209 NEW JERSEY AVENUE NW.,
Washington, D. C., June 11, 1897.

SIR: I am in receipt of your favor of the 9th instant. I have read it and I have reread it a hundred times, but so far I have been unable to comprehend its purport. Perhaps the fault is mine. If this be so, then my inability to grasp what you mean is due to a mental imperfection of mine, and not because you deal in ambiguous and equivocal terms. I have submitted the letter to others, and they, too, fail to comprehend it. Probably they are as dull as I am.
